LeMars, Ia., July 30.—Joseph Welter, working on a farm near Remsen, while getting down from a hay stack, slipped and was impaled on a pitchfork, which penetrated into his body a depth of eight inches. He is in a hospital here in a serious condition.

LOGAN—Because of his youthful years, excellent previous record, request of the parties who lost the horse, the statement that the horse was taken to ride to Missouri Valley and for no other purpose, Elvin Bishop, the 15-year-old lad who rode off a horse from Monsamin Thursday night and was later apprehended through the efforts of Deputy Sheriff G. W. Atkins and brought to Logan, was ordered released here Monday.

LE MARS—Henry Kipp, a wealthy land owner at Remsen, Ia., and Geddes, S. D., died at a hospital here following an operation. He was rushed to the hospital at midnight and placed on the operating table. He was suffering from a complication of diseases. He was 46 years old, and leaves a widow and four children.

LE MARS—John Kounkel, aged 72, died at his farm, south of town. He had been an invalid for years. He settled here 25 years ago. He leaves a widow, four sons and two daughters. The funeral will be held today at St. Joseph's church in this city.

DUBUQUE—The body of an unknown man was found this morning badly mutilated on a sidetrack in the lower end of the Illinois Central yards. He evidently crawled under the cars and went to sleep. The victim was about 70 years of age and over six feet in height.

IOWA CITY—Rev. Father Francis Ward, head of St. Patrick's parish, died at his parsonage. Father Ward was stricken with apoplexy a week ago Monday while conducting a funeral, and he never fully rallied.

KAISER TO ENTER CITY IN TRIUMP

GREAT STRUGGLE IN WEST IS NOW ANTICIPA

Believed Germanic Hosts Will Now Be Hurled Against French, English and Italians In an Effort Finally to Reach Calais and Perhaps Paris—British Public Apparently Oblivious to Situation Which Lloyd-George Characterizes as "Serious Not Perilous"—Praise Berlin Strategy.

London, July 30.—Warsaw, the third city of Russia and the [illegible] for which the German armies in the east have been striving since October, is at last in the throes of abandonment.

Germans in overwhelming numbers are at the gates of the Polish capital and dispatches both from the city itself and from Petrograd say that further resistance would be unwise.

Discounted not only through France and Great Britain but in Russia itself, the fall of the city is expected hourly and the problem now is to move the Russian armies intact, threatened [illegible] as they are by the enemy from the north where the German forces are [illegible] railway from Warsaw to Petrograd. This latter menace, the Petrograd press admits, is imminent and the hope in the allied countries is now not for the safety of Warsaw but for the continued cohesion of the Russian army.

The Warsaw postoffice already has been shifted to some point to the eastward, the populace have been warned to remain calm, and presumably for days Russian troops have been stripping the city of everything of military value.

German aviators are hovering over the city and, according to German advices, plans have been completed for the triumphal entrance of the German emperor accompanied by his escort.

May Strike West Soon.

With Warsaw captured, whether or not it proves a conquest of lasting strategic value, a great wave of enthusiasm will sweep over Germany and Austria and it is predicted the armies of the central powers will then seek to force a period of trench warfare in the east, menwhile throwing a great weight of men and guns to the west, with the idea of resuming the battering towards Calais, and, perhaps, toward Paris.

The Times' military correspondent, in an article published today, says:

"At present the great three months' operation against Russia, which was planned by the German chief of staff, General Erich Von Falkenhayn, is the most aspiring, and, in some ways, the most brilliant piece of strategy the war has produced.

"In May, when Von Falkenhayn set going the columns for the reconquest of Galicia, his aim was to place the German armies in the south in such a favorable position, with regard to Poland, that an enveloping attack upon the Russian central and northern armies could ultimately take place under conditions promising success.

Follow Japanese Plan.

"This campaign in the south was efficiently carried out, clearing the way for a decisive operation in the north. The mechanism of this latter operation was modeled upon the Japanese Mukden model not a general simultaneous attack, but a succession of attacks, of which Field Marshal Mackensen's move [illegible] a long [illegible] believed to be the most important.

"How far the Grand Duke [illegible] was deceived by the artistic [illegible] to attract Russian attention [illegible] directions, we do not know, but [illegible] tack north of the Niemen and [illegible] itself as most dangerous. It [illegible] cleverly and unobtrusively [illegible] It comes when the Russian [illegible] a large extent, have been [illegible] it is free to swing with a [illegible] of cavalry on its left. If not [illegible] checked it will clear a passage [illegible] Niemen for the German [illegible] it will march on Vilna and [illegible] throw itself across the [illegible] Russian retreat. It is the most [illegible] gerous move made against the [illegible] sians since the war began."

In the west there has been [illegible] worthy of note to break the [illegible] of mining and bombing from the [illegible] sea to the Swiss frontier.

Britain Little Impressed.

The British public is so little impressed with the events in the east that David Lloyd-George, minister of munitions, in a speech apparently thought it necessary to [illegible] home the gravity of the situation. [illegible] minds of those inclined to be optimistic, reminding them that reverses in Russia would mean increased pressure on the western line, summed up his opinion with the admonition that "The situation is serious, if not perilous."

Warsaw, Once Capital of Poles, Third City in Domain of C[illegible]

Warsaw is the greatest railroad center of the Russian empire, the greatest manufacturing city, and the most important distributing point. Its machinery and chemicals, its textiles and iron ware, its pianos and leather goods, silver plate and carriages are famed throughout eastern Europe. The Vistula, here nearly half a mile broad, is navigable for large river boats for hundreds of miles above it; as from the city to the sea, and its water borne commerce has made it possible for Warsaw to become a real competitor of the great industrial cities of Silesia for the trade of the eastern provinces of the German empire. In German hands it may prove as valuable as Liege with its armament and ammunition factories or as the northern tier of French departments, with their coal and iron deposits, now in the kaiser's hands.

Originally the seat of the dukes of Masovia, for nearly 200 years Warsaw was the capital of the Polish republic, succeeding Cracow in 1609, when Swedish influence began to be dominant in the Polish court. It thrived amazingly, although its possession was continually disputed by the Swedes, the Brandenburgers (Prussians), Russians and Austrians. The Swedes captured it in 1655 and lost it to the Poles the next year. In 1657 Sweden held it again, this time for seven years, but never was the land free from the curse of war. Augustus II, elector of Saxony and elective king of Poland (1697-1733) impoverished his two kingdoms to embellish and adorn his new capital and his successor, Augustus III, continued the beautification of the city. Throughout the Eighteenth century Warsaw's was the most brilliant court in Europe, save that at Versailles, and its university and its conservatory of music were world famed.

Partition of Poland.

In 1764 Russian troops first occupied the city to assure the election to the Polish throne of Stanislau Poniatowski, paramour of the Empress Catherine. It was the preliminary to the first partition of Poland nine years later. In 1794 the Russians took it again by storm, and there was bloody massacree in the Praga, the suburb on the right bank of the Vistula. The next year, in the third partition, Warsaw was given to Prussia. In 1806 French troops under Napoleon occupied the city and the conqueror set up his grand duchy of Warsaw as a promise of independence to Poles he hoped to lure into his battalions. In 1809 the Austrians took the city, but were driven out after Wagram. Since February, 1813, when Napoleon in the snows of the interior, poured westward to aid in crushing the first empire at Leipzig, the czar has held Warsaw for his own [illegible] from November, 1830, until [illegible] 1831, have the freedom [illegible] been able to call the city the Russian general, Paskevitch, [illegible] ried it by storm September [illegible] gave the city over to his [illegible] troops, and the bloodshed was [illegible] ing.

Scenes of Bloodshed.

Deportations, executions and confiscations of property followed on a grand scale and not until [illegible] martial law withdrawn. There [illegible] saw similar uprisings in the capital and the Russian [illegible] felt compelled to use the most [illegible] measures to crush the clergy, [illegible] ed nobility and the turbulent [illegible] and educated classes. Scientific [illegible] and high schools were closed, [illegible] teries and nunneries forcibly [illegible] and hundreds of Russian officials [illegible] in to take the places of the [illegible]

But the change brought [illegible] prosperity. Cracow grew [illegible] Austrian rule. The Polish [illegible] by Frederick the Great never [illegible] under the "Grmanization" [illegible] his successor. Poland's high [illegible] bility had ever been its bane, [illegible] exterminated the aristocrats [illegible] and the Polish common folk, [illegible] litical liberty but freed from [illegible] tions to the owners of the soil, [illegible] chance for advancement in [illegible] and commerce. Warsaw is [illegible] despite its Russian governor [illegible] and Russian army corps. It is [illegible] tropolis of Russian Poland, [illegible] 800,000 inhabitants, magnificent [illegible] proud alike of its glorious past, [illegible] its factories, its wharves, its [illegible] pal ownership of public utilities, [illegible] its wonderful park system. [illegible] of its railroads it is the key [illegible] sia's interior. In Germany's [illegible] may be to the czar what [illegible] called Metz to France—"the [illegible] the heart."

After his wife had said farewell shortly after midnight Becker maintained a casual conversation with Deputy Warden Johnson who sat beside the screen in front of his cell. Sometimes he smoked cigars after which he would let his head fall upon his hand and gaze reflectively at the concrete floor for minutes at a time. Dawn found him seated on the edge of his cot carefully pinning a photograph of his wife on his white shirt just over his heart. Then as if he desired to have her all to himself Becker put on a thin black alpaca coat which he tightly buttoned. The photograph was not seen by the witnesses until the prison physician opened his coat as he sat in the death chair.

Killed Before Negro.

Becker was put to death by the state executioner whose name is unknown to the public. This man succeeded State Electrician Davis and he said he would not take the job unless his name was kept secret. He lives in a little town upstate and went about his work briskly.

WHERE GERMANS WILL ESTABLISH GOVERNMENT IN CITY OF WARSAW

Cracow is the center of Polish culture, the shrine at which the Polish nationalist worships the vanished glories of his race, but Warsaw is the center of Polish life. Cracow dreams of splendors, hazy in the past. Warsaw is the third city in the czar's realm, the most important commercially and industrially from every standpoint.

CHICAGO CREDITS 'WHITEWASH' TALK

Chicago, July 30.—Secretary Redfield, in commenting on the fear expressed by local officials that the inquiry into the Eastland disaster which he is conducting will not be thorough and impartial, said:

"This inquiry has just begun. Will until the end be a farming comparisons."

Chicago, July 31.—Indictments against persons directly or indirectly connected with the causes of the Eastland disaster even federal officials, despite questions of jurisdiction, may be returned before night by the Cook county grand jury State's Attorney Hoyne intimated today. Meanwhile, gossip about possible government whitewash of federal inspection service officials in the investigation by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, caused Coroner Hoffman to request divers and experts to keep check on the government divers reported coming from Washington to investigate for the secretary.

The federal grand jury empaneled by Judge Landis today began the examination of witnesses and under orders a United States marshal seized the vessel.

Thompson on the Job.

Mayor Thompson, who is closely watching the inquiry into the Eastland disaster being conducted by Secretary Redfield, said today:

"I don't want to criticise now, but if the results at the finish show that the investigation has been a farce, I will start something. They will have a good deal of trouble proving to me that everything on this ship was o. k. and that she just turned over on her own accord. You can't tell me that she was not known to be a dangerous vessel and that a great many seagoing men and government officials are learning for the first time now that she wasn't a stable and safe boat.

"There isn't a yachtsman on the lake but knows that the Eastland was a dangerous, cranky boat, built for speed at the sacrifice of stability.

"I would like to ask one question, and that is, 'Why did this accident occur?' If all these investigations don't answer that, I'll find out myself."

Capt. Henry Pedersen, of the Eastland, declared in an interview at the county jail that he would make a fight to prove himself innocent.

"The responsibility is not mine," he said. "I often noticed the boat list, but it never was anything serious, and I believed the engineer knew his duties and business. I had certain duties to perform and my power was limited to those I carried out orders to the best of my ability."

City officials today started an investigation of every excursion and passenger vessel plying the lake out of Chicago. The work is being done by a subcommittee of the city council in conjunction with the engineering bureau.

Work of raising the steamer Eastland began today. The big vessel had been encircled with heavy cables. Large pontoons were being forced under her bow and stern.

Meantime launches dragged the river and 10 divers continued their search for bodies of victims. The body of a woman was taken from a cabin of the boat early in the day.

This morning's figures on the loss of life showed:

Total, 1,071.

COMMITTEE TAKES OVER HAITI CITY

Public Safety Organization In Charge of Port Au Prince —Inhabitants Are Disarmed.

Washington, July 31.—Secretary Lansing announced today that a committee of public safety, organized in Port Au Prince, Haiti, has taken charge of the capital and is conducting the de facto government. After a conference with American naval officers and the American charge d'affairs, the committee decided upon disarmament of the city, which began yesterday.

A brief report from Admiral Caperton said he had about 400 men on shore patroling the town, in command of Capt. E. L. Beach, who was having no difficulty maintaining order. The gunboat Nashville was ordered from San Domingo to Cape Haitien today.

MARINES TO HAITI.

Philadelphia, July 30.—The battleship Connecticut, with 420 marines aboard, will leave the Philadelphia navy yard tomorrow for Haiti. Stores are being put on the vessel and tonight the marines will go aboard.

SOCIALISTS LOYALLY VOTE FOR WAR BUDGET

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville) July 30.—A dispatch from Stuttgart to the Overseas News agency says that the Wurttemburg diet closed yesterday after passing the budget which was voted for by all the socialists except three members of a new faction.

The socialists declared that "interior and political differences must disappear so long as the fatherland is threatened by overwhelming exterior forces," and that the socialist view in the country, emphasized to the whole world the ardent wish that the German people in this fateful struggle are united.

MAY ISSUE BONDS TO IMPROVE ARMY

Treasury Heads Say Proposed Military Improvements Can Be Financed No Other Way.

Washington, July 31.—To carry through the defense plans now under consideration by the president, the secretary of the navy and the secretary of war, it will be necessary for the government to resort to a bond issue. This is the verdict of officials of the treasury department.

In this way only, it is said, can enough money be provided to carry out the plans that are being formulated. At the same time it is expected that by resorting to a bond issue this winter for defense, the treasury will in a manner be able to hide the normal needs of the treasury by placing some of the normal expenditures among those to be taken care of with the money derived from the bond issue.

At the present time the treasury has a net balance of $65,793,000. In addition, the treasury has written off among its liabilities a total of $60,988,000, which has been deposited to the credit of the disbursing officers' balance. So, as an actual fact, the treasury has a cash fund of more than $125,000,000 from which it can draw its normal needs. The ordinary demands, however, being made on this fund are in excess of the ordinary revenues of the government and, therefore, a net balance is greatly needed. Treasury officials said today they believe there is sufficient money in the treasury now to carry the government through until the end of the calendar year, providing only ordinary demands are met.

KANSAS IS DELUGED; TRAINS ARE STALLED

Topeka, Kan., July 30.—Heavy rains were general over Kansas early today, and as a result railroads were experiencing difficulty in several sections.

Rains were heaviest at Manhattan, where 3.34 inches were reported. The Kansas river at Wamego rose 3.2 feet during the night.

Two and one-half inches of rain fell at Atchison. Small streams were swollen and the Missouri river was rising again. Missouri Pacific traffic was delayed by a washout below Atchison.

COPPER SUPPLY LARGER.

London, July 30.—Trading in copper has become rather hesitating since the publication of the European visible supply figures on July 15, which stood at 39,669 tons, or an increase of 1,628 tons since June 30.

ROCK ISLAND PUT INTO BANKRUPTCY

New York, July 31.—The financial pyramid of three railroad companies, organized by Daniel G. Reid and William H. Moore and their associates, in 1902 to control the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway, had virtually toppled over, today, when it was announced that the Rock Island company had been placed in the hands of a receiver. The Rock Island company, incorporated in New Jersey with $150,000,000 capital stock, was a holding company, organized to take over control of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway, the operating company.

This it did, through organization of an intermediary company—the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad company. The operating company already was in the hands of a receiver and the intermediary company defaulted its bonds last year.

Chauncey G. Parker, of Newark, N. J., was yesterday appointed receiver of the Rock Island company upon application of John J. Quinlan, president of the company, who alleged the company had overdue obligations, amounting to $38,348, with no funds to meet them.

The stock of the Rock Island company, which once sold at $81 a share, has been selling recently at less than $1 per share.

ALLIES HOPEFUL OF RUMANIAN SUPPORT

Tightening of Customs Laws Indicates Defiance to German Threat.

Paris, July 30.—Diplomats here believe negotiations for Rumania's entry into the war on the side of the allies are proceeding satisfactorily, following confirmation of a report that its frontier officials have been ordered to examine thoroughly all freight cars owned by Austria, Germany or Turkey to prevent passage through Rumanian territory of munitions and arms. Carloads of beer, barrels packed in ice, were found to contain munitions. Experienced customs officials from the allied nations will aid Rumanians in foiling this traffic for which every device known to modern smugglers is being used.

WOMEN WEAR OUT BY "SHOWING OFF"

By Edna K. Wooley, in the Kansas City Star.

A busy clubwomen, a woman doctor, a business woman, and a schoolma'am, ranging in their ages from 25 to 45, happened to come together late one afternoon in the room of a sweet old soul who has been a shut-in, and bed-ridden, for many years.

The old lady, propped among her pillows, looked from one tired face to another, while each of her visitors told how they had hurried in their duties in order to spend a little time with her. She listened sympathetically, and when they had finished, she began in the mildest of tones to read them a little lecture.

"I want you should look at me," she said. "I want you should remember how you have seen me all these years. And I want you should go back a great many years with me now and take a lesson from my life.

"You see me a helpless old woman here, and I should be dead now but for my dear children, who carry me on their hands, as it were. But if I had only known long ago how to take care of myself, I would be on my feet now, active and useful, and glad to be living.

"Nobody thought there was any limit to what a woman should do in my day. Our parents started us to work when we were mere babies. When I see my little granddaughter come in from her outdoors play, I think how much better things are now for the little girls. Oh, how we girls had to work! And so much of it was indoor work.

"How well I remember, when I was 13 years old, one of our neighbor families was taken down with typhoid fever. Five were sick at one time. Neighbors helped each other out in those days. I was only 13, but I had to do my share, and I was sent over there to do all the housework and all the washing for that family. I was there three weeks, and when I came home I was sick. My parents were getting ready to go on a long visit, and as they thought I wasn't really sick, they went and left me home with my sister. The next day I was in bed with pleurisy and, though I got well of that in time, somehow I never really seemed to get real strong again.

"I wasn't taught how to save myself, and I thought it was my duty to never spare my own strength. I married young and went to my husband's farm, where a woman's burdens were even worse, for then the children came—quickly. I can't tell you—I just can't tell you—how I worked. And nobody ever told me different or warned me what I would come to. I saw wrecks of women all around in the farm homes, but I didn't take it to myself.

"So I want you should look at me and take me for an example. I used to think city women wouldn't come to what country women came to. But city women expect too much of themselves, too. Every time I see your faces they look more tired, and though your voices are always kind in this room, I feel they're growing sharper underneath, and when you speak of your work it's always about the hurry of it. You know so much more than the women of my time knew, and you ought to know that women can't stand too much."

"But, dear lady," spoke the business woman, "We're so driven. We must keep up the pace, or somebody pushes us aside."

"Driven," repeated the clubwoman, "that's the word. We simply can't stop."

"There never seemed to be so many sick people before," said the doctor, whose eyes were heavy lidded from sleepless nights spent beside her patients.

"And children never seemed so hard to teach," sighed the schoolma'am, "and never before did there seem so much that had to be taught to them."

"I want you should take me for an example," repeated the "shut-in," patiently in her mild voice. "I want you should think about these things now, instead of when you're helpless and worn out before your time. Just take life a little easier, even if you can't show off so much. We all want to show off in something. That's what drives us. Take my word for it. I have had time to think."

"HOW LONG DOES LOVE LAST?"

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"E'en in the happiest choice, where fav'ring heaven
Has equal love and easy fortune given.
Think not, the husband gained, that all is done;
The prize of happiness must still be won.
Oft the careless find it to their cost."
"The lover in the husband may be lost."

There are people, and supposedly people of good sense at that, who believe that love is a plant, which is indestructible; that you can slight it or nurture it, fondle or abuse it, but nothing can kill it.

There never was a greater mistake. Love is only strong as it is fed and coddled. It can be made to grow wings or it can be hoofed or horned, according to the atmosphere in which it lives. There never was a daintier plant than love. It is like the down on the harebell. One rude jar may scatter it to the four winds of the earth. Love depends upon kindness, sympathy and appreciation. It is impossible for the wife to keep on loving the husband who is rude in words, brutal in action, tantilizing, stingy. Disgust for the husband who makes a household drudge and slave of her can in time kill the most devoted love in the heart of a wife.

Nor can a husband's love, no matter how strong it may be, endure the constant nagging of a wife or her fretting and fuming, without his affection for her withering soon or late. With a rightly mated pair, true love for each other would endure for all time. With other couples it would be like the poppy—bloom today and wither tomorrow.

Affection lasts only as long as the two are deeply interested in each other. When either begins to weary of the society of the other, it is the forerunner of love's decay. How long it will last after this sets in is a matter of endurance. Very often a loving word from the lips of either would turn the tide. It is unfortunate that those who have loved truly are often too proud to make the first overtures. It is not beneath a wife's dignity to make the first advances. She should not forget how sweet and gentle she was to him in the days of their courtship. Even a man who is indifferent to a wife cannot help having a kindlier regard for her if, after a morning's row, he returns home, expecting to renew the wordy battle and instead is met by her with outstretched hands, a smile on her lips and the murmured words: "I am going to forget that we have had an unpleasantness, dear. Let's begin our loving all over again." A man would have to have a heart of adamant to refuse such a plea.

The outstretched hands of husband and wife could easily bridge over the first chasm, but time can make such a chasm so wide and so deep that no human power can span it from one heart to the other. Love lasts only as long as hearts are kind, true and affectionate. Lovers should make the compact 'ere stepping to the altar that, after wedlock, the sun shall never set on them finding them in anger with each other. As the years pass, they will cling the closer to each other. It rests solely with each couple who plight their troth how long their love will last.

Elbert Bede Says:

The man who wears stripes usually has a checkered past.

No longer do we give the horse laugh to the man who talks of flying.

The price of the stuff the lawyer sells is not based on the cost of production.

The woman about whom people never gossip feels that she has made a failure in society.

An optimist is one who won't believe there is a core in the apple until he has eaten down to it.

Any pretty young girl on trial for a great crime may as well get ready to sign a vaudeville contract.

People who knock the place they live in would better be satisfied for they are not wanted anywhere else.

The person who laughs at someone else who has the toothache certainly couldn't have ever had it himself.

When a man tells his wife he is sorry about something he is usually thinking more of his own feelings than about hers.

When folks talk about you it is gossip—when you talk about them you are simply telling things that ought to be told.

Harry Thaw has made a travesty of justice—yet there are few people who care a tinker's darn whether he is in jail or out.

While a task is yet in the future most people underestimate the time and energy that will be necessary in performing it.

If there are people with whom you known you can't agree, why in the name of common sense will you stick around where they are?

A good thing would be all right if it wasn't so easily secured as to make us believe that we could just as well have gotten something better.

A hero is a person who does one thing so well that people notice it while every day others do things equally as heroic but do not know how to advertise.

If some girls never married the world would be better off—and if we were selected to pick out those who shouldn't marry we would pick them more because of the men they would marry rather than because of any shortcomings of their own.

It seems as if the weather man hits it oftener when he predicts rain than when he predicts fair weather. Maybe that's the reason he predicts rain so often—there's not so much of a chance of being mistaken.

ALONG CAME RUTH

"When I lay down my dust cloth I can never find it again," complained Ruth's mother, "and when I do find it, it twists about in my hand so that I frequently find myself rubbing things with my bare palm instead of the cloth. It's a nuisance, that's what it is."

"Well, I saw Mrs. Jones doing a sensible thing along that line the other day," commented Ruth. "She had cut the legs off an old pair of Balbriggan drawers, had sown up one end, slipped it over her head, drawn it up over her sleeve to her elbow and held it in place with a rubber band. In this way she could not mislay it, nor would she find herself rubbing the furniture with her hand instead of the cloth. She also told me that she used the same sort of thing for cleaning the bath tub and I know it must have been fine for this purpose."

"Why Ruth, that's a great idea!" answered her mother, "why didn't you tell me about it before. I'm going to try it right now!"

ORDINANCE No. 29

An Ordinance requiring a license in certain cases and fixing the amount thereof and providing a penalty for a violation thereof.

Sec. 1 That any person engaged in any way of the vocations hereinafter named within the limits of the Town of Klmeme, shall first procure from the proper officers a license therefor for which shall be paid the sums hereinafter fixed for each vocation respectively.

Sec. 2. Any person engaged in giving public or private dances for any kind of reward, compensation or admission fee within the limits of said Town shall pay a license fee of $10 per day, and not run after 12 o'clock p. m. or on Sunday.

Sec. 3. Owners and keepers of roller skating rinks shall pay a license fee of $3.00 per day for each day such skating rinks shall be operated in the Town of Klemme and the same shall not be kept open, between the hours of 11 o'clock P. M. and 6 o'clock A. M. of the following day nor on Sunday.

Sec. 4. The Council may, at, any regular meeting by a two thirds vote of the members present, by resolution authorize the Mayor to issue yearly license to the owners or proprietors of any hall or opera house in said town authorizing or permitting them to hold or give or maintain any such dance or skating rink set forth in Sections 2 and 3 hereof, in such hall or opera house at such a sum as the council may by vote decide.

Sec. 5. Before any license shall be issued the applicant therefor shall pay to the Mayor the sum required and upon such payment such license shall be issued as herein provided but no such license shall be transferable without the written consent of the Mayor endorsed thereon, and the Mayor may in his discretion, refuse to issue a license to any person who has twice been convicted of a violation of any ordinance of the town or of any State law.

Sec. 6. Any person carrying on any business or pursuing an occupation requiring a license as herein provided without first having obtained such license as herein provided; or having obtained such license shall violate or fail to comply with the provisions of the Ordinances of said Town or of the State Law, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof before the Mayor shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 and costs of prosecution and in default of payment may, by order of the Mayor, be imprisoned in the County Jail or any place provided by the Council of such Town until said fine and costs are paid as provided by law.

Sec. 7. This ordinance shall be in force from and after its passage and publication in the Klemme Times.

Passed adopted, and approved this 26th day of July A. D 1915.

C. L. Yahnke, Mayor: Attest: N L. Palmer, Clerk.

PLANT A FIELD OF ALFALFA THIS YEAR

Alfalfa because of its great feeding value is becoming one of Iowa's important crops It does not only have the high protein content for feeding all classes of animals, but in its growth it gathers nitrogen from the air and stores it up on its roots, therefore enriching the soil. Alfalfa ranks very favorably in its protein content with some of the concentrated feeds. It has practically the same feeding value as bran, which at once shows the economy of its use. Alfalfa contains on the average 11.5 per cent digestible protein, bran 12 per cent, clover 7.5 per cent, and timothy 2.8 per cent. Alfalfa will also produce a larger yield per acre than either clover or timothy. From three to five crops of hay may be expected in Iowa according to the locality. Many have thought that alfalfa cannot be successfully grown in their respective localities. Present statistics show that there are over 56,000 acres of it growing in the state. Successful yields have been secured in every county, and it is only a matter of time before this valuable hay crop will be found growing on every farm.

It may be planted either in the spring or fall. Those growing it in the western part report very favorable stands from the spring sowing, while in the central and eastern parts the summer sowings have been more successful. Alfalfa is a plant which will not stand excessive moisture, and should always be grown on well drained land. It cannot compete with acid soils, and before locating the field the soil should be tested for acidity. If acid is found it can be remedied by the addition of ground limestone. This in an inexpensive process and should not be overlooked. Because of the small seeds the seed bed must be prepared in a careful manner. If the planting is done either in the spring or summer, one should always be carful to disk and drag the ground thoroughly. If the summer seeding is done the land may be used for a small grain crop. Just as soon as the grain ripens it should be removed and the land covered with a good coating of barnyard manure. It should then be plowed, disked four times and dragged well to firm the seed bed. If the seeds have not been inoculated with nitrogen by the use of some commercial preparations, soil from an alfalfa field or sweet clover field should be spread on the ground. This should be immediately disked in and dragged. The alfalfa seed should then be drilled at the rate of sixteen to twenty pounds per acre. In purchasing alfalfa seed care should be taken in getting it from localities north of yours. Seed produced on irrigated land will not do so well as that produced on dry land. The American variety will prove more successful and make a better class of hay than the others. There has been considerable discussion in regard to the making of alfalfa hay. As a general rule about the same care is required as in making clover hay. The curing process is a trifle more difficult due to the larger yield and the succulence of the stems.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

The "Wonder Car"

All Low "First-Cost" Records Broken

The new 1916 Maxwell shatters all low "first-cost" records for a real automobile. Think of it—a full 5-passenger car—an absolutely complete car, with electric starter, electric lights, high-tension magneto, and every refinement—a luxurious car—a beautiful car—a powerful 50-mile-an-hour-car,—yet a light-weight real economy car—for $655.

All Low "After-Cost" Records Broken

The "first cost" of an automobile is a big consideration to any sane man, but the "after cost" is an even bigger consideration to any man who wants to remain sane in his automobile investment.

The "after cost" or upkeep is what a car costs you to maintain, run, and enjoy, after you have bought it, and it is mighty hard to enjoy an automobile if it costs you too much to run.

The Maxwell has lowered all economy records for:

1st —Miles per set of tires
2nd—Miles per gallon of gasoline
3rd —Miles per quart of lubricating oil
4th—Miles lowest year-in-and-out repair bills

1916 Maxwell High-Priced-Car Features, all included for $655

- Electric Starter and Electric Lights
- Demountable Rims
- High-tension Magneto
- "One-man" Mohair Top
- New Stream-line Design
- Double Ventilating Windshield, (clear vision and rain-proof)
- Electric Horn
- Wider Front and Rear Seats
- Aluminum Transmission Housing
- Handsome Rounded Radiator and Hood
- Robe Rail with back of front seat leather covered
- Linoleum covered running boards and floor-boards
- Automatic Tell-tale Oil Gauge
- Heat-treated, Tested Steel Throughout
- Easy Riding and Marvelous Flexibility
- Unusual power on hills and in sand
- Ability to hold the road at high speed
- Improved Instrument Board with all instruments set flush

Every feature and every refinement of cars that sell at twice its price

WITH BARNS FULL OF STOCK

"To say I was greatly surprised when I reached Saskatchewan and Alberta would be expressing it mildly. In a country where so much suffering was reported, I found everyone in good circumstances, and especially all our friends who have left Clearwater and Polk counties They all have good homes and those who were reported to have sold their stock through lack of feed, I found with their barns full of stock and it did not look very much like hard times They have from 160 acres to two sections of the finest land that can be found

Prospects for a bumper crop are splendid It is a little cold now, but nothing is frosted, either in gardens or fields Land can be bought quite reasonably here from those who volunteered their services in the European war Here are certainly the best opportunities for securing a good home with a farm and independence for life in a short time Before I started I heard that prices were so high. Flour was reported at $12 per hundred it is $4 25 here In the west all the groceries can be purchased for nearly the same as in Minn The only article that I found higher was kerosene at 35 cts per gallon When I saw the land I wondered why people do not live where they produce enough from the soil to make a comfortable living We visited T T. Sater John Dehls W J and R D Holt's, Martin Halmen, Ole Halvorson, Wm Walker and Geo Colby all from Bagley We found well and prosperous farmers who wished to be remembered to all their Bagley friends"

"He has. You intend to kill me, I believe. I think I have some right to inquire why you take that attitude toward a man who has every honorable intention in the world—"

"Honorable! Do you call it honorable to entice a young girl away from the home of her natural protectors, to throw her among fast women and men, to offer her wines, and to—compromise her?"

"I have done none of these things, Mr Midthorne, as you will discover when you have taken the trouble to go beyond the accounts given by the natural protectors you mention. This interview promises to be painful. We will cut it short. My object in coming here is to inform you that Mary has promised to be my wife."

"What! Why, you miserable—"

"One moment, please. She is quite as dear to me as she is to you. I did not ask her to leave her home. She went of her own free will. You say that I have placed her among fast women and men. If you choose to judge my friends by the standards of Corinth, they are fast. I think, however, you may have seen enough of the world to know that a snail would be swift in Corinth My friends are now her friends. They will be yours, too, I hope, Mr. Midthorne, and you will have reason to be proud of them—just as I am If she has ever tasted wine in her life, I am not aware of the fact. If her association with me has compromised her, I am unable to define what you may be pleased to call 'honorable intentions' I owe you certain explanations, that is all But, by the Lord Harry, sir, I owe you no apologies, either for myself or Mary My record is clean, my conscience clear There is no more for me to say. I persuaded your sister to grant me the privilege of seeing you first, Mr. Midthorne. Mr. Carr has already assured me of your antipathy You came here to meet me I thank you My duty was plain Your first reproaches should fall on me, not on her I did not expect, however, to be called an infernal scoundrel. It is rather unusual, isn't it?"

Eric had been staring at him intently through this long, level speech It was being borne in upon him, much against his will, that Payson was doing the honorable thing, and that he had put himself in a most unenviable position by forgetting his own dignity

"I spoke in heat," he said, but somewhat doggedly "I can only think of Mary as a—well, as a child She knows nothing of men'

"Nor do you, I fear," said Payson coolly

'What do you mean?"

'Is that a threat?'

"I leave it to you Suppose I were to call you an infernal scoundrel, out of a clear sky, so to speak Would you accept it amiably?"

Eric stiffened The blood of his father responded nobly

'I am prepared, sir, to give you satisfaction'

For the first time Payson smiled "Mary said that you would most likely challenge me.'

Eric flushed "I give you to understand, sir, that this is not child's play You cannot treat it as a joke It is"

"But I graciously promised her that I would overlook all the affronts of this first interview I knew just how you would be feeling," said Payson good humoredly

Midthorne turned away, biting his lips to hold back the rush of angry words

"You will have to admit, Eric, that I have done the decent—'

"Don't call me Eric' And don't use the word 'decent,'" snapped Eric "It's so damned middle class It shows where you belong'

Payson's cheek burned "That, at least, was uncalled for Mr Midthorne I am a plain man, and a decent one, even though it jars on you But we are wasting words I came to ask for your sister's hand Am I to understand that you mean to oppose me?"

"Most assuredly I forbid her to even think of it."

Payson smiled "I'm afraid you can't control her thoughts. She has outgrown you, Mr Midthorne You seem to forget that she is a woman. I have no sister but I believe I can in a measure appreciate the shock you have experienced in suddenly learning that your sister is no longer a child in pinafores, but a grown woman, with a woman's heart and body and a woman's capacity to love a man because he is a man She adores you, she will be guided by what you advise, but—" He stopped and shook his head slowly

"She will drop you like a hot poker, Payson, when I've told her a few things I know," said Eric, feeling that he was getting very much the worst of it and growing vindictive in consequence.

"Would you mind telling those things to me?" demanded Payson, a hard glitter in his eyes.

"They're between Mary and me, that is all I've got to say."

"Do you think you are meeting me fairly?"

"It doesn't in the least matter"

"Very well The interview is at an end. I may as well tell you, however, that I intend to marry your sister"

"We'll see about that," grated Eric.

Payson bowed very stiffly and turned to walk away After taking a few steps, he whirled impulsively, a pleading look in his eyes His voice rang with an honest appeal to the other's fairness

"See here, Eric, can't we be friends? What have I done that you should treat me in this manner? I don't want to go back to Mary with the sting of her brother's hatred hurting me, knowing that I've got to go on loving her while—"

"In the first place," interrupted Eric, "you want to get your hands on her little fortune. You—"

"Stop right there' I wish to serve notice on you and your Uncle Horace that when I become Mary's husband it will devolve upon me to look after all of her affairs. If you think I'm the sort of man who will consent to the espionage of a—well, I won't say it. He's your uncle But take this from me I'll handle Mary's property"

"And sink every dollar of it in some wild-cat speculation of yours. I know the kind," sneered Eric.

"I am not a speculator," said Payson quietly

"We'll pass that point. I'm going to put a very blunt question to you. Who was your father?"

Payson's face went very white. A full minute passed before his lips parted in reply to this unexpected question.

"My father was not a blue-stocking, Mr. Midthorne, if that's what you're trying to get at. Am I to understand that you object to me because I happen to have been born to a somewhat less exalted state than your own?"

"No. Not just that," said Eric meaningly. "Who is your father?"

The one small word was like a blow in the face. "Is," he said,—not "was."

"Why—why, what do you mean?" stammered Payson, the blood rushing to his cheeks. "My father is dead. I can't even remember him. You—you think he is alive? That he is—Good Lord, you don't suspect that he is a criminal, a fugitive, or something of that sort!"

"He died before you can remember?" cried Eric, his eyes gleaming.

"Yes. He was a sailing-master. He took a boat out of this port for years One night he was lost in a gale. His body never came ashore. He's lying out there in the Atlantic somewhere, with all the others who are buried in that vast grave. For you know, Mr. Midthorne, that the Atlantic is a graveyard."

Eric was suddenly conscious of a disconcerting directness in the other man's words. It seemed to him that there was a significant, even mocking gleam in the greyish eyes.

A chill crept swiftly into his blood He felt the icy moisture starting from every pore in his body Was it possible that Payson knew? Was he so close to Adam Carr that the great secret had been given into his keeping,—and for what sinister purpose? To be used as a threat, as a club?

With an almost visible effort, he regained control of his wavering fortitude There was the chance, he argued inwardly, that Payson's remark had no sinister meaning He would not be so easily caught.

"Are you quite sure your father is lying at the bottom of the Atlantic?" he asked, after the briefest hesitation.

Payson scowled. "See here, Midthorne, I don't like your manner. What are you driving at? My father, Captain Henry Payson, went down with his schooner, the Lanigan Three of the crew were picked up alive. Two of them are inmates today of the Seaman's Home There is no mistake He was an honest man, and a God-fearing one. He was not a gentleman, according to your lights, I daresay, but he must have been a good man, for my mother has prayed that I might grow up to be like him." He came a step nearer "What have you heard? Has anyone told you that he did not go down with the Lanigan? Has anyone dared to say that he took that way of deserting my mother and me?"

"How old were you when the ship went down?" demanded Eric, ignoring the questions.

"What has that to do with it?"

"Will you answer the question or not?"

"Certainly I was not more than six months old they tell me My mother has told me the story a hundred times over—all about the black night and the savage storm in the April of that year. Adam Carr has told me of my father. He was his closest friend. He always stayed at our house when he was in Corinth between voyages. I've known him always. He can tell you that my father was an honest man and that he did go down with the Lanigan. I am not ashamed of my father. By heaven, I hope I am like him. He was a man!"

There could be no doubt as to his sincerity If there was a mystery in connection with his origin, he was totally ignorant of the fact It was plain to Eric that the secret mumblings of gossiping townspeople had never reached his ears. It was equally plain that Payson had never noted the resemblance of himself to Adam Carr.

In spite of himself, Eric felt a sudden, sharp pity for this tall, good-looking chap.

"I have the right to inquire, you'll admit that, Payson," he said, less arbitrarily

"Perhaps you're right," said the other, biting his lip as he stared at the ground through narrowed lids. "Mary, God bless her, would have taken me as I am, without a single question It's just as well that there is someone to ask questions for her. Good morning, Mr. Midthorne."

Eric watched him until his strong, erect figure disappeared at a bend in the lane. Vaguely conscious that he had not come off with flying colors in the fruitless interview, he jammed his hands into his pockets and, with lowered chin, turned to re-enter the cottage.

There was a new kind of terror tugging at his heart. To what end was Adam Carr carrying his mysterious game?

A raucous, indistinct but startlingly familiar laugh came to his ears. He stopped in his tracks as if turned to stone. For years he had been waiting for a repetition of that never-to-be-forgotten sound. Somehow he knew it would come again. He knew that it would avail him not to look for visible signs of him who laughed. The sound was of the air itself; it enveloped him, he could reach out his hand and touch the laugh itself! He was breathing that ghastly sound, he was inhaling it!

His knees shook. He could feel the hair on his head rise, as if responding to the freezing current that raced through him. His glaring eyes searched among the leafless branches of the trees.

Again came the low laugh, this time apparently from the interior of the cottage. With a cry, he sprang to the door and threw it open, stopping on the threshold to peer into the dim interior of the old man's home.

In a rocking chair, back in the darkest corner of the room, sat a long, shadowy figure. A groan broke in the young man's dry throat. It was a familiar figure. He had seen it in his dreams.

As he fell back against the door jamb, the figure arose from the chair. It seemed to shrink in size as he glared at it. It moved toward him.

"Good morning, Eric," said Adam Carr, emerging into the light that came through the open doorway.

"Good God!" broke from Eric's stiffened lips. He staggered to a chair and dropped heavily into it.

"Have you seen a ghost?" asked Adam, stopping short to stare at his young friend.

"When—when did you come in here?" demanded Eric hoarsely.

"I spent the night here. I overslept," said the other, his short, heavy frame stretching as if arousing itself from the lethargy of sleep. "Father's out in the kitchen making a pot of coffee for me."

"What were you laughing at a moment ago?" asked Eric, passing his hand across his moist forehead.

"Oh," said Adam Carr, "you heard me, did you? I was laughing at Jack. You've no idea how stiff and ramroddy he looked stalking down the lane. You must have said something that hurt."

CHAPTER XV.

THE PRODICAL SISTER RETURNS.

Eric journeyed to New York by the 6 o'clock express that evening, in a fever of anxiety not unmixed with despair. He had had a long afternoon in which to think over the situation. The fear had taken possession of him that Mary would not be as tractable as he had fondly hoped. He found himself, unwillingly, it is true, considering the manly charm, the attractive masculinity of John Payson. It was not difficult, now that he was able to picture Mary as something more than the slim, brown eyed girl he had condemned, in his brotherly ignorance, to a state of eternal immaturity,—it was not difficult, I repeat, for him to understand how she might have fallen in love with the fellow. It was hard to believe, of course, that she was a woman and a woman with a mind of her own. She had always been a little girl to him. Somehow he had felt that she always would be. There was a distinct shock at the awakening Why, she was 21! His little sister was 21!

Joan Bright was nearing 23, and he had thought of her as a woman for five years or more. She had been his sweetheart—his real sweetheart for ages, it seemed to him. She had known what it was to love and be loved since the days when her frocks came down to her shoe tops And she had known, instinctively, from the first, how to meet his love, his passion half way. It was the woman in her, just as it had been the man in him. Then, why not Mary?

But Jack Payson Why had fate led him across his sister's path? Why should he have been the one?

Out of all this, however, grew the sober reflection that he had not discredited Payson until his uncle's letter apprised him of the fact that he was interested in Mary In fact, he had looked upon the ex-teller as a much abused hero in whose footsteps it were a credit and an honor to tread. Secretly, with all Corinth, in those other days, he had rejoiced in the vindication of Jack Payson

But that was before his uncle's vague indictment had been sustained by personal observation. With his own eyes he had discovered the bar sinister The man was marked He could not change his spots There was no question in Eric's mind as to the real truth. He had been born in sin and Adam Carr was father to him

No small amount of bitterness was added to his cup before he left Corinth. His uncle, with more cruelty than he intended, had compared Eric in his present position to himself under similar conditions many years before

"It is working around in a circle, Eric," he said, while they were discussing the best means of inducing Mary to return to the house on the hill "You stand just where I did 26 years ago. The situation is identical. Then it was I who suffered the loss of a sister, now it is you Mary will have her way, just as her mother did before her She will not be turned back If I failed in my day what chance have you in yours" Ah, my boy we are Blagdons, you and I Time is proving us to be alike in every respect, even to our heartaches and disappointments."

On the other hand, Adam Carr, down in the gate keeper's cottage, had grimly said, in reply to the young man's bitter lament 'You can't regulate the heart beats of a young woman, Eric They either beat for you or against you, and they'll beat in spite of you. That's why men sometimes have such a hard time getting rid of women they're tired of Can you honestly blame your sister for falling in love with Jack? Now, take your Aunt Rena's case. She had brothers, a couple of 'em. Fine chaps and good sportsmen. What do you suppose they said when they heard she was going to marry a narrow minded Miss Nancy like Horace Blagden? Why, they simply roared like a couple of wounded lions But did it do them any good? No, sir. She had set her heart on marrying him, and that settled it. I've often wondered what kind of a woman she might have been if she'd married one of those scamps of New Yorkers your uncle holds so cheaply She might have been hobnobbing with the Astors and Vanderbilts at this very minute. But she was bound to have Horace. No, my boy, there's no accounting for taste when a woman's heart is concerned, especially if it's set."

Payson went to New York with Eric, but they saw nothing of each other after a single, unfriendly glance at the Corinth depot

The next morning Eric presented himself at Mrs. Kendrick's. He knew the lady by reputation, as one knows of people whose names are to be seen in the society columns of the great newspapers and periodicals. He could not help wondering how Jack Payson, a sailing master's son, came to know the rather exclusive Mrs Kendrick.

Mary's first words, after their mutual embraces and her own hysteric sniffles of joy, were these:

"Now, Eric, you are not to scold me. I can't bear it."

Whereupon she proceeded to cry very heartily to his sad undoing.

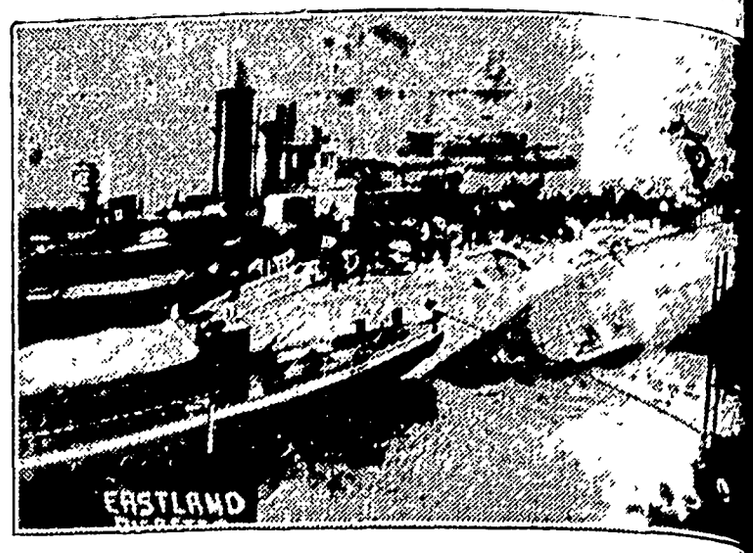
WAR.

From "The Notebook of an Attache," by Eric Fisher Wood, Published by the Century Company

On the way from Pas to Amiens the machine was running down the slope of a hill toward a little village in a valley when an old, white haired woman detached herself from a knot of peasants beside the road and suddenly threw herself in front of the wheels. By putting on the brakes the driver managed to stop just in time to prevent her from being crushed She then tried to crawl under the car and was dragged screaming away by the villagers. It seems that some 20 years ago this woman had been left a widow with one child, a boy. With endless labor she had brought him to manhood and given him more than an average education. When the war broke out her son was immediately called to the colors, while she remained caring for her tiny house, her chickens and her cow. When the Germans came a battle took place in her village, her house was knocked down, her cow blown up by a shell, and finally her chickens disappeared down German throats. The poor old woman, refusing to leave the locality in which her life had been passed, had wandered about for days in the rain and mud, until cold, hunger and sorrow had made her light witted Then, while roaming aimlessly over the fields, she had come upon the body of her dead son.

Eastland After Accident.



THE QUESTIONER AIDS ON ROAD TO PROGRE

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

It is not always popular to ask questions. It disturbs placid current. It is upsetting It is unconventional. Yet it is an axiom that a question is the fingerpost to a reform What one man asks everybody wants to know. It takes some one strong enough and brave enough to "stand up in meeting" with the meddlesome, impertinent query and bring down on his devoted head the chairman's rebuke. Then the rest find that they too are not satisfied. They too would like to be assured. They too are twitched by qualms, compunctions, misgivings.

To comply is the easier way. The master politician does not want headstrong initiators; he wants those who will complacently "travel along" with him in his policy of "addition, division and silence." He wants llegemen who will stick to him through thick and thin, who look up to him like dogs, who hold his will synonymous with their law. Then comes the sign of a break, and his power totters. One man rises to protest that his soul is his own And the revolt does not long stay singular, amazingly soon it is pluralized by those who only awaited a leadership, a spark to kindle a great conflagration The pioneer well knows the risk he runs. The penalty is writ large for unsuccess. Yet he can not be still and be true. He must speak. And to speak is to find how many think as he thinks—lo! he becomes "the voice of one for millions, in whom the millions rejoice for giving their one spirit voice"

Often do we privately vote these questioners a public nuisance, yet their tribe increases, and somehow when the finished product of their handiwork is seen and tested we must decide that it is suitable. We conservatives were vastly with the good old days and the The things that our fathers were along with were sufficient for us ways strove to dissuade the rash innovators. 'Their newness was ing. They would keep the whole social system in a turmoil. Is the stage we reached after long was not a finality, but an experi long, therefore, as the old machine run at all we were unwilling to it with any new contraption Che declared, was just for the restless change. So we called a halt, as we could—and were not obeyed.

For these obstinate questioners get their way in the end It is the truth was not delivered once all in vials hermetically sealed to be undone until science holds ment day. But men were meant as they go; and the profoundest one era only reaches to the start of the succeeding age The older no mortgage upon today We ress. We must outgrow the fancy and childhood We mar tamely acquiescent with hands "'Tis man's perdition to be safe the truth he ought to die' Me tion, passivity, whatever one call it, is a policy that it requires fort at all—merely a sitting back low; but who that is endowed with mortal soul is willing to vegetate in the neuter gender? The hope world looks forward out of the of those who question, not in a peevishness, but in a divine that seeks improvement, beginning all with a man's own self and at yard of the place where he abides

DOINGS OF WOMEN

Oregon has 14 women attorneys.

One woman in every 15 in the United States is in business.

THE STORY OF HOW PEARLS ARE GROWN

"Upon its surface," says Van Dyke, "trembles a mellow lustre, a soft and iridescent light, full of shifting gleams of azure and of rose."

For ages it has been the favorite of royalty and wealth and the object of universal admiration and desire.

Numerous have been the attempts to reproduce it and varying the methods, but meager the results.

It is true that very fine imitations of the pearl have been made, but these could never appeal to the discriminating mind or the exacting taste, to whom nothing short of the real pearl, not only in onward appearance but in its very make-up would be acceptable.

So man set out to harness the very oyster as it were and make it yield the pearl with greater certainty, so that the privilege of possessing it might be extended to every pearl lover.

Decades upon decades were spent, disappointments suffered and lives sacrificed in the study and application of the laws governing the birth and development of the pearl, and it was not before 1896 that the cultivation of pearl oyster on a commercial scale had become a fact.

Now pearl culture is a thriving industry. Its home is located about a dozen miles south of the famous shrine of Isé in the sheltered Bay of Ago, long known for producing some of the finest pearls in the world. It is a remarkably quiet body of water some six miles long and three miles wide, with an average of 10 fathoms.

The coast line is cut with many indentations, affording excellent shelter and ground for the pearl oysters. The gulf stream sweeps near by and is an important factor in making this a favorite haunt of the precious mullusk.

This mollusk belongs to a species closely resembling that found near Ceylon. It lives, anchored to rocks, stems of algae, etc., at a depth not exceeding seven fathoms.

Every year in July and August pieces of rock are placed in spots where larvae of the pearl oysters have been found to be most abundant. Soon small oyster spats are found attached to them. With the advent of the winter, these together with the rocks, are removed to deeper waters and carefully laid out in beds prepared for them. Here they lie until they reach their third year when with the aid of the cultivator, whose chief problem consists in inserting the nuclei, the process of pearl culture begins.

Another four years, and we find that the mollusk has invested the nucleus with numerous layers of nacre, and has, in fact, produced pearl.

Pearl culture as described, may seem very simple but in reality it is far from being an easy task. There are many drawbacks besetting this industry, such as the ejection of the nuclei, etc., and especially the great mortality among the oysters.

The octopus plays sad havoc among them. The starfish, too, is an unwelcome intruder. The most dreaded of all evils however is the invasion of the "Red Current" which may in one day undo the work of years.

For the first five or six years the production of the oriental cultured pearl was not very great and not much was done to encourage its use either here or abroad. Later, as the industry developed, a steadier and larger pearl crop was assured.

The cultured pearls are real, natural and comparatively inexpensive. They are beautiful and fascinating, they have the color and lustre of the finest Indian pearl and are as nearly perfect otherwise as pearls can be.

The difference between the oriental cultured pearl and the other is, that the production of the former is brought about by the pearl cultivator, while that of the latter is accidental.

The costly pearl is found in the soft body of the oyster, while the cultured pearl is built by the oyster on the inside of the shell. This accounts for the mother of pearl portion in the cultured pearl at the point of adhesion to the shell. This feature is improved by the use of a setting especially adapted for the mounting of this pearl.

"GOD PUNISH ENGLAND."

In the American Magazine Edward Lyell Fox, correspondent in Germany for that publication, writes an interesting article entitled, "God Punish England," in which he reports the intensity of Germany's hate for England. Following is an extract from the article.

"Gott straf' uns—wenn wir England schonen!"

(God punish us—if we spare England.)

"That is the German pledge. It is the oath of a nation—one nation against another. It is a sincere oath—apparently sincere.

"They have made for this hate a ritual. About it they have written their stories and poems and songs. I have read them, by Thoma, Emanuel and Scher. Their clever illustrators have drawn it into their pictures. I have seen them, by Schulz, Heine and Thon. Their singers, their actors, their preachers, have spread it through the nation. I have heard them, Berna, Bonn and Schmidt. It is a wonderful hate, almost beautiful in its simple sincerity. They say they have one foe and one alone—England.

"Since England declared war this hate has been curdling. It has become now to Germany as a sacred thing. They are calling on the Almighty to punish England. They are praying that He strike them if England they spare—Gott Strafe England!

"A translation of that is, God punish England. But that is merely translating the words. Their implication is vast. They imply far more than mere punishment. They curdle every German breast. They produce a red prayer. God tear our unholy foe to tatters! Oh, God, give us strength to rend the British empire as we would rend an old coast, and cast it away!"

Marshal Wolfe Mistaken.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Lebanon, Ill., joined the ranks of cities made famous by gross miscarriage of justice when Marshal John H. Wolfe arrested himself and had himself fined for being drunk in the street. The case was decided on unsupported circumstantial evidence.

The marshal drank five bottles of beer in St. Louis and woke up the next morning in his home with a slight furry feeling on the inside of his brain-pan and a blank space in the section of his cerebral cortex where the night before should have been registered. On the evidence, which he had to admit, was scant, he arrested himself and forced himself to confess to the judge that he had been drunk.

Drunk? On five bottles of beer? A Munich baby's breakfast tipple! Impossible! Marshal Wolfe may have been lit, mellow, in his cups, tight, half seas over, or squiffy; he may have had a jag, an edge, or a bun, but he could not have been drunk.

MADE HIM CHANGE HIS SIGN

Bachelor Found That Persistent Salesmen Had Some Other Way of Getting Business.

An old bachelor, in order to prevent men annoying him by knocking at his door to dispose of their wares, affixed thereto a label to this effect: "Hawkers, take notice! The inhabitants of this house never buy anything at the door." Shortly afterward he was aroused by a loud knocking at his parlor window, and looking out he saw two fellows with clothes-props, mats, and pegs for sale. Throwing up the sash, he bawled "Can you read?"

"Yes, master," answered one.

"Then don't you see a notice affixed to my knocker that I never buy anything at the door?"

"To be sure we do. That's the reason why we thought we would make bold and try to do a little business at the window."

The bachelor was pacified, and made a purchase. Immediately afterwards, however, he sent for a painter, and had the addition made to his announcement. "Nor at the window either."

Rampant Civic Pride.

"Did you learn much on your last trip abroad?"

"No. I went with a party of tourists."

"What did that have to do with it?"

"They wrangled so much about the merits of their respective home towns back in the states that half the time I couldn't hear what the guide was saying."

Fruit-Growers' Way.

Bill—You say he's a successful fruit-grower?

Jill—Yes, and he raises nothing but large-sized fruit.

"Is it possible?"

"Why, when he wants to fill his barrels or baskets he has to go to his neighbors to get the small sizes to put under the top layer."

Advice to Economize.

Mamie—Most of the chewing gum chewed in this country is of Mexican origin, and they say unless things soon quiet down in Mexico the price of gum is likely to go up."

Julie—Chew slower, Mamie.

Girls should beware of young men who pose as candy kids; as husbands they are apt to develop into lemon drops.

Weds in a Plaster Suit.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Seraner came all the way to Saline county from Fayetteville, O., to become the bride of Francis de Sales Schneider, a young farmer near Saline, and even then came near losing out for a delay at least, but she was equal to the occasion and is now Schneider's bride, says a Saline (Kan.) dispatch to the Kansas City Journal.

The promised delay in the nuptial affairs of the young couple was caused by Schneider getting into a runaway accident and sustaining a broken leg, fractured ribs and bruises all over his body, and his sweetheart found him bound in plaster of paris casts so tight he could not move.

The situation was discussed, the young lady hooked up the favorite horse to a buggy and came to Saline, secured the marriage license, engaged the preacher and returnod to the farm.

Willing to Help.

"I don't see anything the matter with you," said the doctor.

"Well, I'm worried, doctor."

"About what?"

"My money."

"Oh, well, I guess I can relieve you of that."

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think what you can make with wheat around $1 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada. There is no conscription and no war tax on lands. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. Paxtine

A Soluble Antiseptic Powder to be dissolved in water as needed

For Douches

In the local treatment of woman's ills, such as leucorrhoea and inflammation, hot douches of Paxtine are very efficacious. No woman who has ever used medicated douches will fail to appreciate the clean and healthy condition Paxtine produces and the prompt relief from soreness and discomfort which follows its use. This is because Paxtine possesses superior cleansing, disinfecting and healing properties.

For ten years the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. has recommended Paxtine in their private correspondence with women, which proves its superiority. Women who have been relieved say it is "worth its weight in gold." At druggists. 50c. large box or by mail. Sample free. The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE STATE OF IOWA, IN AND FOR HANCOCK COUNTY, OCTOBER TERM 1915

ORIGINAL NOTICE

R. C. Plummer and R. T. Norvet, Plaintiffs,
vs
Defendants.

TO THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANTS, and to the unknown claimants of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼); all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M., Hancock County, Iowa:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiffs in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock County, Iowa, claiming that plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M, Hancock County, Iowa.

That the plaintiffs and their grantors have been in open, notorious, adverse and undisputed possession of the above described premises for more than twenty years under color of title and claim of right. That the defendants, and unknown claimants to the said land, have no right or title in and to the said premises.

That the claims, interest or title of the defendants are based upon the following facts and derived in the following manner:

(a) Daniel D. Mather acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book D, page 603, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Daniel D Mather, or from his spouse or heirs, and by virtue of which fact the said Daniel D Mather, his unknown spouse or unknown heirs would have an apparent interest in the land above described.

(b) Geo B Matteson acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the North Half (N½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed dated December 15, 1875, recorded in Book 2, page 271, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Geo B Matteson or his wife or heirs, and because of which fact the said Geo B Matteson, or his unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said land.

(c) Tax deeds were issued by the Treasurer of Hancock County, Iowa, to Henry Leamer covering part of the above described premises. The tax deeds were recorded in Book A, page 182 and 185, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. The land was conveyed to said Henry Leamer in trust for Julia Rhodes and children There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Julia Rhodes or her children and because of which fact the said Julia Rhodes or her unknown spouse or unknown heirs or children would have an interest in and to the said land.

(d) A mortgage was given covering the above described premises by James M. Elder to Henry Leamer, recorded in Book A, page 322. There is no release of the above described mortgage executed by the said Henry Lemaer, and he or his unknown heirs might have some interest in and to the said premises by virtue thereof.

(e) Henry Leamer, the grantee in the tax deeds referred to in Paragraph (c), conveyed the land to James M. Elder by deed recorded in Book F, page 222, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but the wife of Henry Leamer did not join therein and because of which she or her unknown heirs might have some interest in the land.

(f) Joel Matteson acquired title to the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book 2, page 270, of the Deed Records of Hancock County. Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Joel Matteson or his spouse or heirs and because of which he or his unknown wife or heirs may have an interest in and to the said land.

(g) Polly Ann Matteson, Harriet Hall, Egbart A. Matteson and George B. Matteson appear from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, to have been the heirs of Joel Matteson who had title to the South Half (S½), of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), but there is no conveynace of record either from the said Joel Matteson or from any of his heirs as above named or from their unknown heirs, and because of which they or their unknown heirs may have some interest, right, or title in and to the said premises.

(h) Thomas L. Walsh acquired title to the premises described in Paragraph (b) above, by conveyance recorded in Book A, page 295, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, and it appears from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, Will Record 2, page 41, that he died leaving Margaret Walsh, Patrick Walsh, Eugenia Walsh, Isabella Walsh, Martin Walsh, Margaret Thyne, Johana Sheehan, and Annie Walsh, as his heirs at law and that by virtue of the fact that there are no conveyances of record from them they and their unknown spouses or unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said premises.

(i) That among the said defendants there may have been or may be at this time some minor heirs or others under legal disability who may claim an interest in and to the above described premises by or through some of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of which claim and the names of said minor claimants these plaintiffs are unable to state

That plaintiffs have sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants, and unknown claimants, without success

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and plaintiffs ask that their title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of all of said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiffs be decreed to be the absolute owners in fee simple of the said land. That the defendants and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right, title or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiffs' title be quieted, and that they be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish their title in fee simple, and for the costs of this action; and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of Court, being the October Term of said Court, which convenes and will be held at the Court House in Garner, Iowa, beginning the 11th day of October, 1915, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as provided by law.

Dated at Forest City, Iowa, this 3rd. day of July 1915.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS

Those of Iowa's citizens who by nual pilgrimages to the State Fair Exposition have kept tab on changes and improvements from to year will find that the mar progress has not been interfered nor has it been idling by the way since the fair of 1914. The first that will meet the critical eye of visitor who enters the grounds by of the Rock Island gates is the sheep pavilion, erected the pre summer. It stands inside the g directly across Rock Island a from the swine pavilion and south the big horse barn. It is of the general plan of architecture as swine pavilion and machinery built of brick and steel, and is a terial improvement to the south corner of the grounds.

Mrs. Hen is without doubt one of the most popular females in the state of Iowa today. And she deserves every smidgeon of the honor and glory that is coming her way. If Mr. Hog is entitled to the quite high sounding title of mortgage lifter, Mrs. Hen has all the right in the wide world to be known as the family provider. All the little extras of the household, those little creature comforts and luxuries that combine to smooth life's pathway, are provided in large measure by her ladyship. She sets the table—as well as the incubator. She buys sister's ribbons and silk hosiery; Bub is dependent on her efforts for ammunition and fishing tackle; she digs up ma's mission money and, if the truth were known, is probably paying for the gasoline and cylinder oil to keep dad's auto going.

The Iowa State Fair management recognizes her importance in the general scheme of life by devoting a liberal share of the premium money to her particular department. The classification is a wide one, and includes more different kinds and varieties of hens than we had any idea existed. There are classes for American varieties; Asiatic, Mediterranean, English, Dutch, French, Games, etc. In addition to all these are the classes for turkeys, ducks, geese and many others of the feathered tribes. It will be a show of great merit and will have much to interest the poultry fancier.

To his intense amazement—you might say concern—he discovered her to be a fully developed woman, modish to the tips of her toes, and very far removed from the shy, dependent little sister he had known all his life. She was convincingly attractive. He had never thought of her as anything but familiarly pretty. Somehow the very feel of her was different. Instead of the soft, pliant, almost limp feel of an unformed body, there was the firm, tense resistance of a mature woman. The wistful, inquisitive gleam was gone from her eyes; the tender mobility of her lips, the girlish uplift of the chin, the breeze-torn look of the dark hair—all these were gone, for she was a woman—his little Mary was a woman She seemed to have turned into one while his back was turned. And stranger still, though immensely gratifying to him, she was like the women he had seen abroad or in New York, the kind he admired, she was smartly gowned, trimly made, with a manner—a real manner There was nothing about her to even faintly suggest Corinth.

While he stood off, unbelieving, to admire her, his mind took a sharp leap through space to the deck of a yacht that cruised the southern seas. Was Joan, too, like this? Had she outgrown his vision so completely? If the transformation in Joan was as pronounced—but, ah! She was off in the southern seas That was something else to think about.

The upshot of his visit was that Mary went to Corinth with him that very afternoon At the end of the long and trying scene, she consented to return with him on condition that she was not to go back to the home of her uncle She would never agree to that. He would have to take the Verner cottage, which was for rent. She would keep house for him. They were of age, she argued stubbornly, and independent They could afford to have a place of their own and—live as they wanted to live, not as Uncle Horace ordained No amount of persuasion on his part could alter the decision. After all, it was not hard for him to appreciate her point of view He rather favored the plan himself. The house on the hill was a dismal place in itself, to say nothing of the conditions which were bound to make it even more unpleasant for both of them

His chief reason for wanting her to go back to the Blagdons was the effect that such an act would have on the townspeople It would re-establish her at once, if such a thing were necessary He had no means of knowing how much of the truth Corinth possessed, or how little of it There was the forlorn hope, of course, that no questions had been asked and that her visit to Mrs Kendrick had been accepted as a perfectly natural arrangement. Still, if there was speculation or rumor he was eager to have it nipped in the bud

But she objected to even a temporary truce She would not put her foot inside the Blagden doors Moreover, she would not go back to Corinth without consulting John Payson's wishes in the matter This was a sore blow to Eric

Payson, when she called him up at his office over the telephone at once advised her to accompany her brother, and to be guided by him in every particular Mrs Kendrick, who impressed Eric as a most admirable woman, explained her own position to his complete satisfaction and urged the girl to do the obviously sensible thing

On the way to the station in the cab Mary said to Eric, almost defiantly "This doesn't mean, Errie, that I am giving up Jack You understand that, don't you?"

He looked straight ahead, his jaw stiffening 'There's time enough for all that Mary"

Her delicate face seemed to take on a certain hardness. "I suppose Uncle Horace told you I'd go to the devil, just as mother did and that's what you're afraid of Oh, don't look so horrified, Errie. It's just between you and me. He didn't hesitate to say it to me, only he said dogs instead of devil. You wouldn't have endured it, either We're not helpless children any longer"

"Mary, we must never talk about—about what happened when we were babies I don't know how much of the story is true, but—well, let's drop the subject

"But are you afraid I'll do just what old Aresbrey and the rest of them suggested I'd do?" she persisted

"No, I'm not dear You are as good as gold,' he cried eagerly

She looked at him out of the corner of her eye 'If you'll trust me, Errie, I'll trust you' she said enigmatically She put her hand in his and said no more

They had lived in the Verner cottage for more than a week before Eric began to observe the peculiar interest people were taking in their little home Women, in passing, were prone to direct furtive glances toward their doorway and windows, glances that more often than not became rather penetrating Aside from the natural interest people would be expected to take in the doings of Horace Blagden's wards, there were unmistakable evidences of sympathy curiosity It finally dawned upon him that passersby were not interested in the Midthornes jointly, but in Mary alone Women stared at the curtained windows and then, before reaching the obstructing hedge invariably turned to speak to each other in a way that left no room for speculation as to the significance of their comments

The town was beginning to discuss Mary That was the sum and substance of it

In great distress Eric went to his uncle Neither of the Blagdons had been near the little home in Grove street. Their aloofness alone was sufficient to create comment and comment in a place like Corinth is usually of an unfavorable character

Horace listened to the young man's latter arraignment of fate and took counsel with him

"Bring Mary to church next Sunday morning," he said in conclusion "Sit in your old places in our pew Your aunt and I will be there as usual If Mary cares to have us do so, we will stop for you on the way over. If it is pleasant we shall walk I suggest, however, that you consult Mary before undertaking to carry out this plan, Eric The situation might easily become awkward for all of us"

"Thank you, Uncle Horace," said Eric, greatly relieved. "I'll take it up with Mary"

Horace cleared his throat. "I'm sorry she refuses to come to our home It should be her home and yours. But if she wont, she won't Your aunt and I have talked the matter over If you'd like us to do so, we will drop in occasionally to see you at the cottage. Perhaps, it would be rather helpful if we were to do so."

"It's just the thing," cried Eric. "It's good of you to excuse Mary's attitude, Uncle Horace. She'll come to her senses in a little while, I'm sure. You will be most heartily welcome at—"

Horace pursed his lips as he shook his head slowly. "You'd better ask Mary first, my boy. Then let me know if we will be welcome."

Mary was surprisingly docile about it. She was no fool. She sensed the thing that was in the air.

"All right, Errie. I'll do what you think best. Mrs. Paulding cut me today in the street. That shows how the wind blows. You poor boy! I am sorry on your account."

"I can't bear the thought of—" he began, but instantly checked the words. He came near to saying something that would have hurt her.

She waited for a moment, her lips parted as if prepared to cry out against the expected pain. Then they trembled with the wayward little smile that was her greatest charm.

"Good old Errie! You came near to saying something horrid, didn't you?" She put her hands on his shoulders, facing him "Isn't this ever so much nicer, living here as we do? You know it is. I think—"

"It's great, Mary," he cried warmly.

"Let them gossip," she said cheerfully, although there was a darker glow in her eyes. "It won't make any difference after I'm married and out of reach of them. It's just because I'm not married that they're talking, and looking at my back after I've passed, and all that sort of thing But—"

He clasped her hands in his and bent over her fiercely "You can't marry Jack Payson, Mary," he cried. "I can't permit it. There is a reason, a compelling reason. Why—why, I'd kill him before I'd see—"

"Now, Errie!" she cried, snatching her hands away "Don't say anything you'll regret. I won't listen to you."

"Why, he's—he's a— No, I won't say it!" he groaned.

"A thief? I'll say it for you. He isn't one, and you know it, but even if he were, what cause have we for boasting?"

"Good heaven, Mary!"

"Well, let's change the subject," she said sharply "You'd better hurry on or you'll miss your appointment with Judge Bright. Have you sent the plans to him?"

He took two or three turns up and down the room, pulling himself together

"No," he said, breathing deeply "The understanding was that I was to show them to Joan first of all She's not here See here, Mary, how do things stand with you and Joan?"

"I don't know, Errie. I wish I did We had a tiff a couple of months ago She said something horrid about John Payson and I replied in a way she did no like. I said he was a good deal more of a man than that Sallonsby chap and that he'd still be a man when her fine gentleman was pegging around with locomotor ataxia or something—Why, Errie! What is the matter?"

He was staring at her, dismay in his face

"Paul Sallonsby? You mean she's—"

She's mad about him. They—" The words died on her lips He had turned very white The truth was revealed to her Impulsively she flew to his side.

"Oh Errie! I didn't know it was like that You care for her—in that way? Oh, Eric! I'm so sorry I—I thought it was only a boy and girl affair"

He held her sobbing, in his arms. His bloodless lips were working, but not in the effort to speak. * * * Something had been shattered

A little later he left the house and made his way across to Judge Bright's home All zest in the building project was gone. He had no heart in the long cherished enterprise It was now a cold, dull business transaction, not a labor of love

He could not believe it of Joan Allowing for the distance that separated them, there had been ample time for a letter to have reached him from the West Indies. The fact that she had left no word for him in Corinth, not so much as a line, was even more convincing to his unwilling mind. She had found someone else to take his place. The fond dream was over. He was awake after the long, sweet sleep of security—awake to find that while he slept she had slipped away from him never to return. And yet he could not believe if of her

His fears were somewhat lessened by the warmth of Judge Bright's greeting The fine old justice was frankly glad to see him. There could be no doubt as to the genuinness of his affection, nor was his enthusiasm over the prospects of his young friend a whit diminished by the years that had fallen upon both of them

"I wish Joan could see you at this moment, Eric," he said, as he wrung the tall handsome fellow's hand. "She has often wondered what the two years would do for you. Upon my soul, you are the living image of your father when he was 25—and he was a man one looked at twice, let me say to you It does my heart good to see you, my boy And it would do yours good to see my Joan." His eyes glowed with joy and pride. "Ah, by boy, she is wonderful."

Eric flushed "I am sorry she is not at home, Judge Bright. I—I had looked forward to seeing her, you may be sure."

The justice poked him with his thumb "I believe there was a boy and girl attachment, wasn't there?"

"I am afraid it was no more than that," said Eric soberly.

Judge Bright gave him a keen glance. "I'll not tell her that you put it in just those words," he said, and Eric wondered not a little.

Later on, they fell to discussing the plans for the new house. Some of Eric's enthusiasm returned.

"Of course, we can't do anything until she returns from this pleasure cruise" said the judge. "She'd never forgive me if I took a step without consulting her. You've no idea how completely she has me under her thumb."

"When do you expect her to return?" asked Eric.

"It's hard to say. They were to start north this week, coming direct to Boston, but it seems that new plans have been made. I had word yesterday that they are going to Vera Cruz and New Orleans and a number of places along the gulf, despite the approach of hot weather in those ports. It now appears that the yacht won't start homeward short of four or five weeks. We'll have to sit back and wait for her, Eric, that's all."

Eric departed without having expressed his true feelings to the father of the girl he loved His pride was beginning to assert itself. A dull red seemed to have come into his cheek to stay.

"Will you be so kind as to let me know when Joan returns, Judge Bright?"

"I fancy you'll know it quite as soon as I do," said the girl's father with a smile.

"That's not likely, sir," said Eric calmly.

He walked rapidly in the direction of the public square. Not that business called him there, but because he wanted to be where humanity was thickest in Corinth. He wanted to imagine himself in Paris! The ludicrousness of the thing did not occur to him. He only knew that he hungered for something gay, and bright, and whirling. The public square in Corinth was the nearest approach to all that.

At the corner of the square he stopped suddenly and looked about him as if aroused from a doze. A short bitter laugh broke from his lips.

"Good heaven!" he muttered, staring across the desterted common. "As dead as Carthagenia itself. Why should I stay here? What is there for me? By George, I'll get out before I'm a week older. Mary's right. What a fool I am to think of wasting even a day in this place. I'll tell Judge Bright I can't take on the house for him. It's out of the—"

"A bad habit, Eric, talking aloud," said the gaunt old man.

"I've just come to a decision, uncle," said Eric, a trace of excitement in his voice.

"I've an idea what it is, my boy. You were looking at the new court house. That tells the tale. It is a handsome building."

"No, no! It isn't that, Uncle Horace. I wasn't thinking of the court house," cried Eric hastily.

"Nevertheless, there must be a bitterness in your heart as you look at it. You are its creator, and yet the fact is known only to you and me. You have decided to tell the truth about the—er, ahem—the design."

Horace was looking straight past his nephew's head.

He cried out in protest. "I have not given it a thought, Uncle Horace. That's all past. I don't care—not now"

Horace looked into his eyes. "It's a terrible lie I've been living all these years, Eric. Sometimes I feel—." The sentence died on his lips. A slight shiver went over his thin figure. His face hardened and the warm light in his eyes gave way to a hard glitter "There he is, over there,—under the Massasoit awning." The utter irrelevance of the remark had a curious effect on Eric. He as at that instant thinking of Chetwynd Blagden.

"What!" he gasped, feeling himself turn pale.

He turned to follow the direction of his uncle's gaze, half expecting to see the huge figure of his cousin.

Adam Carr was standing near the entrance to the hotel, boldly detached, but looking in the opposite direction.

"I had another letter from him today," said Horace, speaking as if to himself. "Will he never bring this chase to—" He caught himself up with a visible effort, and closed his lips as if they were never to be parted again.

"What did he say in that letter, Uncle Horace? I demand an answer," cried Eric, his soul sick.

"Nothing that I can speak of to you or anyone else." said his uncle harshly. "But—" and here his face seemed to turn positively livid—"damn him, I will not let him see, I will never let him know!"

Then, his manner changing like a flash, he apologised for the single blasphemous word, and, thrusting his arm through Eric's, deliberately led him down the street toward Adam Carr. They passed within arm's reach of the man, whose back was still toward them.

"Good morning, Adam," said Mr Blagden as they passed.

Adam still gazed into the cigarist's window.

"Good morning, Horace," said he briskly. That was all. They had been passing the time of day in this manner, on widely seperated occasions for years.

"I own that row of buildings, Eric," he said, as if there was nothing else in his tired, harassed brain but business affairs. "They are an eye sore, aren't they? Well, I'm deeding that entire block to the city of Corinth. What is more, sir, in the very center of the block, after we've demolished those unsightly structures, there is to be erected the handsomest public library in the state, designed by the most able architect I can think of, and built under his direction. It is to be called the Blagden Library, and it is to be designed by Eric Midthorne, and it is to cost $400.000 I am giving it to Corinth I want you to build something for me, Eric, that I can be proud of to the end of my days."

Eric stared. "Uncle Horace, are you era— I mean, are you in earnest? Do you mean—"

The Boers to Fight In France.

From the New York World

Having checked rebellion in their own race; having pressed through waterless wastes, taken stout forts and beaten the kaiser's troops planted on their borders ready for war, having added to the empire a land as vast as Germany and the United Kingdom combined, General Botha and the Boers, it is said, will set out for the fighting line in France.

Whether or not they offer this supreme sacrifice, what they have done is amazing In 1900 they taxed the power of England to subdue them and called out for that purpose forces greater than have yet fought for King George. They drew the world wide sympathy expressed in Queen Wilhelmina's reception of Boer delegates, kaiser's telegram to Kruger, and planks in the republican and democratic platforms in this country.

Less than 12 years after peace was made a new issue came which for the Boers was simply: Should the Cape conquer German Southwest Africa or be annexed to it? If, with their history, they preferred to remain British subjects it was because Great Britain—or a party there—have learned some lessons of political freedom. They learned from us. England's ablest and noblest men favored the American revolution when that meant business, social and political ostracism. They learned from Canada when, after Papineau's rebellion, the report that meant Canadian freedom earned for Lord Durham the abuse of silly lordlings. They learned from the Boers when the liberals braved Tory cries of "traitor" to proffer South Africa local self-government.

If the Canadians are the flower of the British troops at Ypres, if Australians and New Zealanders helped clear the sea of Germans and are now battering at the Turk, if the Boers have rallied to the cause, it is because the British liberals have had the vision, and at times the power, to trust in the rule of the people.

Miss Fay Clark, a University of Oregon girl, is superintendent of schools in a Washington county of 9,883 square miles, in which only 15 of 62 schools can be reached by railroad.

Telephone operators in Egypt are required to speak English, French, Italian, Greek and Arabic.

Chile is irrigating more than 2,300,000 acres of land, and has nearly as many more available for irrigation.

Cotton as Contraband.

From the London Mail.

Before this war most people imagined that cotton was used principally for the manufacture of calico and cotton fabrics in Lancashire or for the bandaging of wounds in hospitals They are gradually coming to understand that cotton is the chief ingredient in modern "gunpowder," and the substance with which men are killed in the war of today. The explosive which propels the bullet from the rifle and the high explosive shell from the field gun is not, as in Napoleon's time, made of charcoal, saltpetre, and sulphur. It is made chiefly of cotton.

To convert cotton into an explosive it is dipped in nitric acid, washed, and dried. The resultant is guncotton. Unless extreme care is taken in its manufacture and unless the cotton is pure and clean, there is an early end of the explosive factory and all employed in it. When properly made, however, it is stable and trustworthy. The British powder, cordite, is two-thirds composed of guncotton and the other third of various ingredients. The German and Austrian powders are much the same. Without guncotton the German guns and rifles would be silenced. Without an ample supply of cotton there could be no German guncotton

The consumption of cotton in modern war is prodigious. A bale of cotton weighing 400 pounds, or about a fifth of a ton, is needed to make the powder for one shot from one of the Queen Elizabeth's 16-inch guns or from one of the German 17-inch howitzers. The same quantity of cotton would provide ammunition for 400 shots from a field gun or 80,000 rounds from a rifle. The lowest calculation places the quantity of cotton daily fired by Germany and Austria at 300 tons; the highest at something over 1,000 tons.

Cotton does not grow in Germany and cannot be manufactured chemically there. Every ounce that she fires away in killing or maiming the British troops and their allies has to reach her by sea. If her supply of cotton were cut off she would be most gravely embarrassed Even supposing she could devise a new powder, to change explosives in the midst of a great war is a matter of tremendous difficulty and peril.

Now the amazing fact is that Great Britain has not stopped Germany from getting cotton abroad There is one sure way of cutting off her supply It is to proclaim cotton contraband or liable to seizure by the British and allied cruisers.

We have not done that, though it ought to have been done in the first week of the war We proclaimed wool, copper, everything but the one indispensable food for the German guns, contraband For many months we even allowed cotton to be exported in great quantities from this country to various neutral ports, whence it was notoriously dispatched to Germany We have only recently stopped this trade by an embargo, or prohibition, on the export of cotton from Great Britain We have not cut off the export of cotton from the United States, where most of it is grown in neutral ships to neutral ports, and most of the cotton gets to Germany in this manner

If we proclaimed cotton contraband we could stop this traffic by seizing the ships with cotton cargoes and calling on the neutrals to show that the cotton was not intended to reach the enemy We could do this under principles which the United States clearly asserted in the civil war with the confederacy and which Mr Bryan reiterated in his letter to Mr Stone five months ago

Why do we not issue the proclamation and cut off the raw material of Germany's powder? Are there not widows and orphans enough in Europe?

Neutral Rights and Munitions.

From the Indianapolis News.

A special article in the New York Times by Henry R. Towne, former president of the Merchants' Association of New York, calls attention to the trade in munitions of war, which neutrals have always indulged in, by quoting, from official sources, the record in previous wars. During the Boer war which began in October, 1899, the United States government proclaimed its neutrality Two years later in answer to a resolution of congress, Secretary Hay showed that up to January 1, 1901, there had been shipped from our ports horses, mules and other munitions to the value of $26,000,000, that no steps had been taken to prevent "this lawful exportation," and that the supplies probably went to both sides in the conflict. The Russo-Japanese war began February 6, 1904, and ended in July, 1905. Official publications of the German government show that in 1904, 1905 and 1906, Germany sold to Russia 340.140 tons of artillery, ammunition, cartridges and caps, and 386,860 tons of bar and sheet copper The Krupp works at Essen were working overtime on this trade German firms bought 200.000 tons of coal in Wales and had a fleet of 80 steamers carrying it to Russia. Austria and Italy both sold hundreds of torpedoes to Japan. We sold nearly a hundred submarines to both countries. France sold 160,000 cases of shrapnel shells to Russia China seized 3,000,000 rounds of Russian rifle ammunition sent from Germany The Carnegie company, of Pittsburgh, sold 75,000 tons of nickel plates for battleships to Japan. France's shrapnel shell supply to Russia was 500,000. It was sent through Germany without being examined by German custom officials.

Examples like these if the plain definition of the law does not satisfy, ought to be enough to show what neutral rights are in this relation And the simple reflection ought further to silence objections to such trade, in view of the fact that if a nation at war may not buy munitions from other nations, it would have to keep itself constantly stocked with all such things against the time that they might be needed

Mr Towne further presents the fact that we are suffering heavily in our trade from a war with which we have nothing to do and which we want earnestly to cease, and that to deny us the right to sell munitions would condemn us to still further privation in trade and cause further trade prostration, besides leaving us open to a refusal by other nations to sell to us if ever we should need such munitions. That any of the belligerents can not get such is no reason why we should not sell to those that can get them. It is not a personal question, but one of principle—the principle of neutral trade and a refusal to indulge in it would be a violation of neutrality.

Russia Will Pay Up Her Debts.

In the American Magazine a well known American banker writes an article entitled "The Money Side of the War" which is full of interesting and important facts as to Russia's credit, and the frightful cost of the war He says in part

"Some people are inclined to have misgivings as to Russian credit, but I believe such fears may be dismissed. No nation of 170,000,000 people, with the huge resources that Russia has, is going to be unable to pay its debts. Further, Russia has in the past shown scrupulous regard for her obligations. Throughout the Crimean war, with Great Britain fighting as a bitter enemy, Russia scrupulously sent gold to London to pay the coupons on her bonds that were held by English investors. That was a notable testimony to her endeavor at all costs to preserve her financial integrity

"As to England, she is looking not only after her own affairs, but helping others also. She loaned $60,000,000 to Russia early in the war $50,000,000 to Belgium, $4.-000,000 to Serbia. She has loaned almost $100,000,000 to France. To her own people a few weeks ago she offered a loan of almost $2,000,000,000. It was over-subscribed. At the beginning of the war the British national debt was something like $3,000,000,000. Since that time, taking into account new funded indebtedness and short-term treasury bills, it has doubled."

The Life Is More Than Meat.

L. A. L. in the St. Louis Mirror.

The plutocrats, God bless them! They have taught us, if we care to learn the formula, that will is the alkahest by which we may turn all leaden things to gold.

The princes of poverty, God bless them all! they of Camden and Walden and Fordham have taught us, if we care to learn the rubric menstruum which holds for all men all good. Let's talk less of money; its boredom and its boons. Let's encompass more of life, claiming as the sacred right of each of us the full measure of a man's portion of suffering; and the full measure of a soul's portion of joy.

PROSPERITY ILLUSTRATED BY TWO CELEBRATIONS

From the Columbus (Neb.) Telegram.

How times have changed in Nebraska! I recall a "country" Fourth of July celebration 20 years ago in a western county. It was in many respects an assembly to excite sympathy. It was the year following the great "dry spell." Not a farmer on the grounds had harvested in 1894 enough wheat to feed his family, not enough corn to fatten a single hog. The hot winds of the preceding year had destroyed about everything the farmers possessed except their supply of hope. Almost pathetic were the attempts of the women folks to make a good appearance: Many of them wore garments which had been contributed to the drought sufferers by the collectors of cast-off clothing in the eastern states. Practically every farmer in the crowd had been compelled to accept either offerings from the hand of charity, or seed-grain from the county or state. The crop prospects were good on the day of the celebration, but the anniversary of the hellish hot winds of the preceding July were nearing, and mingling with the smile of hope on every face were traces of a fear which could not be dispelled—fear that again the hot winds would come to finish the blasting and the blighting of hope in the hearts of men, even as the former scorching winds had blasted everything in all the fields. Feeble were the efforts of the people on the public program to appear blithe and gay. Even the songs of the children were subdued and almost melancholy. Few of the teams which had drawn people to the celebration were treated to a "feed" at noon, because only here and there was a farmer who had any other feed than grass for his team. Last Saturday I attended another "country" Fourth of July celebration in Nebraska. Marvelous transformation! A thousand people from the farms assembled at the George Clarke home, near the Woodville railroad station, at the cornering of Nance, Boone and Platte counties. There was a smile on every face, and the cheer of the voices of birds escaped the lips of happy children. The women were garbed in garments which Dame Fashion decrees. The men wore clothes of comfort and of latest cutting. The horses were fat as seals, and the mirror-like bodies of the automobiles reflected the faces of girlhood and young womanhood as beautiful as the dream-face of a goddess of Greece. Only 20 years from the reign of pinching poverty and fear to the era of plenty and peace. And when a talented young official of the farmers' organization proclaimed the goodness of God and the glory of the Nebraska farm I uttered a glad and reverent amen.

Loganberry Evolution.

From the Indianapolis News.

A few years ago loganberry vines in the northwest were turned up in quantities because the berry was too soft for shipping and the local market at harvest time was always glutted. Now the berry is one of the most popular of the small fruits in the same section, and its acreage is increasing each year An enterprising grower tried evaporating the loganberries in prune driers and the product sent to Aberdeen, S. D., brought a price of 23½ cents a pound. This price meant that a loganberry field yielding the average crop of five tons an acre would give a profit of nearly $400. The evaporated berries proved popular, and there were calls for more of them. Carloads of the berries were shipped, and instead of lowering prices, the quantities placed on the market seemed only to cause an increased demand During the season of 1913 the demand from Chicago and other centers for the berries could not be met. Buyers came to co-operative associations and even to the growers individually, offering unprecedented prices. The season's product, according to the Technical World, was sold at an average price of 23½ cents a pound. It was found that the juice content of the fresh berries ran as high as 80 per cent, exceeding the pound for pound yield of juice in the grape by 15 to 17 per cent. The juice was palatable and easily obtained. So the extracting and bottling of the juice was started on a small scale by a few growers with the co-operative associations giving over small lots of the fruit for trial. The Salem Fruit union, a co-operative association of farmers, bottled 2,500 gallons. The entire amount was sold with ease, and double the quantity could have been sold.

Dividends on Kindness.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Miss Florence Moberly, a trained nurse, faithfully attended Rev. Dr Batterson, and later was equally kind in nursing Mrs. Batterson Now comes the reward of $60,000 which is left to her by the will of the clergyman's wife. Not every act of kindness has a spot cash value of that extent, but it gets its pay large or small in some coin quite as good as gold.

A modest railroad brakeman aided an elderly lady from a train, and she was so pleased by the kindness that she told her son about him The son happened to be H H Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate, and the young railroader was lifted from one place to another until he became an important man in the business world. A street railway conductor in Philadelphia won a notable promotion and an increase of 200 per cent in pay for kindness to an old gentleman who was powerful enough to help the poor man who had helped him. A Philadelphia bank president says that the courtesy of a minor employe brought to his bank a new depositor with $100,000.

The rule of life is everywhere the same. All the rewards go to the men and women who do their work just a little bit better than is expected of them. Nobody pays anybody anything for an act of insolence or discourtesy or ill-service. "You may insult me, but don't insult a customer," said the head of a great business to an elevator boy who displayed more rudeness than tact to his unknown employer So that $60,000 reward for faithful nursing is only notable for the size of the appreciation, not in the quality of it.

FOR AMERICA FIRST

(The New York Tribune, a republican newspaper, recently attracted national attention with the following editorial in which it said that "the support of republicans for a president defending American interests must replace German democrats in the national alignment")

At the present moment a deliberate and far-reaching effort is being made to coerce the president of the United States in the discharge of his official duties by the use of political intrigue.

Thanks to Mr Bryan the democratic party has been divided, and the prospect of increasing division is used to emphasize the peril for Mr Wilson in the fututre if he continues to defend American rights and interest

To give point to this method German propagandist journals are already printing tabulations of the loss of democratic votes incident to Mr Wilson's performance of his duty This is an impudent and intolerable assertion of the doctrine that the president of the United States must think of the votes of those frankly devoted to alien interests when national honor and national interest are at stake

In this situation there is just one thing for republicans to do Their support of a president defending Americans must replace German democrats in the national alignment. The president must know and feel that at the water's edge all questions of partisan politics end

It would be better for the republican party to indorse Woodrow Wilson in 1916 than to permit the principle to be established that to defend American interests is to commit political suicide

Let no Americans let no republican be deceived by the far reaching and industrious manipulation now in progress If many republicans believe that the president is censurable for the moderation of his policy they should not play into German hands now by withholding support when Mr Wilson is being assailed for what he has done

In the moment of national peril German agents and intrigues divide the liberal party in Great Britain as they brew the whole administration into confusion The same thing has been attempted here In England the conservatives saved the day by sacrificing political interest to national welfare Republicans in this country can do no less

To support President Wilson in the defense of American lives and interests is not merely a patriotic duty it is peculiarly the duty of the republican party in view of its history and its traditions

Germany Ought to Understand

From the Chicago Post

The German press and German spokesmen declare themselves surprised that the United States is not satisfied with the latest German note They are unable to understand they say the resentment that seems to linger in American minds

Germany should be able to understand Less than a score of years ago two German missionaries were murdered in the Province of Shantung China As a consequence of this treacherous crime of a barbarous people Germany sent her fleet to the promontory of Shantung and seized Kiauchau. She defended her act as one of reparation designed to teach China a wholesome respect for the lives of German citizens. She retained Kiauchau until it was taken from her by the Japanese in the present war

If the death of two German missionaries so stirred the wrath of the German nation that nothing could satisfy it but the sending of the fleet to punish the murderers and to exact reparation by the seizure of territory why should Germany be surprised that the American nation is indignant over the slaying of 115 of its citizens, as innocent of wrong as the Teuton gospel messengers?

We have asked that Germany acknowledge the injury she has done us that she make such reparation as may be possible and that she give assurance the act will not be repeated Surely if Germany will recall why she went to Kiauchau she will be able to understand why we cannot acquiesce in her self-justification for the sinking of the Lusitania.

Before the war Germany averaged one practicing physician for each 2,000 inhabitants, the proportion being higher in some of the cities and lower in the rural districts whereas it is said that China averages one physician for about each 100,000 inhabitants

Famine In Mexico.

From the New York Herald

At a time when Consul General Hanna predicts that Mexico will soon be 'the hungriest spot on earth' the Red Cross finds it hopeless to attempt to relieve suffering under present conditions The one obstacle to extending aid to the victims of famine is the Mexicans themselves. In Belgium, prostrate under the heel of the invader, it was possible through American agents to organize the distribution of supplies received from abroad. But Mexico is still bent upon self-destruction, and its people are paying the penalties, through slow starvation, of continuous factional strife.

It may be that in time Mexico will come to its senses But it must learn through adversity and cruel privation The United States would gladly go to its help, as it has succored the Belgians in their distress. It has sought to ship food to interior points where conditions are desperate But the rival military authorities have destroyed the railroads and suspended all communication while thousands of helpless men and women remain foodless and without means of support

To leave Mexico to starve as a consequence of its own folly seems the height of inhumanity on the part of its neighbors But how is it to be helped? Relief is waiting. But so long as Mexico lacks the intelligence to assert itself against the disturbers of its peace and the authors of its ruin, it must endure its fate That is how other peoples have had to learn

The shortage of labor in the United States, which is becoming more pronounced as the war advances in Europe is likely to cause the employment of women in the iron and steel industry of this country as they do in Europe.

With the exception of Great Britain there is not a single European country which does not maintain a highly paid corps of women diplomatic agents in addition to its regular staff of embassadors, envoys and attaches.

A substantial number of policewomen are now on duty in various danger spots in London and elsewhere, giving their energies to the task of protecting women and children and assisting the regular police force in the prevention of crime.

Miss Margaretta W. Selser of Jenkintown, Pa., who graduates from Vassar college this month, will devote her life to an effort to discover what conditions in plant life tend toward a steady secretion of nectar in such plants as clover and sage.

The most vital thing to women are children, and the infant mortality is lowest in the world in three countries where women vote, New Zealand, Norway and Australia, where they lose 56, 67 and 68 babies out of every 1,000 respectively. In the German empire, where woman's place has been defined very strictly as with the church kitchen and children, they lose 192 babies out of every 1,000.

WOULD NEED 294 SUBMARINES

Germans Would Require That Number to Effectually Blockade All British Ports.

Assuming that the German submarines are based at Zeebrugge, the time required for the passage to and from blockading stations off the ports of Great Britain would be about four days. The average time necessary for overhauling at the base between trips may be estimated at six days, and the time which may be spent at sea between visits to the base cannot well exceed twenty days Consequently it would be impracticable to maintain more than about half of the total force of submarines on blockading stations

There are forty-nine ports on the coasts of England, Scotland and Wales which it would be necessary for the German submarines to blockade if all supplies are to be cut off.

An effective blockade of any port could scarcely be maintained in the face of defensive operations, which must be expected, with less than three submarines, and double that number would be none too many. If the minimum number of three boats be allowed for each port, the Germans would require at least 147 constantly on station to close all the ports of Great Britain; that is, allowing for the necessary passage time to and from the base and the essential overhauling period, the total force should be 294 submarines.—World's Work.

Too Much Trouble.

In Sunday school one afternoon the superintendent announced the hymn, "I Want to Be an Angel," and when the others began to sing, it was noticed that little Jessie was conspicuously silent.

"What is the matter, my dear?" kindly asked the teacher "Why don't you sing, 'I Want to Be an Angel?'"

"Because, Miss Mary," was the rather startling rejoinder of the child, "I don't want to be one."

"Don't want to be one!" exclaimed the horrified teacher. "Why do you say that?"

"Because," calmly answered Jessie, "they have to play on the harp and I have had trouble enough taking my piano lessons"

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Getting Back at Him.

An ostentatious member of a certain county council whose father is well known as a retired omnibus driver, was one day displaying a large seal he usually wears representing St. George and the dragon, and while several bystanders were expressing their admiration of it, its owner remarked in solemn tones:

"Aw—one of my ancestors is—aw—supposed to have killed the dragon—aw—don't you know?"

"Dear me," inquired on of his hearers, who knew something about him, "did he run over it?"—Tit-Bits.

Mammoth Cave in Idaho.

About twenty-eight miles from Boise City, Idaho, there has been discovered what is believed to be the largest cave in that part of the Northwest, and the largest in Idaho. It measures nearly half a mile in length, that is from its mouth to the lake. Of course it may be that long again, but owing to the lake it is impossible to get the exact length without a boat. The government is unaware of its existence, as it is located on unsurveyed land and in an exceedingly desolate region. Should the government become aware of its whereabouts it would immediatley claim it.

Elbert Bede Says:

Why are there so many mother-in-law jokes—a mother-in-law is no joke.

Some folks just can't get over a spite fence erected by a neighbor.

A physician finds it impossible to live up to the reputation his wife gives him.

Some folks think luck is against them just because they have to work for what they get.

What's the use of man being good when woman will be called his better half anyway.

Sometimes one person appears unusually strong because his associates are uuusually weak.

If there weren't a lot of suckers in this old world a lot of other people would starve to death.

One reason the wise keep their mouths shut is so they will get paid for imparting what they know.

The girl who graduates with highest honors quite frequently marries the most ignorant stick in the town.

"There is no place like home" applies just as forcibly to the man who finds it impossible to stay there.

A great number of folks holler hard luck when the same amount of energy properly directed would bring good luck.

The man honest enough to admit in an argument that his opponent has made a point, falls an easy prey to the book agent.

You can flatter a man or woman in five minutes into doing something that you couldn't drive him or her into doing in five hours.

Somehow or another we do not have any great respect for the man who makes a profession of reforming people. It seems like that should be a side line.

Some folks can't resist celebrating victory, even at the risk of informing the enemy of their position and of the fact that many are away from their guns.

An Oregon merchant went to a hospital to have his appendix removed and upon leaving the hospital married his nurse. With this thorn in his side he should not miss his other appendix

The man whose dying request was that all of the money he left be spent on his funeral, tried to beat the oft-made remark that you can't take your money with you when you leave this old world.

SHAME, MR. BRYAN

David S. Rose, mayor of Milwaukee for five terms and once one of Wm. Jennings Bryan's most ardent admirers and followers, in a recent speech in Chicago assailed Bryan as a "traitor and hypocrite." "The destructive ambition of Napoleon was only a soothing zephyr as against a tornado when compared with the insane desire for power that makes itself manifest in Bryan's every act," he said. "Old friends who stood at the battle front in all his campaigns he has discarded, principles he has thrown to the wind and with ingratitude and treachery he has rewarded the President for the exalted appointment given him."

Rose also paid his respects to "Billy" Sunday, characterizing the evangelist as "the monstrosity that fattens like maggots in the ulcers of society, capitalizing ignorance and superstition and growing rich from blasphemy."

RETIRED FARMERS

The Record editor has never been able to coincide with a view often expressed that a town having a considerable number of retired farmers will be retarded in its growth by such a condition. With very few exceptions every farmer moving to Kanawha has erected a new house; this furnishes more work and makes more business for business men; every new residence and additional family into town means more taxes paid into the town treasury each year. Our town has reached the limit of population unless new houses are built. We find that the retired farmers can afford, and are anxious to have all modern improvements. A town having modern conveniences, good churches and schools, and local and state laws properly enforced will attract a desirable class of retired farmers, and we are perfectly willing to take our chances with more of that class rather than with the undesirable Dago population that is attracted to towns by factories. The most costly residences in Kanawha have been erected by retired farmers; we hope to see many more of the same kind.—Kanawha Record.

ALONG CAME RUTH

"Oh dear," sighed the head of the luncheon committee, as she came up to Ruth the day before the picnic was to be held, 'I simply don't know what quantities of anything to buy for that picnic tomorrow, I've never had anything of this kind to do before; and I'm all at sea."

"Why, my dear Mrs. Smythe, I believe I can help you," replied Ruth, "I cut something along that line out of a newspaper last week, and I think I have it in my bag now. Let me see. Yes, here it is. I'll give it to you. You see it says that one medium sized loaf of bread will cut in twenty slices for sandwiches; one medium layer cake will serve twenty; one gallon of ice cream will serve twenty; three quarts of wine jelly will serve forty; a ten pound turkey or twelve pounds of chicken, with fifteen stalks of celery, will make salad for fifty people; two quarts of bulk oysters will make a very large pan of escalloped oysters; and one pound of coffee will serve thirty-five."

"Oh Ruth, you will never know how grateful I am," enthused Mrs. Smythe, "I can buy now with ease."

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simpliest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

ONE AD GETS $1,200,000 IN SALES

The Chevrolet Motor Co. sprung a surprise on the motor world, Sunday, Jue 6, in the San Francisco Examiner. A new car was announced in a double page spread. The distributors pinned all their faith to the Examiner. Here is what happened: In less than six days orders were booked for more than 2,000 automobiles. The distributors were astounded. The manufacturers were astounded. This one advertisement in the San Francisco Examiner sold in six days more automobiles than many of the largest distributors sell in an entire season. It yielded sales to the amazing total of $1,200,000.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run-down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

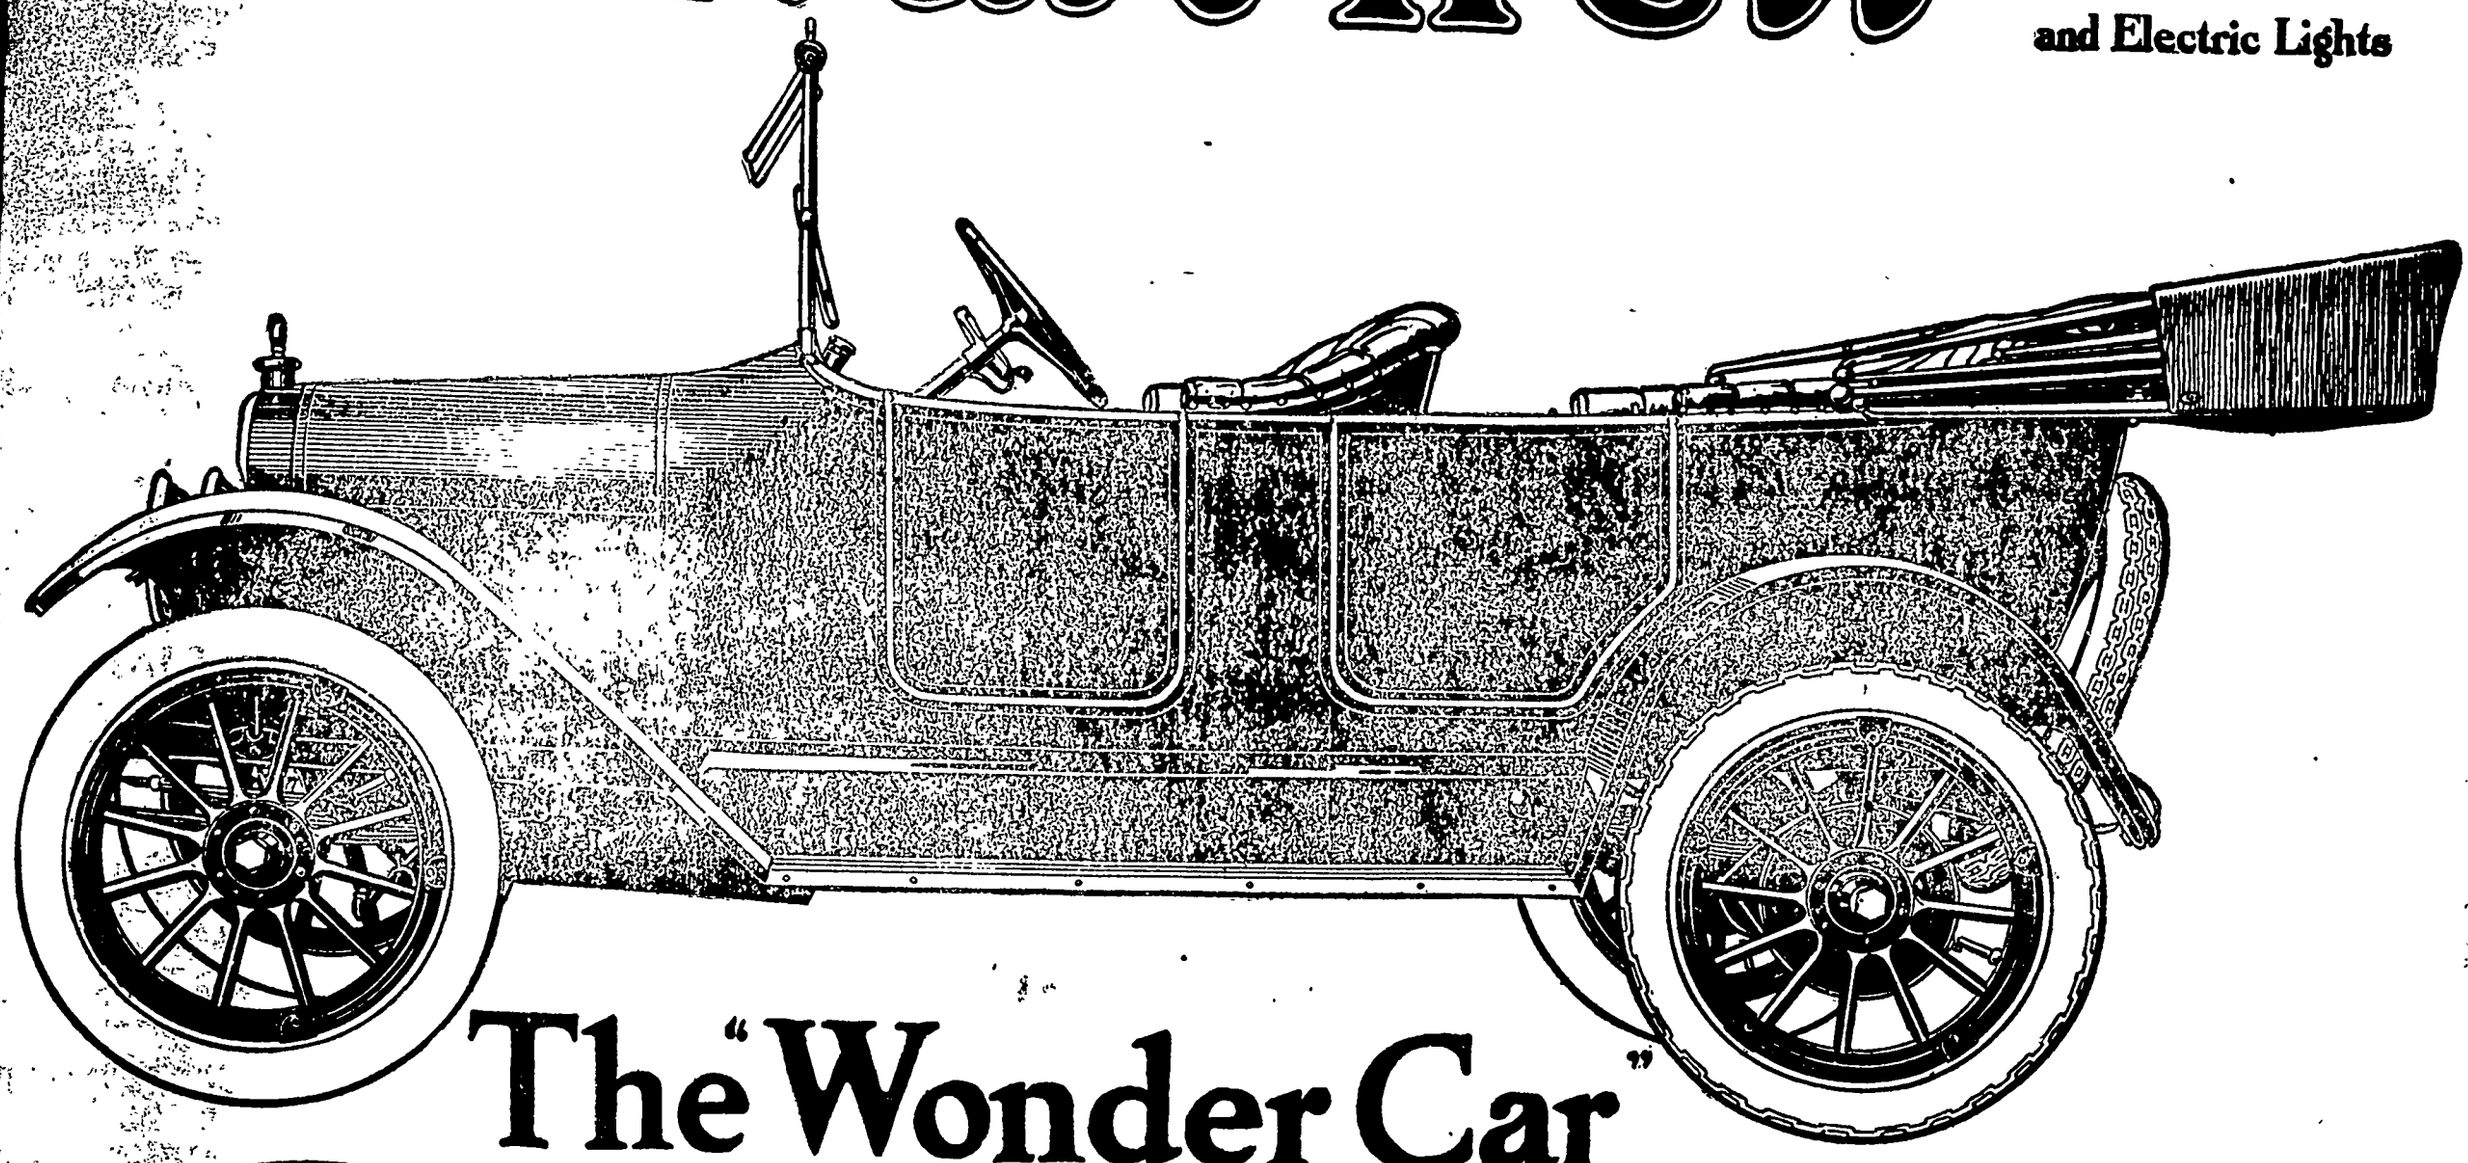
$655

Including Electric Starter and Electric Lights



The "Wonder Car"

All Low "First-Cost" Records Broken

The new 1916 Maxwell shatters all low "first-cost" records for a real automobile. Think of it—a full 5-passenger car—an absolutely complete car, with electric starter, electric lights, high-tension magneto, and every refinement—a luxurious car—a beautiful car—a powerful 50-mile-an-hour-car,—yet a light-weight real economy car—for $655.

All Low "After-Cost" Records Broken

The "first cost" of an automobile is a big consideration to any sane man, but the "after cost" is an even bigger consideration to any man who wants to remain sane in his automobile investment.

The "after cost" or upkeep is what a car costs you to maintain, run, and enjoy, after you have bought it, and it is mighty hard to enjoy an automobile if it costs you too much to run.

The Maxwell has lowered all economy records for:

1st —Miles per set of tires
2nd—Miles per gallon of gasoline
3rd —Miles per quart of lubricating oil
4th—Miles lowest year-in-and-out repair bills

1916 Maxwell High-Priced-Car Features, all included for $655

- Electric Starter and Electric Lights
- Demountable Rims
- High-tension Magneto
- "One-man" Mohair Top
- New Stream-line Design
- Double Ventilating Windshield, (clear vision and rain-proof)
- Electric Horn
- Wider Front and Rear Seats
- Aluminum Transmission Housing
- Handsome Rounded Radiator and Hood
- Robe Rail with back of front seat leather covered
- Linoleum covered running boards and floor-boards
- Automatic Tell-tale Oil Gauge
- Heat-treated, Tested Steel Throughout
- Easy Riding and Marvelous Flexibility
- Unusual power on hills and in sand
- Ability to hold the road at high speed
- Improved Instrument Board with all instruments set flush

Every feature and every refinement of cars that sell at twice its price

Darwin P Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance company, and also of the Safety First Federation of America, in accepting the presidency of the latter body, said: "The old way of crossing a street will no longer do; it is dangerous. A dog no longer runs against or under an automobile, as he did when they first first appeared. He has changed his whole attitude toward street traffic. The average man has not changed. * * * On the other hand, the traffic as against the pedestrian has grown aggressive and careless." The federation was organized a few weeks ago by a convention attended by delegates from 14 states.

From the foundation of the Russian empire at Moscow, about 1500, says Dr. Nansen, in his recent book, entitled, "Through Siberia, the Land of the Future." Russia has grown at the average rate of 55 square miles a day, or 20,000 square miles a year—a territorial increase that is almost without parallel. During the first three centuries of Russian control of Siberia, Dr Nansen observes, only 3,000,000 emigrants went to Siberia from Russia but the great empire has at last awakened to a knowledge of the riches of its immense Asiatic possessions and from 1905 to 1914 as many immigrants settled in Siberia as during the entire 300 years preceding

PURCHASE LIQUOR IN DES MOINES POLICE WILL RECORD "CRIME"

Use Card Index System to Make History of Every Shipment.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 7.—If a Des Moines man sends to a point outside of Iowa for liquor and has it shipped to him, he may be sure that his name will immediately appear on police records. There may never be any outward indication that he has attained to the indignity of police notice; he may never be trailed by a detective in a big black hat pulled over his eyes; mysterious men may never hang around his home at night, and uniformed officers he meets on the street may not order him to let them smell his breath.

How He'll Get Your Number.

Nevertheless you will be marked by the police, so marked that a year from today a nosey police officer may inspect an indexed box of cards and discover that on a certain date he had a pint of Old Squirrel whisky shipped to him by American express, that two weeks later he changed his brand and began buying Rattlesnake whisky at St. Joe instead of Omaha, and so on. Chief Crawford announced the establishment of this new department of police this morning. It will be in charge of U. L. Crawford, son of the chief, and he will be fitted up with a private office, a desk of his own and a big safe in which to keep the records.

BANK ROBBER'S ESCAPE BEFUDDLES ALL DETECTIVES

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 7.—The half dozen or more sleuths working on the Cedar Rapids National bank robbery are as far from a clew as when they began to arrive a few hours after Teller Leo Perrin was compelled at the point of a gun to open the vault and allow the daring robber to fill his pockets with $20,000 in bills.

The gentleman who committed the deed was of a fastidious type, as he completely disdained the numerous bags of silver setting on the floor in the vault and which he might have had for the gathering up.

The currency taken was in $20, $10 and $5 bills.

It is now the opinion of most of the officers on the case that the bandit succeeded in reaching the depot unnoticed and left Cedar Rapids on one of the many trains leaving the city within a few minutes after the robbery occurred.

Teller Leo Perrin has been quizzed by the sleuths, as well as by bank and city officials, and his story of what took place is perfectly straightforward and leaves not a single clew to indicate in what direction to look for the guilty party.

Gus Patek, manager of the Burns detective agency for the state of Iowa, has arrived from Des Moines and will have charge of the case as far as the Burns agency is concerned. Agents from Attorney General Cosson's office are also working incessantly to clear up the case.

The Cedar Rapids National bank business is moving as though nothing out of the ordinary had occurred. Cashier Ferman states that the bank carries $200,000 burglary insurance, which protects it against any loss.

The bankers of the city report numerous withdrawals of small saving accounts by timid depositors, due to the robbery.

NOW IS TIME TO CHOOSE BEST SEED CORN

Ames, Ia., Aug. 7.—Iowa corn growers are advised to search their corn cribs now for the best seed ears that can be found there. The advice is given by the farm crops authorities at Iowa State college. They do not commend the selection of seed in this way under normal conditions, but this year is abnormal. There is serious danger that the growing crop of corn will not furnish good seed ears for next spring's planting, so selection of good seed ears from the 1914 crop is recommended as a sort of seed insurance for 1916.

"To make sure of good seed," says Prof. H D. Hughes, of the college, "it would be well to go to the cribs now and pick out 100 or so good ears and test them for germination by taking a number of kernels from each ear and planting them in moist soil or sand If the seed shows good, strong germination, enough of the best ears may be put away and tested again later

"Repeated tests have shown that seed corn picked in the field in the fall before heavy frost gives the best yield If seed with high germination can be secured in that way, of course the corn picked from the crib is to be discarded But, to make sure, the best seed ears should be picked from the crib. They are quite uniformly good in germination."

SEVERAL POLITICAL BEES BUZZ IN THE FIFTIETH

Alta, Ia., Aug 7.—Judge A. D. Baille, of Storm Lake, will in all probability announce his candidacy to succeed Hon. J H Allen as senator from the Fiftieth Iowa district within a few days. The district is composed of Buena Vista, Pocahontas and Humboldt counties, and these counties comprise also a part of the Fourteenth judicial district, which Judge Baille served for many years, hence he has a wide acquaintance in the district. Representative Murray of Buena Vista county, has announced his candidacy for the same place, and ex-Speaker Cunningham, also of this county, is considering entering the race. Representative Murray will not be a candidate to succeed himself, and Guy Roberts, of Marathon, who made an unsuccessful race two years ago, is out for the office.

EX-SHERIFF WILL TAKE JOB OF SPECIAL AGENT

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 7.—O. O. Rock, of Logan, will report for duty next Monday as special agent to work under the attorney general. He will be the third special agent appointed. Representative C. L. Anderson, of Montgomery county, who backed the special agent bill in the house in the Thirty-sixth general assembly, has arrived in Des Moines. He was greatly pleased with the success of the special agents in rounding up the North Liberty bank robbers.

EXPECT PLEA OF GUILTY FROM NORTH LIBERTY ROBBERS

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 6.—Chief Miller arrived here yesterday afternoon with the accused North Liberty bank bandits, Will Loomis and Will Smith. The police allege Smith corroborated Loomis' confession.

The men waived examination and were bound over in $10.000 bonds apiece. They were taken to jail.

The police expect them to reaffirm their alleged confessions and plead guilty today, and be sentenced.

PERRIN TELLS STORY OF DARING ROBBERY; NO CLEW YET FOUND

Bank Teller Says Robber Forced Him to Open Vault and Hand Out Currency.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 7.—The amount secured by the bandit who robbed the Cedar Rapids National bank was $21,000, all of which was in currency ranging from $5 to $100 bills. Teller Leo L. Perrin, who completely collapsed after the robbery and was taken to a hospital, has so far regained his composure that he can give a fairly clear description of the bandit and of what happened immediately before and during the time he was in the bank. Perrin's own story is as follows:

"After entering the bank at about 6:55 o'clock I removed my coat and hat and opened the outer vault door, the inner grating and door and also the currency vault door, taking out two bundles of bills, which I carried into my teller's cage, locking the vault, inner gate and door, but leaving the large outer vault door ajar. After going over the bundles in hand, looking for a small shortage which developed in closing my previous day's balance, but which was found in counting the two packages mentioned, I turned around and saw a man standing in the aisle with a revolver pointed at my head. 'Open up those doors, and be quick about it,' he ordered. I walked into the vault, closely followed by the robber, and taking the keys from my pocket unlocked the two barred doors leading to the currency vault. As I worked he kept close to me and the muzzle of the revolver almost touched my head all the time. When we reached the inner vault he ordered me to unlock the door to the currency safe.

Tried to Stall.

"I started to work the combination and, thinking every second that someone would certainly come in, I turned the knob the wrong way and made no attempt to work the combination at first. He noticed this, and, pressing the barrel of the gun against my side, said: 'You open that door and do it damn quick or you'll get what a man got in the Chicago bank a few days ago—remember that.' I then opened the vault door, reached in, secured a package containing $5,000 in $100 bills and handed it to the man. I thought all the time that someone would certainly come and felt certain that the fellow could never get out of the bank with the money. It was time for the men who worked in the bank to come, and I expected them in at any instant. He placed this package in the side pocket of his coat and without waiting for me to get him any more reached into the vault and began taking out the packages of money He placed these in the outside pockets of the long coat he was wearing, and some he placed in large pockets which he had evidently sewed in the lining of his undercoat

Lights Went Out.

"While he was taking the money out of the vault and before his pockets were entirely filled, the lights suddenly went out. He had been holding the muzzle of the revolver against my side all the time he was working, and when the lights went out he gave a sudden start and pressed the muzzle into my side. I though sure he was going to shoot."

The Burns detective agency men, as well as local and state officers, are working on the case, with very little given them as a clue from which to start their investigations.

The whole procedure took place within less than five minutes and while two janitors were in the room cleaning up the offices, which are within less than 50 feet of the vault where the robbery occurred

Perrin, as paying teller at the bank, has charge of sending currency to the smaller banks throughout the state which are supplied by the Cedar Rapids National In order to get the money away on early trains, Perrin is the first man to reach the bank, usually arriving at the building shortly before 7 o'clock a. m.

When he reached the bank yesterday, he entered through the side door to the banking room, which was locked, as usual.

The time lock on the vault and safe door is set to open at 6:45 a. m Perrin had opened the outer door to the vault, had entered the vault and operated the combination lock on the inner door Just as he swung the heavy steel door open, a man stepped in front of him, and pointing a revolver at his head, ordered him to unlock the barred gate which leads to the money vault

BEER CENSOR PLAN TO BE APPLIED IN MASON CITY

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 7—One hundred and nineteen barrels of beer were rolled out into the commons at the court house yesterday, carted to depots and express offices and is to be shipped to St. Paul and Minneapolis breweries. City officials and a half dozen lawyers representing railroads, express offices, breweries and consignees entered into an agreement that this should be done. It was further agreed that hereafter a censor should be appointed to determine on all shipments, whether lawful or illegal and beer shipped into this city hereafter can only go to those entitled to it While some persons don't like the terms of settlement, the railroad men and express offices, compelled to handle it, are more than satisfied with the agreement entered into. It will relieve them of all responsibility in the matter after the goods are received here. None will be delivered whatever to customers until the sanction of the censor is received The promised long drawn out litigation has been brought to a very satisfactory close.

FAMOUS PREACHER WILL SPEAK AT BIRTHPLACE

Missouri Valley, Ia., Aug 7 The Rev. Newell Dwight Hills, born on the farm in Harrison county, educated in the Magnolia high school and in the Northwest university and afterward filling the pulpit in Central Music hall in Chicago, made vacant by the death of Prof. David Swing, and later the successor of Lyman Abbott and Henry Ward Beecher in the Plymouth church, Brooklyn, N Y., will be the center of attraction at the chautauqua to be held at Missouri Valley, August 8 to 16, inclusive.

SKULL FRACTURED WHEN MAN LEAPS FOR TRAIN

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 5.—An unknown man, apparently about 35 years old, had his skull fractured while attempting to board a moving train here yesterday afternoon.

JOYCE—Josephine Tweed, aged 6 years, daughter of Peter Tweed, lighted a match while alone in the house and set fire to her clothing She died a few hours later.

BILLY SUNDAY'S TOWN TO SEND DELEGATION OVER TO OMAHA SOON

May Take Two Trains to Carry Faithful to Preaching Exhibition.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 6.—A special train will be run from Des Moines to Omaha on Saturday, September 11, to carry the friends and converts of "Billy" Sunday, who wish to hear him again. Reservations will be made for a large delegation from Des Moines and from the interest which is being evinced in the trip it is not unlikely that two trains will be required to carry all who wish to go. The Des Moines ushers will usher at one of the services on Sunday. The train will leave Omaha for Des Moines late Sunday night.

LIQUOR LAW TEST CASE JURY REFUSES TO WORK

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 5.—The spectacle of a jury being called to hear a case and then refuse to return a verdict, is not common, but it comes once in a while. Yesterday a jury was called in the justice court to listen to the evidence in the beer seizure case which has attracted state wide attention. It proved to be a sparring match between the six attorneys representing the defendants and the county attorney.

Justice Kimball asked the defendants to introduce evidence to show reason why the property should not be confiscated. They refused to introduce evidence until the state had offered what they had. The state held back and had nothing to offer Attorneys for the defendants addressed the jury calling attention to the spectacle presented by the state and plead for the release of the 119 barrels which was seized from the two express companies' offices and the two railroad depots. The county attorney resisted in an argument. The justice looked through all the books at his command and he could not see how he was able to instruct or enlighten the jury and they retired for deliberations. They finally decided that there being no evidence it was impossible for them to decide on any question and they so informed the court and were dismissed. This afternoon six lawyers, the chief of police and captain, the justice, and some more dignitaries are in conference hoping to adjust matters so that there will be no further test of the new prohibitory law of Iowa.

MOST FARMERS IN WESTERN IOWA SHOULD BE HAPPY

Logan, Ia., Aug. 6.—Though the farmers of Harrison county have the blues pretty bad at the present time, it might be worse True, here and there, a farmer may be found that has been hard hit by hail and destructive wind and rain storms and high waters, the fruit crop is far from a failure, a good yield of oats is being reported, and many farmers have harvested a pretty fair crop of wheat

Sidney Pitt, an experienced and successful farmer of Cass township, has observed in Harrison and other counties in western Iowa splendid fields of corn where not affected by high water, and he is thoroughly of the opinion that if the fall is late there will be a fair corn crop in Harrison county

Bernard Smith, the champion corn grower of western Iowa, in 1914, is again in the corn contest and his corn is reported as looking fine and full of promise at the present time, regardless of the unfavorable condition of the season.

WOMEN VOTE ON PAVING QUESTION AT IDA GROVE

Ida Grove, Ia., Aug 6.—Ida Grove held an exciting special election yesterday and after the votes had been counted the winning side found that they had but one vote to the good Several weeks ago the city passed a resolution of necessity for paving certain streets in the city, and the matter of who should pave the alleys and intersection streets, which would cost about $15,000, the property owners or city, was then placed before the people in a special election to be held August 2. Under the law the women were entitled to a vote, and a surprise was sprung when the polls were opened to find a woman waiting to vote. She was given the preference over several men who were also waiting She was the wife of a prominent citizen and informed the judges that she voted for the resolution. TRIPLE TRAGEDY END OF ALLEGED ILLICIT LOVE

Chicago, Aug. 3.—George H. Jones, 48 years old, a garage owner, late Monday entered the home of his brother-in-law and shot to death his wife, her sister and her brother and tried to slay his own son. He then entered his automobile, which he had left standing outside, drove home a young woman companion over whom he had had trouble with his wife and then tried to commit suicide.

Jones had quarreled with his wife about the attentions he is said to have paid Miss Margaret Bittner, 21 years old. Mrs. Jones had gone to live with her brother and had brought suit for divorce and to prevent her husband from disposing of his property to her detriment. When served with notice of the suit, Jones went to the home of his brotherinlaw, John Cosgrove, and flashed the court writ before his wife.

Before she could speak he shot her down. As Cosgrove and his sister, Miss Catherine Cosgrove, tried to intercede, he turned on them. They fled and he shot them in the back. His son, Harry, 13 years old, escaped by fleeing down an alley. A crowd, attracted by the shots, tried to capture Jones, but failed.

Miss Bittner was taken into custody as a witness. She said she did not know Jones intended to kill anyone when she accompanied him to see his wife.

Jones died of his self inflicted wounds this morning.

CARRANZA FILES AP

Washington, Aug 9 The M situation moved forward today two important developments. C Carranza signified his willingn meet his adversaries in a peace ference and an authoritative anno ment was made of the view which the United States is appro the problem in the Pan American ference.

The position of the United was officially stated as follows:

"That neither Carranza nor other military faction in Me is in control of the country or be considered as triumphant in republic.

"That the real purpose of revolution was accomplished a ago, when Huerta was overthr and that the strife which has tinued since has been over tional differences and has not in reality a revolution.

"That it considers General V while financially weakened, still an active element in Mexican fairs, who must be reckoned in an adjustment.

"That the so-called cientifico not enter into the problem, bec it is considered that the overth of Huerta disposed of that ment.

"That the great portion of M ico is not at peace, as Gen Carranza claims, because fighti continues in many sections fr Tehauntepec to the Rio Gra and from Vera Cruz to Mazat

"That the first problem to solved in restoration of peace i find for provisional president man who represents the cause the original revolution agai Huerta, but who does not nec sarily represent any of the fact now at war."

This outline is the first authori statement of the basis upon whic United States is proceeding.

Carranza Asks Recognition.

General Carranza's brief, filed the state department by his Am counsel, Charles A. Douglas, pot proposes a peace conference wit adversaries, but practically asks re nition.

It was made clear today that United States, while willing to m tain claims of the rival leaders, as presented in the brief filed on half of General Carranza, does no cept the declaration of any of the itary leaders that they are so d nant as to insure peace in M should they be recognized.

Carranza, it is held, cannot be sidered in control of the situation more than other leaders, even th he may hold more territory, bec Villa's forces and Zapata's bands are operating.

The Latin American diplomats said to share the view that a g government can be established on selecting a man who represents cause of the original revolution a Huerta and one upon whom the ers now at war could unite

Carranza Hard to Handle.

The task immediately at hand pursuade Generals Carranza, Villa Zapata and the influential follower each to accept in good faith the ing hand the several American ernments offer to lend. No attem made to conceal the view that Ge Carranza may prove the se stumbling block. That he intend insist on recognition for his orga tion is well established by the information received by the state partment. An effort will be made said today, to convince him of futility of holding out against the allied governments once they have termined to clean up Mexico.

Won't Humiliate Him.

It was explained today that th no desire to humiliate General ranza or any of the other fac leaders.

The allied governments do not look the good work Carranza has thought they regard much of it misdirected but they are of the op that there is only one way to about peace in the country and th to eliminate all the present bell ents.

As a result of the two confer that have been held a final appe the revolutionary leaders will sh be sent out. There is some doub to whether this appeal will be by each of the seven nations partic ing in the conference or whether nation will make its own appeal. were intimations today that the

The brief, submitted by Charl Douglas, General Carranza's Amer consul, sets forth the formal sugge of a peace conference in the follo language:

"We have in Washington Mr. dondo, in the character of a special resentative of the constitutionalist ernment, and at this time, Mr. Cab a member of Mr. Carranza's cabin here. They are men of fine ability excellent character and are anxio serve their country in the highes best sense. Either, or both of th am assured, will be glad to confer any element of the Mexican p with a view to furthering the con interest, the peace and the welfa the nation.

Opposed to Taglo.

The proposal to restore the con tional succession to the presi where it was broken by the dea Madero, by elevating Vasquez Ta member of the Madero cabinet, t office of provisional president, the says, would defeat the aims of the olution.

"The plan of the constitutionali says the brief, "and it is now we der way, is to make the principl the revolution effective as war; ures by military leaders during the tra constitutional period, and the have the congress ratify them—t late them into law."

ITALIAN SUBMARINE SUNK BY AUSTRIANS

Plunger Sinks Another In Engagement Off Pelagosa In Adriatic Sea.

Paris, Aug. 9.—The Italian submarine Nereido, is reported to have been sunk in an encounter with an Austrian submarine off the Island of Pelagosa in the Adriatic sea, according to a special dispatch from Rome.

The Nereide which was built in 1913, was 134 feet long, with a beam of 14 feet and displacement of 315 tons gross. Her peace time complement was 17 men.

POLES WELCOMED GERMAN INVADERS

Berlin, (Via London), Aug. 9.—The German troops were welcomed to undamaged Warsaw as liberators, according to the report forwarded to Berlin by Kurt Aram, a special correspondent of the Lokal Anzeiger. Telegraphing under date of August 5, Aram places emphasis on the statement that the city was not evacuated without a conflict. The forts were protected by barbed wire, trenches, pitfalls and mines against infantry attacks. The city is not mentioned as having been damaged.

The inhabitants of the Polish capital, the correspondent says, filled the streets and welcomed the in marching troops with every sign of real enthusiasm and rejoicing. The streets were richly beflagged. The Polish peasants who long had been restrained in the city began leaving early in the morning for their farms, driving their live stock and conveying their household effects. They greeted the Germans with tears.

The Warsaw correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt confirms the report that the German troops met with a joyous reception. The streets, he says, were filled with Poles, Jews, Germans and Russians, who waved their hats joyfully to the German soldiers. Many of the inhabitants even were standing in the vicinity of the castle, although an infantry battle with the Russians was proceeding to the east of the building.

The street cars were running as usual, the correspondent said, and almost all the shops were opened. Very little damage had been done in the city proper. The earthworks about the forts show the German artillery made many fair hits.

The correspondent at Ivangorod, of the Lokal Anzeiger points out the occupation of that fortress in itself is less important than the fact that it makes possible an important increase of concentric pressure on the Russian troops in South Poland. The offensive of the armies of Arch Duke Joseph Ferdinand and Field Marshal Von Mackensen, he adds, continues northward, and the effect on the yet unchanged east Galician front is likely soon to make itself felt.

LYNCHING BEE TAKES ON AIR OF CARNIVAL

Starkville, Miss., Aug. 7.—Peter Boen and Jim Scales, negroes, convicted of killing another negro, were hanged in public here, the gallows being built in a natural amphitheater which afforded the crowd of several thousand, including many women, an unobstructed view of the hanging. At the request of the doomed men the crowd sang the hymn, "There Is a Land of Pure Delight," just before the traps were sprung. Soft drink and candy venders sold their wares among the crowd while it waited for the execution.

BE PROUD, YOUNG PAPA, EVEN IF IT'S ONLY A GIRL

Portland, Ore., Aug. 7.—There are more boy babies than girl babies after a great war because underfed and weakened parents are likely to produce male offspring, Dr. R. Kendrick Smith, of Boston, told the American Osteopathic association in convention here today.

"It seems," he said, "that great vitality is necessary when female offspring are born."

GENERAL TRACY, FORMER CABINET OFFICER, DIES

New York, Aug. 7.—Gen. Benjamin F. Tracy, who was President Harrison's secretary of the navy, died of paralysis here yesterday in his 85th year, after a period of unconsciousness lasting nine days.

General Tracy's death occurred shortly after 3:30 p. m., and followed a fight for life that amazed his physicians.

The illness which resulted in his death was induced, it was believed, by worry incident to his having been detained a long while on a railroad journey from Ithaca, N. Y., to this city, because of a heavy rain storm and several washouts.

TWO OIL SHIPS HELD.

Growing Hostility of Swedes Toward Russia Intensified By Recent Victories of Central Powers In Poland, Leads London to Fear Quiescent Scandinavian Power Soon May Throw Her Strength to Side of Austro-German Alliance—Diplomatic Negotiations With Rumania, Bulgaria, Serbia and Greece Are Being Pressed to Avert Impending Crisis.

EXPECT NEW DRIVE AGAINST ANGLO-FRENCH

Million Teutonic Troops Reported to Be Moving Westward at Rate of 90,000 Per Day, Though Kaiser's Forces Are Pounding Forward In Russia With Renewed Burst of Energy In Terrific Endeavor to Completely Envelop Grand Duke's Army Fleeing From Warsaw—Kovno, Fortified Point on New Defense Line Now Being Evacuated, Copenhagen Reports.

London, Aug. 7.—"Sweden's decision to remain neutral is as firm as ever," was the reply today of the Swedish minister in London, Count Wrangel to rumors published in London newspapers this morning of the possible participation of the Scandinavian kingdom in the war.

"There is no foundation for the rumors," the minister said, "and the suggestion that Sweden contemplates action for recovery of Finland in absurd. Premier Sazonoff's speech in the Russian Duma on Sunday clearly indicates the relations between Sweden and Russia are of the most friendly nature."

London, Aug. 7.—Holding the brigeheads at Warsaw over the Vistula river, the most formidable military obstacle in eastern Europe, Germany and Austria-Hungary, having conquered the river line and with it invaded Russian territory for an average depth of 100 miles along a front from the Baltic to Bukowina, are now throwing their forces forward in an endeavor to accomplish what Russia's allies have so feared—the compete envelopment of the Russian armies.

The British press, basing its opinions on Petrograd dispatches and the lack of reports to the contrary from either Berlin or Vienna, is inclined to the view that the forces of Grand Duke Nicholas retired from Warsaw virtually intact; but there is an increasing disposition not to minimize the seriousness of the situation as it still exists, and the anxiety of the quadruple powers seems to be manifested in renewed pressure to bring the Balkan states in line on the side of the entente powers.

Quiescent Sweden is now restless and even so conservative a newspaper as the London Morning Post finds cause for comment in Sweden's growing hostility to Russia as stimulated by German success in Poland.

Greece Won't Yield.

Whether the present Balkan negotiations will be more fruitful from the entente standpoint than were previous attempts to align these states against Germany and Turkey, is debatable, especially so as to Greece, according to an Athens dispatch quoting Premier Gounaris, refuses to consider the relinquishing of any territory to Bulgaria, a concession which might clear the situation.

The London Morning Post declares the attitude of Sweden towards Russia and the latter's allies for some time past has revealed elements of a disquieting character.

"Emboldened by recent German successes," the newspaper says, "the latent hostility of Sweden, which has never forgiven the loss of Finland, has become strongly developed. Considerable preparations for warlike contingencies have been made in north Sweden and the Swedish army is fully mobilized. If Sweden persists in her unfriendly attitude toward Russia she may rapidly drift into a war which would inevitably be a great obstacle to her future progress."

The Times, in a long analysis of the Swedish situation, says the war party has lost its importance and the people general accept neutrality as the wisest course.

Though still holding Novogeorgievsk, the whole Russian garrison remains at Bay. Thus the Russian armies not only are menaced back of the Warsaw salient, from which it is assumed they were not entirely clear before heavy German forces broke across the Vistula to the southeast of Warsaw, but a larger and more formidable envelopping movement has taken definite form, being to effect a pair of pincers aiming at Dvinsk, in the north, and at Brest-Litovsk, in the south, and superimposed on a smaller pair which sought and still seeks to crush the Russian forces in and around Warsaw.

Evacuating Kovno.

There is the chance that the grip of the smaller pair may not be effective, and it will take some time to determine whether the more ambitious movement succeeds.

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Copenhagen says:

"The Russians are evacuating Kovno. The governor and his staff and the banks have gone. The population has been leaving for the past week."

Kovno, a fortress of the first class, is the capital of the government of the same name in northwest Russia. It has been stated that Kovno was to form the northern head of the new Russian line of Kovno, Grodno and Brest-Litovsk. The city has a population of 75,000 to 100,000.

Rains Hamper Retreat.

Austrian army headquarters reports the position of the retreating Russians between the Vistula and the Bug rivers has grown more precarious as a result of heavy rains of the past few days.

The marshes in their rear, they say, hold the rising water, confining the movements of troops exclusively to a few roads. The retreat, therefore, is encountering increased difficulties.

The Russians, it is said, are sacrificing men recklessly trying to retard the German and Austrian advance through counter attacks, which, however, invariably are unsuccessful.

The impression there is that many prisoners will fall into the hands of the Teutons before the Russians reach their new positions.

Anticipate Big Drive.

Meantime comes an unconfirmed report that 1,000,000 German troops are being prepared to move westward at the rate of 90,000 per day. At that rate it would take them a little more than 10 days to mass on the Anglo-French front, where it is anticipated another drive will be undertaken inside of two weeks, if these reports are correct.

The French war office this afternoon gave out a statement on the progress of hostilities in France, reading:

"In the western section of the Argonne there has been a continuance of the very spirited fighting with grenades and bombs. An attack of the enemy in the vicinity of Hill No. 213 has been repulsed.

"In Lorraine a strong German reconnaissance has been dispersed by our fire at a point not far from Leintrey.

"In the Vosges there has been nothing to report."

WARSAW STRIPPED CLEAN; RUSSIANS HARD PRESSED

Berlin, (via London), Aug. 7.—The forts of Warsaw have fallen virtually undamaged into the hands of the Germans, according to information reaching here. The defenses of Ivangorod, however, were destroyed by the Russians before their retirement. The garrisons of the two fortresses appear to have completed the evacuation without material loss and to have carried away a large part of the stores and munitions of war accumulated in Warsaw for the armies in Poland.

Some disappointment is expressed among the German people at the failure of the Teutonic forces to make an imposing capture of prisoners and guns in Warsaw, but military experts here do not share this feeling. They point out as the real significance of the capture of the two fortresses that the Russians thereby have lost the fortified base of operations which gave them such immense advantage in the earlier movements in Poland and that this advantage now has been transferred to the Germans, who can utilize it either for defensive strategy or to facilitate a further offensive campaign against the Russian army.

If prisoners and guns are desired, there is still a chance of making a considerable capture, the military writers say, for the Russians, crowded within the long salient running out to the fortress of Novogeorgievsk, are in a precarious position. With German armies on three sides, the mouth of the sack from which they must emerge is scarcely a dozen miles wide and from the north General Von Gallwitz's army has broken through the defensive lines and is pressing irresistably down toward the Narew river. No indications of an evacuation of Novogeorgievsk by the Russians have been received here, and Grand Duke Nicholas, commander in chief of the Russian armies, perhaps may intend to leave the garrison in this fortress, which is really stronger and more important than Warsaw, to stand a siege.

The Russians still hold the eastern bank of the Vistula at Warsaw and command the crossing here, which is so important to facilitating the orderly retreat by the railroads which converge at this point.

No details of the capture of Warsaw beyond the meager official reports, have been received here. A number of German war correspondents arrived in the vicinity of the Polish capital a few days ago, but have not yet been able to send any dispatches.

JERSEY SUFFRAGETS TO USE TORCH OF VICTORY

New York, Aug. 7.—The Woman's Political union planned elaborate ceremonies today for passing on to New Jersey the "torch of victory," which has been on a tour throughout New York state in the suffrage campaign for the ballot. A party of New York suffragets, headed by Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, had planned to meet the New Jersey suffragets on board tug boats in the middle of the Hudson river and to deliver to them the torch which was to be accepted by Mrs. Minn C. Van Winkle, of Newark. The emblem will be carried around New Jersey in a series of automobile runs and will be displayed at suffrage meetings.

Ask For Guarantee That Sovereignty Will Not Be Permanently Impaired.

Washington, Aug. 9.—Solon Menos, the Haitien minister, called today at the state department and urged the necessity of giving some definite assurance to the Haitien people that their sovereignty would not be impaired permanently by the American occupation. While the minister declined to discuss the purpose of his call it is said, he reported that until the local officials are given control of civil affairs in the coast cities there will be continued danger of outbreaks in the interior.

In addition to Dr Bobo it was learned that M. Cauvin a former government official and lawyer and possibly President Dartiguenave of the senate will be presidential aspirants when parliament meets tomorrow to elect an executive.

RAIN STOPS SEARCH FOR NEGRO RAVISHER

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 7.—Rain today ended the search for the negro who Thursday afternoon attacked Mrs. Henry Stafford, wife of a young farmer near Liberty, Mo. A posse numbering at one time 500 men surrounded the southwestern corner of Clay county two hours after Mrs. Stafford was discovered tied to a bed in her home, and the entire territory inside the posse's lines was combed several times without avail. Although the bloodhounds lost the trail of the negro late yesterday, the searchers did not despair of his capture until rain drove them in today.

New York, Aug. 9.—Physicians from several of the leading hospitals of this city discussed with interest today the discovery of what is described as a harmless X-ray. Fourteen physicians had witnessed yesterday a demonstration of the new ray by Charles Stanley, an electrician, who claims to have discovered the ray and who asserts that it eliminates the danger heretofore said to surround the application of the X-ray. Mr. Stanley held a bulb with the ray burning in his hand for an hour to show the physicians that it produced no harmful effects.

MUNICH CELEBRATES VICTORIES PIOUSLY

100,000 Germans Join In Prayer of Thanks Before Expressing National Pride.

Munich, (via Berlin and London), Aug. 9.—A crowd of more than 100,000 persons, representing all classes of society, assembled at evening today on the historic Koenigsplatz of Munich to celebrate the German victories at Warsaw and Ivangorod.

The gathering was the greatest in the history of the city. The manifestations of patriotism were remarkable in themselves, but they were overshadowed by the evidences of a deep religious feeling on the part of those assembled. Aeroplanes circled in the air over the Koenigsplatz and the hum of their motors could be heard constantly above the sounds of thousands of voices.

Every inch of the great square, from the Glyptothek to the art museum, and from the propylaen to the Arcistrasse was filled with crowds. With bared heads the people stood in the light of the setting sun and before giving expression to the national pride in the success of German arms in Poland, a fervent prayer went up to God.

The remarkable celebration began at 7:15 in the evening with the simultaneous ringing of all the church bells in Munich. For two hours previous to this time crowds had been streaming from all directions to the Koenigsplatz, bedecked with flags for the occasion. At 7:30 o'clock to the accompaniment of a military band, which had taken up its position on the pillared portico of the art museum the crowds sang the Ambrosian Te Deum.

It was during this swelling volume of song that four aeroplanes circled above the square, the whir of their motors joining in with the sound of the singing of the crowd.

The Te Deum was followed by singing of another choral. Detachments of police and firemen had been ordered to the square to preserve order, but their services were not needed. These men joined in the singing of the second anthem, "Now Thank We All Our God," in which they were led by Herr Von Borscht, the lord mayor.

After this the lord mayor made a short patriotic address, closing with a call for three cheers for King Ludwig of Bavaria, Emperor William, and Emperor Francis Joseph.

The religious note was maintained to the end when several thousand persons, still bareheaded, sang the old hymn of "Thanks Giving to God."

It was almost dark when the demonstrations came to an end. After nightfall, every restaurant in the city was filled to overflowing and the streets were jammed with people waving flags. So far as the number of participants was concerned, it exceeded the demonstrations following the fall of Przemysl and Lemberg.

WOULD REPORT CASES OF SOCIAL DISEASES

Portland, Ore., Aug. 7.—Kansas City, Mo., was selected as the next year's meeting place by the American Osteopathic association at the closing session here of its 19th annual convention.

Resolutions, favoring national prohibition and opposing militarism, were adopted before adjournment. The convention favored the compulsory reporting of all social diseases to the board of health.

Wanamaker's suggestion that we buy Belgium and give it to the Belgians might be followed out in this country: Let the few people who own the country give it back to the people. Furthermore, what guarantee would we have if we bought Belgium from the Germans that the deed of transfer would be considered anything but a mere scrap of paper, if the territory was needed again for military purpose.

Some of our exchanges are knocking the newspaper boys that are running the state fair advertising, claiming that they are running it for eight cents per inch. If any of them are guilty of the awful crime, they must either have a mighty poor advertising medium, or are anxious to fill space at that cut rate. We have held a contract for state fair advertising ever since Mr. Simpson launched the idea, and have accepted not less than ten cents per inch.

Next week is Garner's big annual base ball tournament, and doubtless a large number will be in attendance from this vicinity. Four of the fastest teams in northern Iowa and southern Minnesota will compete for the liberal purses offered. Webster City and Fort Dodge being the Iowa teams and Austin and Albert Lea will represent Minnesota. The games will be played as follows: Two games Tuesday, two games Wednesday, and the winners Thursday. If you enjoy base ball do not pass up this opportunity of seeing some of the fastest teams that ever played at a Garner tournament.

R. C. Plummer and R. T. Norvet, Plaintiffs,

Defendants.

TO THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANTS, and to the unknown claimants of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼); all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M., Hancock County, Iowa:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiffs in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock County, Iowa, claiming that plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M., Hancock County, Iowa.

That the plaintiffs and their grantors have been in open, notorious, adverse and undisputed possession of the above described premises for more than twenty years under color of title and claim of right. That the defendants, and unknown claimants to the said land, have no right or title in and to the said premises.

That the claims, interest or title of the defendants are based upon the following facts and derived in the following manner:

(a) Daniel D. Mather acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book D, page 603, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Daniel D. Mather, or from his spouse or heirs, and by virtue of which fact the said Daniel D. Mather, his unknown spouse or unknown heirs would have an apparent interest in the land above described.

(b) Geo. B. Matteson acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the North Half (N½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed dated December 15, 1875, recorded in Book 2, page 271, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Geo. B. Matteson or his wife or heirs, and because of which fact the said Geo. B. Matteson, or his unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said land.

(c) Tax deeds were issued by the Treasurer of Hancock County, Iowa, to Henry Leamer covering part of the above described premises. The tax deeds were recorded in Book A, page 183 and 185, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. The land was conveyed to said Henry Leamer in trust for Julia Rhodes and children. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Julia Rhodes or her children and because of which fact the said Julia Rhodes or her unknown spouse or unknown heirs or children would have an interest in and to the said land.

(d) A mortgage was given covering the above described premises by James M. Elder to Henry Leamer, recorded in Book A, page 322. There is no release of the above described mortgage executed by the said Henry Lemaer, and he or his unknown heirs might have some interest in and to the said premises by virtue thereof.

(e) Henry Leamer, the grantee in the tax deeds referred to in Paragraph (c), conveyed the land to James M. Elder by deed recorded in Book F, page 222, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but the Henry Leamer did not join and because of which known heirs might have some in the land.

(f) Joel Matteson acquired the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book 2, page 270, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Joel Matteson or his spouse or heirs, because of which he or his unknown wife or heirs may have an interest in and to the said land.

(g) Polly Ann Matteson, Egbart A. Matteson and George B. Matteson appear from the records of Hancock County, Iowa, have been the heirs of Joel Matteson who had title to the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), but there is no conveyance of record either from the said Joel Matteson or from any of his heirs as above set forth or from their unknown heirs, because of which they or their unknown heirs may have some interest, lien or title in and to the said premises.

(i) That among the said defendants there may have been or may be at this time some minor heirs or others under legal disability who claim an interest in and to the above described premises by or through some of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of their claim and the names of said claimants these plaintiffs are unable to state.

That plaintiffs have sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants and unknown claimants, without success.

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and plaintiffs ask that their title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of the said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiffs be decreed to be the absolute owners in fee simple of the said land. That the defendants and all persons claiming by, through or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right, title or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiffs' title be quieted, and that they be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish their title in fee simple, and for the costs of this action; and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of Court, being the October Term of said Court, which commences and will be held at the Court House in Garner, Iowa, beginning the 4th day of October, 1915, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as prayed for by law.

J. H. SINNETT, Tester — R. W. ELDER, Secretary

BREEDING TO CALVE IN FALL

In Circular No. 16, on the care, feed and management of the dairy herd, issued by the Agricultural Experiment Station at Ames, it states that cows bred to calve in the fall will yield from 15 to 25 per cent more milk in the year than if they freshened in the spring, because in the former case when they go out on pasture in the spring they will increase slightly in milk flow while if they freshen in the spring they are worried by the hot weather and flies, and oftentimes by a scarcity of feed, and soon start to decline in flow. Another factor of importance in this connection is a fact that irrespective of time of freshening cows will give a slightly higher per cent of fat during the winter months than during the hot summer months. There are other reasons why it is better to have the majority of the cows calve in the fall, for instance, the higher price paid for butter fat during the winter months, the time available for looking after the herd, and the fact that calves born in the fall have a better chance for growth during the first year. Then too if the cows freshen in the fall, they are dry during the hot summer months, and one avoids the unpleasantness of milking at this time. It is also my humble opinion that healthier calves are born in the fall, when the cows have been out on good pasture, which furnishes the right kind of feed for the growth and development of the feotus. But why this section more than any other? Simply because the predominating cows of this part of the state are inferior animals, profitable for neither milk or beef, and they are made to rough it all the year around, fleshing up in the summer after being turned out on grass since spring, only to loose that flesh during the winter, when they are made to live on straw and water. One ought not to expect a cow to produce a healthy, thrifty calf after being under those conditions. Better have these cows also produce their calves in the fall, because they have had the right kind of feed since the grass came on in the spring, for the growth and development of the unborn calf. It has been my privilege to see several herds this spring, where they hardly raised a calf, and when I would ask them what they fed, the answer was invariably straight straw, slough hay, or straight silage. Don't think that I am knocking on silage, because I am not, but if a man makes the mistake of feeding it alone, thinking that it is just as good as spring pasture, he will surely suffer the consequences. Silage is one of our best feeds, but should always be fed in connection with a grain ration.

THE VALUE OF SUE

Here comes the cow tester, coming this way—I thought he'd be wandering this way today.

He's got the same old outfit, and that sorrel named Sophie too, gee but I am glad he is coming, for now he can test old Sue.

She wasn't fresh the last time, so he had to let her go; but since then she's had a calf, so now we'll give her a show.

There was a man around the other day who wanted to buy old Sue, but just as soon as we priced her at $60, he left without saying boo.

Now, Sue was tested and proved up fine, making us 58 pounds of butterfat in one month's time.

It wasn't long before the news spread 'round that we had the best old cow in town.

Buyers came from everywhere, wanting to know if we would sell, at any price, they didn't care, from $100 to $212.

To us she is worth her weight in gold, so you can rest assured that she'll never be sold.

This only shows in a simple way, the value of testing, leaving you to judge, whether or not it will pay.

Prof. BLISS WILL BE HERE

When Prof. R. N. Bliss had charge of the Animal Husbandry Department of the Nebraska Agricultural College in 1914, he made some extensive cattle feeding experiments. He derived some very useful information as a result of these experiments and after concluding them, made a state-wide call for the farmers of Nebraska to meet with him and discuss the results. Over 500 farmers responded to the call and nearly every county in the state was represented. This noted man is strictly an Iowa product and will be one of the speakers at the Klemme Creamery Day, Friday, September 10. Do not fail to hear him.

KLEMME, IOWA

The poetical language often used by the untutored Irish peasant, made familiar in the plays of Yeats, Synge and Lady Gregory, has an illustration in an article on "The Customs of an Irish County" in Harper's magazine for July: "Ah, then," says the blind fiddler, "you are asking me why I smile, sitting by my lone in the doorway, with only the warmth of the sun on my face to tell me there is light at all. I am smiling because I heard a lovely thing—the voice of our blessed Lord's mother. Grander it was than the whispering of the people I hear sometimes back beyond in the rath."

Moorhead, Minn., just across the river from parching Fargo, N. D., and years long haven of thirsty Dakotans, has gone and done it. Rockets, firecrackers, laughter and tears ushered in the reign of drought. Among the places closed, 34 in all, were the Hous of Lords, the Rathskeller, the Goldmin. and Toole's. Winnipeg, Man., has followed suit.

THORNE ESTIMATES IOWA'S VICTORY AS 95 PER CENT GAIN

Saving Made For the State By Commission's Favorable Decision Pleases Expert.

Washington, Ia., Aug. 14.—Clifford Thorne's estimate of the amount of money that will be saved to Iowans, principally to Iowa farmers, as a result of the decision of the Interstate Commerce commission today in the western freight rate case, is placed at above $1,000,000 a year. Mr. Thorne prepared a statement of his opinion of the decision after receiving a summary of it.

Iowa farmers, he says, will save the bulk of this money. Five dollars in freight charges will be saved on every carload of live stock shipped to Chicago, he points out, and $6 will be saved on every carload of grain. Estimating that the average farmer will ship 20 carloads a year, this decision means $100 to $120 a year to him.

The Luck of Iowa.

While increases were denied on only 80 per cent of the traffic involved, 95 per cent of the Iowa traffic at issue in the case comes into the classes in which the shippers won victories, he declared.

"In the western advanced rate case," said Mr. Thorne, "I understand the commission has permanently suspended all advances on live stock, packing house products, broom corn, fertilizer, cotton piece goods, grain and grain products; and, further, that advances were granted on fruit and vegetables, rice, coal and some fresh meat traffic between Iowa and Nebraska. All other advances on fresh meats are denied, but advances are granted on live stock in trainloads.

Percentage of Victory.

"If this dispatch is correct, the decision is a complete victory on 80 per cent of all traffic in the case and so far as Iowa is concerned, we have been victorious in a larger percentage. There were no advances on fruit and vegetables from Iowa points that were proposed in the case, they were from Texas points. The same is true of rice. There are no trainload rates that affect Iowa; the increases are in the far west. There will be some substantial advances in coal rates, affecting a portion of Iowa's coal traffic only

"Iowa's principal products are live stock and grain. I had charge of the interests of three associations at the hearing The National Council Farmers Grain Dealers' association, the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association and the National Broom Manufacturers' association. These three organizations have an aggregate membership of 300,000. I was also chairman of the committee representing 16 western states. Five of these, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas were principally large and small lines. The decision denies all the more important increases.

The commission itself has no final estimates of the amount of the increases in dollars and cents. From various estimates of record, however, made by witnesses for both sides and based upon the higher figures where the estimates disagreed, the following table, announced in the decision, indicates roughly the annual increase in the railroad revenues and the increases being allowed to go into effect:

Grain and grain products, $2,940,237

Live stock, $1,500,000.

Packing house products and fresh meats, $1,500,000

Coal, $1,226,122.

This makes, with other items, a total of $7,604,247.

ARREST MRS. BAILEY ON CHARGE OF SLAYING HUSBAND

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 14.—Charged with the murder of her husband, S. E. Bailey, at their home at Percival, June 18 last, Mrs. Lucinda Bailey was arrested today at Sidney. Her bond was fixed at $5.000., Bailey, a retired merchant of Percival, was shot in the back of the head with a shotgun in his dining room, and Mrs. Bailey suffered a severe wound in the left arm during temporary absence of their son. She was rushed to a hospital, where she suffered amputation of her left arm. She had been under surveillance in the hospital and was formally arrested as soon as able to leave in company with a nurse A coroner's jury held an inquest the day after the murder, returning a sealed verdict, which now is given out. It charges Mrs. Bailey with the crime. The crime caused a sensation at the time.

BROTHERHOOD DELEGATION TO PLUG FOR MASON CITY

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 14.—A delegation 150 strong left this city this morning for St. Louis to attend the national convention of the Modern Brotherhood of America. They go to McGregor where 150 berths have been engaged for them on the St. Paul. Two bands are engaged beside the Empyrean quartet of this city, will accompany the party. Four hours will be spent at Keokuk. The delegation is not only large but they are going to St. Louis for the purpose of capturing the next national convention, and in addition to this get an appropriation as liberal as the order wish for a new office building in this city Mason City has been the home of the order ever since its organization.

RAILROADS WILL RESIST CABOOSE LAW ENFORCEMENT

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 14 —Railroad officials have announced that if the labor unions bring any court action to enforce the law compelling railroads to operate standard cabooses on all freight trains, they will resist it. They object to the requirement for cupolas on cabooses on the theory that the cupola is antiquated and unnecessary.

The railroad representatives recently notified Attorney General Cosson that they will not comply with the request that no combination coaches be placed on freight trains. They took the position that the combination coach was more useful on some branch lines than the caboose, in order that passengers might be carried.

STATE DIRECTORY WILL INCLUDE NOTES ON 4,000 FACTORIES

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 14.—A. L. Urick, state labor commissioner, is putting the finishing touches to a bulletin directory, which will show that there are more than 4,000 factories in Iowa. The list is being compiled alphabetically by towns. This is the first time a complete directory of Iowa's factories has been attempted. Mr. Urick says the work will be completed within the next 10 days.

PERRIN NOW DENIES CONFESSION REPORT; MAY NOT BE TRIED

Bank Teller Relates Still Another Tale—Relatives Try to Meet Deficit.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 14.—Leo Perrin, paying teller of the Cedar Rapids National bank, who bank officials and detectives said had confessed to taking $20,070 of the bank's funds, late last night repudiated that confession by stating to Cashier Kent C. Forman and a Pinkerton detective that he had borrowed the $8,000 found in a sofa pillow in his mother's home from a friend in Chicago, while fearing being found out. Perrin declared he was suffering for the wrongs he had done. Detectives will attempt to establish the identity of the Chicago source of the funds.

Since the reported confession of the teller, the question of prosecution has rested with his bonding company, local representatives of which stated yesterday the case would in all probability be dropped if complete restitution was made.

Perrin's relatives were reported as attempting to make good the deficit.

James Cageny, of Chicago, a former Cedar Rapids resident, was the man who loaned him the money, Perrin said. On receipt of this information Chicago police were asked to look for Cagney. Detective Cameron, of the Cedar Rapids police, left late last night for Chicago to aid in the search.

Cageny went to Chicago years ago. Later he returned to Cedar Rapids to assist his father in the promotion of the Peerless V. Belt company. The connections there are not known here.

Officials of the bank said today that upon the story told by Cageny, if he is found, depends future action in the case.

Officials of the Iowa Banking association say they will make a thorough investigation of the case. Perrin, it is stated, has not explained when he obtained the $10,000 from Cagney.

EXPECT COMPLETION OF CODE BY NEXT WEEK

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 14.—The state printer was expected to deliver to the state by the middle of next week, the first copies of the completed supplement of the Iowa code, with the index according to an announcement at the state house today.

The final copy for the index, over which arose the recent controversy between Chief Justice Deemer, of the supreme court, and C. S. Wilcox, former code editor, was turned over to the printer early last week by U. G. Whitney, reporter for the supreme court. Mr Whitney was delegated to finish the work started by Mr. Wilcox, delay in which caused the latter's peremptory discharge nearly a month ago.

ANTI-SALOON LEADERS TURN ATTENTION TO LIQUOR CLUBS

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 14.—Anti-saloon league leaders here are turning their attention to the enforcement of the Iowa liquor laws as they affect lodge and club room buffets. Cases pending against the Elks' lodge and the Eagles at Fort Madison, are to be taken up to the supreme court.

In the former case, M. S. Odle, representing the league, asserts that after a complaint was filed against the lodge for operating a buffet, the place was closed and that then the Lee county district court refused to enjoin the Elks, holding that the nuisance complained of had been abated.

The Anti-Saloon league is pushing the the case to get a supreme court reversal of the verdict. The "dry" attorney asserts the lower court should have granted the application for an injunction, and that the lodge cannot escape by deciding to quit after action had been begun in the courts.

Practically all of the bars and clubs in the central part of the state, it is stated here, have been closed, but it is said complains have been received from cities in the eastern part of the state.

CRIMINAL LAW DELEGATES LEAVE FOR SALT LAKE CITY

Des Moines Ia., Aug. 14.—Delegates recently appointed by Governor Clarke to represent the state at the annual convention of the American Institute of Criminal Law in Salt Lake City next Monday, were expected to meet here today for their departure for the west.

HUSBAND FORGIVES GUILTY WIFE AND TAKES HER HOME

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug 14 —Tiring of the company of the man she came here with from Freeport, Ill., and remorseful over her actions, Mrs G. A Gantz wrote her husband a few days ago from this city asking forgiveness and for him to come to her, which he did, and today in court Gantz agreed to forget the past and tonight the reunited family returned to Illinois He is 28 and she is 22.

M. D. Schermerhorn, known also as W. Deforest, aged 51, who came here with the woman, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Smith and held in $1,000 bond to answer to a white slavery charge.

DENISON—There was much stir here Tuesday afternoon when six well known citizens were arrested and fined for not obeying the city ordinance as to turning the street corners when driving motorcycles or automobiles. Posts have been placed in the center of the street at the corner and drivers must circle to the right hand when making the turns.

DES MOINES—Congressman Dowell, of the Seventh Iowa district, has announced a competitive examination to be held September 1, for candidates for admittance to the naval academy at Annapolis Two weeks ago he had about decided that there were no youths in this part of Iowa who desired the training afforded by the naval academy, but recent events in the European war, he says, seems to have aroused interest and inquiries have reached his office.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—Judge Capell yesterday upheld the Sunday barber shop closing law, and heavily fined Peter C. Rassmussen, boss barber, who sought to break the ordinance

PURIST PROPAGANDA CANNOT STOP SUNDAY STREET CAR TRAFFIC

Cosson Rules That Activities Considered Necessary May Continue on Sabbath.

Des Moines, Aug. 13.—Agitation for the enforcement of the Sunday blue laws in the capital city, which has been going on for the last two weeks, will not affect restaurants, street cars, or ice cream parlors and similar enterprises, according to Attorney General Cosson.

Since the agitation was begun by the Rev. Noah Wickham, of Oklahoma, representing the alliance which stands for strict observance of the Sabbath, there has been much discussion locally as to how far the laws would reach.

Mr. Cosson, in response to requests, referred to opinions he had rendered on the subject in 1911 and 1912. The opinions make it clear that enterprises, the operation of which on Sunday is considered a necessity by common consent, will not be interferred with.

FOREIGN COLONY DECIDES TO PUNISH EX-CONVICT.

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 13.—George Donovich, an industrious young Montenegrin, employed by the water works company here, was arrested at the request of A. Markovich, who complained that Donovich was following him with a gun.

A revolver was found on Donovich, and he did not deny that he had shadowed Markovich with belligerent intent.

One night in December, 1911, a riot started in Powder street, the foreign district here. Knives were used freely and with sanguine effect. Combined forces of the police and the sheriff's staff finally quelled the uprising, but not until Philip Gjuranovich had been mortally wounded and several others were badly cut.

Markovich was bound with ropes by his companions and turned over to the police as the guilty person. The district court sentenced Markovich on a manslaughter charge. In two years he returned to Mason City, having been paroled.

Recently the members of the Montenegrin tribe to which Markovich belongs, decreed that the slayer should die. In accordance with the tribal custom, the men of the clan drew lots to single out one to do the deed.

Donovich drew the job. Markovich, learning of his peril, appealed to the police. When he learned that Donovich was actually following him he caused the man's arrest. Tribal custom provides that Donovich's failure to "get" Markovich will be his own death warrant. Now he may be placed under a peace bond. The authorities are at a loss how to prevent trouble in the colony.

SIR FRANCIS DRAKE'S "HEIR" WILL BE TRIED ON GRAFTING CHARGE

Case Set For September Term —Large Party In Court Room.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 11.—Mrs. Sudie B. Whitaker will be tried in the September term of the district court on a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses.

Yesterday the grand jury returned an indictment accusing the woman, who claims to be heir to half the billion dollar estate of famous Sir Francis Drake, of this crime.

Mrs. Whitaker and her multidinous party went at once to Judge Dudley's court room, where the charge was read.

Only in her appearance did Mrs. Whitaker suggest that she was the chief figure in the newest incident of the famous Drake estate case. So far as her manner went, she might have been the least interested spectator. She sat in well bred, inconspicuous silence while the attorneys and Justice Conroy performed their parts in the performance.

YOUTH KICKED BY HORSE AFTER FALL FROM WAGON

Logan, Ia., Aug. 11.—Kenneth Schmidt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schmidt, was seriously injured when kicked by a horse on the Harry Kennedy farm, south of Woodbine, this morning. The lad was driving a gasoline wagon for threshers and when the front wheels struck a rut and the lad was thrown forward under the horses' feet he was kicked on the head by the frightened horses.

SECRET SOCIETY OF MEXICANS A MENACE TO TEX

More Border Outlaws Report to Have Crossed Into American Territory—Grafters Cause Strife.

PAN-AMERICAN NOTE

Carranza Troops Known Have Occupied an Island Rio Grande—More Battles Anticipated.

Laredo, Tex., Aug. 10.—A party of Mexicans, under a leader named Cabrera, has appeared between Zapata and Rio Grande City, 90 miles below Laredo, on the Texas side. A detachment of the Fourteenth cavalry is stationed at Zapata and with the aid of citizens, is prepared to resist the bandits if they reach that point.

News of this was dispatched from Zapata today.

Nogales, Ariz., Aug. 10.—Mexican soldiers entered American territory 20 miles west of Nogales, today and began slaughtering cattle, according to report from the Harrison ranch on the border. Three automobiles, loaded with armed men, started for the scene shortly after the report reached here.

Austin, Tex., Aug. 10.—Mexicans in Guadalupe, Hays and Gonzales counties are forming secret societies, which are a menace to the safety of Americans, according to F. C. Weinert, manager of the state cotton warehouse who yesterday returned from a trip to Seguin, where he was called to advise a group of farmers who had received threatening letters.

Grafters at Work.

"These Mexicans are organized by agitators from San Antonio," said Mr. Weinert. "The agitators have one argument that always brings results. They say to the peon 'These lands are really ours,' and incite him to take them."

The agitators after organizing secret societies for the "redemption of land to Mexicans" generally disappear after collecting dues from the members.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 14.—General Funston reported to the war department today, that after a conference with Governor Ferguson, of Texas, it was agreed that no more troops were needed at this time

General Funston added that reports of the raiders who crossed the border near Brownsville were Mexicans, and that they were joined by about 50 Mexican residents of Texas He believes the band has now been dispersed.

Most of Them Gone.

The war department issued this summary of its advices from General Funston:

"Nothing serious has occurred within the last two days. It is known that the principal part of a band of outlaws was driven across the Rio Grande into Mexico. It is now established beyond doubt that a considerable portion of the band came from Mexico and were officers and soldiers of Carranza's force, doubtless acting without authority from their chiefs. Once on this side of the river they were joined by about 50 Texas Mexicans, all well armed and mounted and proceeded to raid the country as far as Norias."

Brownsville, Tex., Aug 14.—There were indications today of possible operation of Carranza forces on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande to clean up of bandits which is now being made in the Brownsville section by rangers and United States troops. It was reported today that Carranza troops last night fired on Mexicans who were trying to cross from the American side into Mexico near Mercedes. It is believed the Mexicans who tried to escape were part of the band which crossed from Mexico near Mercedes last night.

Brownsville, Tex. Aug 14.—Carranza soldiers, it was learned today, temporarily took possession of Ranch No. 10, in the Rio Grande, for a short time, while the Mexican raiding party was in its height a few days ago. The ranch, containing pasturage for a considerable stock. American residents in the vicinity, which is near Rio Grande City, 100 miles above here, were mollified by the actions of the Mexican soldiers. The latter finally withdrew from the island.

Peace officers and rangers have accepted a summary code of handling suspected Mexicans. At Fort Brown here, the following report was made In, made by peace officers to an American patrol officer on duty at a small station north of Brownsville

"We met two Mexicans. They ran to escape. We could not identify them so we left them there"

These Mexicans were killed.

Owing to the slowness of mediums of travel and great distances between the force of soldiers and rangers available but to quell raids did not all reach their assigned places until late yesterday or early today.

Troops Awe Mexicans.

Mexicans everywhere are working in the fields or mixing with soldiers and rangers at the stations. Mexicans on trains or those who appear to be going any distance by other means of travel are closely watched. Train crews are ready to uncouple the engines at any time and turn them over to the use of soldiers or peace officers for runs to alarms of appeals for help.

EXCHANGE RATES ARE DEMORALIZED

More Acute Conditions Result From Further Declines In London and Paris Money.

New York Aug 16 -More acute conditions attended today's foreign exchange market with new low records for bills on London and Paris Demand sterling fell to 4 69½, against yesterday's low level of 4.70¾, and Paris checks were quoted at 5 90 a loss of a cent from yesterday

The market was so demoralized that dealers in exchange had the greatest difficulty in keeping the rates posted on rates Quotations in different banking houses varied all the way from 1 to 3 points on the remittances to London and Paris After the close of the market it was said that one of the largest banking institutions in this city had sold London bills as low as 4 69

The rate quoted for other European countries showed no marked changes from yesterday In point of fact quotations for all continental exchange other than that on Paris were merely nominal Offerings on London and Paris were relatively light but it was said that further large amounts of these remittances would be offered during the coming week All present indicationts point to lower quotations unless British and French credits are soon established here.

So far as could be learned no progress was made today in negotiations having for their object the establishment of further foreign credit or loans in this market.

REPAIR OLD PLANTS TO SUPPLY DEMANDS

Sharon, Pa., Aug. 16 - Activity such as this region has not known in seven years is shown by blast furnace interests, due to the increasing demand for pig iron The statement was made today that furnaces that have long been idle will be placed in operation before October 1 Supt J S Robbins, of the Clair furnace, received orders to repair the plant without delay, and President George S. Boyd, of the Valley Mold & Iron company, announced the Alice furnace would be placed in operation as soon as possible. Two blast furnaces at Middlesex are being repaired and the Hall furnace of the Republic Iron & Steel company also is being made ready for work, while an additional furnace of the Shenango Furnace company, it is expected, will be blown in next week.

RAID UPON SUEZ CANAL THWARTED

French Discover Ship Building Plant In Palestine and Turn Guns Upon It, Destroying Works.

Paris Aug 16—A plan for an attack on the Suez canal is said by the ministry of marine today to have been detected and thwarted. Announcement was made in the following statement

'On August 12, after warning had been given to the governor of Jaffa and time given for the evacuation of the vicinity, a French cruiser bombarded and destroyed the principal building of the shops of the German Wagner which were making arms and ammunition and constructing boats designated for an attack on Suez canal The houses in the vicinity were not damaged '

Jaffa, in southern Palestine, Asiatic Turkey, is about 150 miles northeast of Port Said, at the Mediterranean end of the Suez canal. In Jaffa is a large foundry owned by Wagner brothers.

The French marine ministry's communication leaves in doubt the nature of the expedition said to have been planned against the canal. It would be obviously impossible to construct at Jaffa a naval force of sufficient strength to cope with the warships of Great Britain and France in those waters, and it might be inferred that small vessels were being built for a raid, depending upon secrecy and speed for the success of the adventure.

The Suez canal was attacked by the Turks earlier in the war An army was sent to Egypt last winter and in February there was some fighting near the canal The main forces of the Turks, however, did not reach their goal

RECOVER GEMS FROM DECKS OF EASTLAND

Chicago, Aug. 14.—Three bushels of jewels, purses and other small pieces of personal property, which belonged to victims of the Eastland disaster, were recovered when the ship, just three weeks after the catastrophe, was restored to even keel today.

The property was found on the upper decks, which were the first available to search.

INCREASED CATTLE RATE NOT ALLOWED

Washington, D. C, Aug. 16.—In an important decision today the Interstate Commerce commission held that proposed rates on cattle and sheep in car loads from points in Colorado, South Dakota and other states to points on the Missouri and Mississippi and to Chicago, were unjustified.

The commission suspended the proposed increases and investigated them on protests from the Sioux City Commercial club, the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association, the railway commissions of Iowa and South Dakota, South Omaha live stock interests, the American Live Stock association, in which many Iowa and middle western stockmen are interested and various other organizations

The commission suspended from August 15 to December 13 increased rates on lumber from Wisconsin, points on the Northwestern to Iowa points on the Milwaukee.

Washington, D. C, Aug 14.—The case of the Des Moines Saw Mill company vs. the Minneapolis & St. Louis, and other railroads, was decided by the Interstate Commerce commission. It was held that a reasonable proportionable rate on walnut lumber from Des Moines to the Mississippi river was 11½ cents. It was also held that the Des Moines joint rate for export to Norfolk and Newport News, over the Wabash and Burlington, should not exceed the Kansas City rate to Norfolk and Newport News more than 2 cents.

DISASTER OVERTAKES JOY RIDING PARTY

Collision With Train at Crossing Results In One Death and Three Injured.

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 14.—One dead, a second near death's door, a third and fourth injured is the total result of an automobile accident on the Minneapolis & St. Louis crossing near Hampton. It was a joy ride, culminating disastrously, as it is stated that the young men in the car had only that day formed the acquaintance of the women. Going at a high speed, they failed to see an approaching passenger train and the car they were driving was struck near the rear and completely demolished. Miss Gladys Preston, of Belmond, was so badly hurt she died before reaching the hospital. Carl Ganote, who was in the back seat with Miss Preston, is in the hospital so badly bruised and torn the doctors last night held out but little hope for recovery. Harold Rice, driver of the car, lives in Popejoy, and he was sharing his seat with Mrs. L. C. Sharpe, of Belmond. They were thrown 15 feet and were badly bruised, but escaped the severe jar sustained by those in the rear seat. The young men were in Hampton attending a ditch hearing case, and the women had come over from Belmond on a shopping expedition. The four met in the park and went for a joy ride when they met with this accident.

HAITI IS QUIETED BY NEW PRESIDENT

Washington, D. C., Aug. 14.—The Haitien flag flies again over Fort Nacionale, and both Port au Prince and Cape Haitien have been quiet since President Dartiuenave took up his duties.

Rear Admiral Caperton reported today that the new president's reception was enthusiastic. The president made public acknowledgment of the part of American troops in restoring government.

GREAT BRITAIN WILL PRODUCE MORE WHEAT

Hope to Secure Larger Crop at Home By Guaranteeing Minimum Price.

London, Aug 16.—The cabinet is considering important recommendations concerning the supply of food, particularly wheat, made by the commission appointed in June by the Earl of Selborne, president of the board of agriculture, with Lord Milner as chairman The nature of the report is guarded closely, but it is intimated the recommendations include plans to increase the home grown supply of wheat by guaranteeing to producers a minimum price for their product.

The Times urges the government to act promptly, pointing out that farmers are gathering the present harvest and must decide on the uses of their land in the coming season. It adds:

"There is probably ground for conjectures that the recommendations involve a guarantee to farmers of a minimum price for wheat for a period long enough to justify them in putting a larger acreage under cultivation. Whether this step is worth taking must depend to some extent on the view taken by the government of the probable risk to imported supplies"

"Owing to the magnitude of wheat importations from America the action of the cabinet on the recommendations of the commission probably will have considerable bearing on the overseas trade

STRIKE BREAKERS MAY BE EMPLOYED

St. Louis Transfer Men Give Striking Teamsters Until Midnight to Settle—Riot Is Quelled.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 16.—Settlement of the strike of 1,500 transfer drivers and chauffeurs appeared to be distant today and the police took extra precautions to prevent a repetition of last night's riot, in which shots were fired and nonunion drivers and guards were pelted with stones.

A crowd of 500 strikers and sympathizers fought with the police, who attempted to arrest two of their leaders, and succeeded in getting the men away from the officers.

The employers who yesterday denied the men's request for increased wages, have given the strikers until tonight to accept partial concessions to their demands for shorter hours and to return to work. Should the strikers fail to accept by midnight, the owners declare they will import strikebreakers.

The strikers have not indicated that they will accept the employers' offer, but some of the leaders said they would agree to arbitration.

The employers, although willing to accept arbitration, will decline to permit the consideration of the wage demands, while the teamsters decline to return to work on a concession of shorter hours only

The two largest transfer companies affected by the strike of teamsters said today that they would not try to operate their wagons with non-union men before Monday.

The teamsters of four other firms, a total of 100 men, joined the strike today

A report that the strike might be settled today gained currency.

Larger Force Is Landed To Battle Turks

British Forces Have Been Landing on Gallipoli Since August 6.

FRENCH REPORT ADVANCES

Steady Progress Claimed For New Arrivals—Turkish Attacks Repulsed.

Paris, Aug. 14.—An official communication on the situation at the Dardanelles, given out by the French war office this afternoon, reads:

"On the Gallipoli peninsula British forces since August 6 have been debarking successfully at a point near the Bay of Suvla, on the west side of the peninsula. They have made progress at a point further to the south in the vicinity of Gaba Tepe. Here, after some severe fighting, these forces were successful in gaining a footing on the slopes of the height of Sari Basir. They took more than 650 prisoners and captured nine machine guns. The operations at this point continue to progress.

"At the south end of the peninsula the efforts of the Turks to penetrate our lines all resulted in failure. On the 7th of August we made some slight progress. Since this date the activity on the French front has consisted mainly in artillery fighting, with marked advantage for our batteries."

TURKS ARE BEATEN IN BATTLES IN CAUCASUS

Petrograd, (via London), Aug. 14.—The following official communication concerning the operations of the Russian forces in the Caucasus was made public today:

"In the valley of the Passine, the Turks twice took the offensive on the whole front. Our troops let them approach to within a short distance and then repelled them, inflicting terrible losses. We captured six officers and 130 men.

"A regiment of cavalry attacked a chain of Turkish sharpshooters near Marmora. They sabered many of the Turks, and made prisoners of the others. A column of our cavalry, near Melazghert, captured 24 officers, while they were leaving the school at Erzerum."

PORT OF RIGA IS DOOMED

Bialystok, (via Petrograd), Aug. 14.—The equipment and supplies of factories and stores are being removed from this city, which is 45 miles east of Lomza. Many inhabitants are departing, although the civil government, state and private banks, the postal and telegraph services are still in operation.

The roads leading to this city from the west and northwest are lined with endless processions of refugees with their wagons. Many peasants in the Lomza, Ostrow and Malkin districts have departed hurriedly.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—The American consul at Riga has taken over the British interests there. Ambassador Marye so reported today from Petrograd, but gave no explanation.

London, Aug. 16.—Steady progress for the forces of Prince Leopold of Bavaria eastward from Warsaw is taken here to indicate that the Germans are now massing their main armies on a drive to the Russian center and the continuance of the enveloping effort in the north along the Dvina. Both Petrograd and Berlin agree that the Germans have occupied the towns of Sokolow, Siedice and Lukow, forming a German front about 60 miles east of Warsaw and 50 miles wide.

This is more than half way to Brest-Litovsk, which Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander in chief, hoped to make the new center of his defense. It is now regarded as probable that this point will be abandoned.

German forces are continuing their rapid eastward march from Warsaw and exerting increasing pressure on both the north and south wings of the Russian army. The situation is causing the question to be raised in capitals of the entente allies whether the Grand Duke Nicholas' forces will be able to hold their second line of defense, with Brest-Litovsk as its center.

Today's German official report shows that Field Marshal Von Mackensen's forces have swung northward to a line from Radzyn to Vladova, pressing closer to the Brest-Litovsk stronghold, which is about 35 miles north of Vladova. Austro-German forces already had occupied Radzyn.

Petrograd claims that the Germans have been checked between Poniowesch and Dvinsk. Berlin, however, does not concede this. For the moment the intensity of the fighting is giving way to a scramble of the retiring forces to avoid the enveloping net and the rapid advance of the Germans to gather the full fruits of the fall of Warsaw.

The outcome of these movements probably will be indicated within a few days, whether Grand Duke Nicholas will be able to resume the offensive along the new front, or will concentrate his energies in rear guard fighting during a slow retirement.

German correspondents accompanying the invading armies say the Russians are following the tactics of the Napoleonic campaign, laying waste the country which they abandon.

RUSSIA CONFIDENT NEW DEFENSE LINE IS SAFE

Petrograd, (via Loondon), Aug. 14.—The new positions occupied by the Germans and Austrians were outlined with approximate accuracy on good authority today for the first time since the fall of Warsaw. The line starting from the vicinity of Ossowetz, near the Prussian border, opposite the Mazurian lakes region, curves to the south and east, running through Sokolow, Siedice, Lukow, Ostrow and Vladova.

The concentration of the Austro-German forces in the direction of the fortress of Brest-Litovsk is proceeding along three roads, running to that point from Malkin from Lukow and from Vladova. The invaders are still between 40 and 50 miles from Brest-Litovsk and are meeting with strong opposition at every step of their advance.

According to Russian military observers in the near future the original plan of retirement from the Vistula line will be accomplished and that Brest-Litovsk, although not yet in the sphere of activity, will assume its function as one end of the Russian line. In Petrograd the opinion is expressed with confidence that the advance of the Austrians and Germans will be checked on this line.

GERMANS REPULSED IN ATTACK IN ARGONNE

Paris, Aug. 14.—The French war office this afternoon gave out a report on the progress of hostilities which reads:

"In the Argonne the enemy yesterday evening delivered an attack along the entire front in the Marie Therese sector.

"Everywhere they were repulsed and suffered perceptible losses. At this point, there was a fresh German attack at an early hour this morning, but less violent, and it was rapidly checked.

"The night passed quietly on the remainder of the front."

STEAMER BRINGS STORY OF SINKING OF VESSEL

New York, Aug. 14.—The American steamship Seaconnet, arriving here today from Gothenburg, reported being stopped by a British cruiser on the way home and told of the torpedoing of an American steamer and several Norwegian vessels by a German submarine in latitude 61, longitude 12.

The date of the torpedoing and the name of the American ship were not given by the British cruiser. It is believed, however, that it was the steamship Leelanaw, which was torpedoed and sunk off the Orkney islands on July 27.

Elbert Bede Says:

The man who is pleased with himself is usually hard to please in other ways.

We holler like all get out for government by the people, and then when election time comes half of us don't vote.

Why is it that a girl will act as if she doesn't want to be touched, when she is aching to be crushed in a man's arms?

A woman will coax a man into spending money for some useless and worthless luxury and then criticise him for being hard up.

The time may come when foreign born citizens will find that their American citizenship imposes a duty, as well as gives protection.

Those who have served in positions of trust are not as quick to criticise as those who never have, and haven't the ability to get into a position where they would be criticised.

We have known a great many people whom we would say were scrupulously honest under all ordinary circumstances, but very few of them would call a conductor back to give him a fare he had missed.

A New York printer proposes to commit suicide by drinking 23 bottles of whiskey. By the time a fellow had absorbed all of that it wouldn't make any difference to him whether he died or not.

Quite often you wonder how such a good investment happened to fall your way. In after years when the dividends fail to come, you may find that it didn't fall your way—that it was thrown your way.

Every man who has spent three days of his life as a devil around a country printshop wants you to believe that the only reason he didn't become a famous newspaper man is because there isn't money enough in it.

A girl lost her breach of promise suit because when the man proposed she merely nodded her answer. The girl who wouldn't under such circumstances climb into a man's lap, put her arms around his neck and prepare her mouth for a kiss, could hardly be considered as having given acquiescence that would have any standing in court.

RUTH SENDS WORD

"Oh dear, I wish Ruth was back home from her vacation," said that young woman's puzzled Aunt one morning, "I want so much to ask her what to do for these rugs and carpets that are curling up at the edges. I know she would know a remedy. I'm just going to write and ask her what to do."

And she did. And in two days time she had this answer from Ruth:

"Dear Aunt, keeping your carpets from cupping up at the edges is the easiest thing in the world. Just try this and you will not have any future trouble: Lay your rug or carpet upside down, on a level floor. Make very thin cooked starch, and add 5c worth of powdered gum arabic, dissolved in a little water. Apply to the back of the rug with a paint brush, and when the rug becomes dry it will be like new. If you should want to know anything more, I shall be glad to help you, if I can. Hoping that you are all well, I am, etc."

"I knew she'd know," commented her Aunt with satisfaction, "for she's always reading about or hearing somebody tell about such things, and she never forgets 'em."

WEDDING BELLS WILL RING

A girl in a town not far distant from here had a proposal of marriage a few evenings ago, and asked for a week's time in which to consider the same. She then organized herself into an investigating committee and commenced taking testimony from the married ladies of her acquaintance. The first lady she visited had been the belle of the town before her marriage, a few years before.

The cross-examinrtion brought out the fact that she had three children, did all her own work, including washing and ironing, hadn't been down town for five weeks, and that her husband had given her but two dollars since their wedding day, and that he borrowed and forgot to pay back ten dollars her brother once gave her as a Christmas present. He had bought a new overcoat with the money, while she was still wearing the plush coat she wore when he was courting her.

The second woman she visited had quit teaching school three years before to marry the "handsomest and best dressed man in town," and she was still supporting him.

The third didn't dare call her soul her own while her husband was near, altho she had written several lovely essays while in school on the "Emancipation of Woman." The fourth lady visited was divorced.

Having concluded her investigation, summed up the evidence and carefully weighed the matter, pro and con, she wrote the young man accepting his proposition. She will be married to him in the near future.

FOR THEIR NEIGHBORS

The hardest housekeeping in the world is the housekeeping that people do for their neighbors. Half the troubles we have are caused by worrying about what people think. What difference does it make what they think, anyway? No one can live his own life and two or three other people's lives besides. What's the use of setting up housekeeping on the roof or on the outside walls for the benefit of the neighbors? You would rightly be judged insane if you suggested anything of the kind and that is practically what half the people do. They can't do this because the neighbors would talk, and they can't do that because the neighbors wonder if they could not afford to do something else. They may not say it in so many words, but they mean it, and it is simply a great big vacuum in some of our natures where moral courage ought to be. Half the sting of poverty or small means is gone when one keeps house for himself and not for his neighbors.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

Walsh, Margaret Walsh, Patrick Walsh Eugenia Walsh, Isabella Walsh Martin Walsh, Annie Walsh, Margaret Thyne; Johana Sheehan; and all the unknown wives, husbands, heirs, and devisees of or claimants under the above named defendants or any of them, and all the unknown claimants of the South-west Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼), the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) all in Section Five (5) Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P M Hancock County, Iowa, Defendants.

TO THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANTS, and to the unknown claimants of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼), the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼); all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23) West of the Fifth P. M., Hancock County, Iowa:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiffs in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock County, Iowa, claiming that plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼); the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼), and the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), all in Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), West of the Fifth P. M., Hancock County, Iowa.

That the plaintiffs and their grantors have been in open, notorious, adverse and undisputed possession of the above described premises for more than twenty years under color of title and claim of right That the defendants, and unknown claimants to the said land, have no right or title in and to the said premises

That the claims, interest or title of the defendants are based upon the following facts and derived in the following manner:

(a) Daniel D Mather acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed recorded in Book D, page 603, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Daniel D. Mather, or from his spouse or heirs, and by virtue of which fact the said Daniel D Mather, his unknown spouse or unknown heirs would have an apparent interest in the land above described.

(b) Geo. B. Matteson acquired title to the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) and the South Half (S½) of the Northwest Quarter (NW¼) and the North Half (N½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼), Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), by deed dated December 15, 1875, James M. Elder to Henry Leamer, recorded in Book 2, page 271, of the corded in Book A, page 322. There is no release of the above described mortgage executed by the said Henry Lemaer, and he or his unknown heirs might have some interest in and to the said premises by virtue thereof.

(c) Henry Leamer, the grantee in the tax deeds referred to in Paragraph (c), conveyed the land to James M. Elder by deed recorded in Book F, page 222, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but the wife of Henry Leamer did not join therein and because of which she or her unknown heirs might have some interest in the land.

(f) Joel Matteson acquired title to the South Half (S½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty three (23), by deed recorded in Book 2, page 270, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Joel Matteson or his spouse or heirs and because of which he or his unknown Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Geo B. Matteson or his wife or heirs, and because of which fact the said Geo B Matteson, or his unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said land.

(c) Tax deeds were issued by the Treasurer of Hancock County, Iowa, to Henry Leamer covering part of the above described premises. The tax deeds were recorded in Book A, page 184 and 185, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa. The land was conveyed to said Henry Leamer in trust for Julia Rhodes and children. There is no conveyance of record in Hancock County from the said Julia Rhodes or her children and because of which fact the said Julia Rhodes or her unknown spouse or unknown heirs or children would have an interest in and to the said land.

(d) A mortgage was given covering the above described premises by wife or heirs may have an interest in and to the said land.

(g) Polly Ann Matteson, Harriet Hall, Egbart A. Matteson and George B Matteson appear from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, to have been the heirs of Joel Matteson who had title to the South Half (S½), of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-six (96), Range Twenty-three (23), but there is no conveynace of record either from the said Joel Matteson or from any of his heirs as above named or from their unknown heirs, and because of which they or their unknown heirs may have some interest, right, or title in and to the said premises.

(h) Thomas L. Walsh acquired title to the premises described in Paragraph (b) above, by conveyance recorded in Book A, page 295, of the Deed Records of Hancock County, Iowa, and it appears from the probate records of Hancock County, Iowa, Will Record 2, page 41, that he died leaving Margaret Walsh, Patrick Walsh, Eugenia Walsh, Isabella Walsh, Martin Walsh, Margaret Thyne, Johana Sheehan, and Annie Walsh, as his heirs at law and that by virtue of the fact that there are no conveyances of record from them they and their unknown spouses or unknown heirs would have some interest in and to the said premises.

(i) That among the said defendants there may have been or may be at this time some minor heirs or others under legal disability who may claim an interest in and to the above described premises by or through some of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of which claim and the names of said minor claimants these plaintiffs are unable to state.

That plaintiffs have sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants, and unknown claimants, without success.

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiffs' title, and plaintiffs ask that their title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of all of said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiffs be decreed to be the absolute owners in fee simple of the said land. That the defendants and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right, title or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiffs' title be quieted, and that they be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish their title in fee simple, and for the costs of this action; and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of Court, being the October Term of said Court, which convenes and will be held at the Court House in Garner, Iowa, beginning the 11th day of October, 1915, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as provided by law.

Dated at Forest City, Iowa, this 3rd. day of July 1915.

GRANVILLE JONES A RARE HUMORIST

The mark of a great orator is that he reminds you of no one else. This is true of Granville Jones. He is unique, original, always strong and delightfully interesting. The entrance of this lawyer, humorist and editor upon the Lyceum platform as a lecturer means that "a new Richmond is in the field." The man, the message and his method are all out of the ordinary and wholly different from the usual Lyceum lecture attraction.

Hon. Granville Jones

If Jones is like any man who has been in the limelight of America, it is Abraham Lincoln—tall and angular of body, always clearly logical, and yet overflowing with the richest humor. He is a typical son of the South and his ideas and utterances are as fresh as the honeysuckle and dogwood bloom of his native land. A magnetic, natural simplicity marks the manner and mental processes of the man. Like many of our great American statesmen, he has a slight strain of Indian blood in his veins, plainly traceable in his features.

From his appearance and first word upon the platform he engages the watchful and sympathetic attention of his audience. He early overcomes its mental barricade and quietly captures the citadel of its intellectual defenses, and from that time on to the close of the lecture he is supreme master of the occasion. With his fine philosophy, learned in the school of real life, and his absolutely original and natural humor, he carries his audience up to such heights of intense interest and to such sympathy with the man and his great message that one is at a loss to know whether to allow tears or laughter to express his appreciation; a mingling of both is fitting and usual when Jones speaks.

If, as the critics say, the finest literature of the world is spoken literature, then some of the most beautiful gems and striking comparisons and rich illustrations of all literature are in the speeches of Hon. Granville Jones.

GEORGE COSSON

A SPLENDID RECORD

No Better Read Man in Iowa Politics Than Cosson.

BIG INFLUENCE AS GOVERNOR

Perhaps the Most Widely Known and Best Equipped of Any of the Candidates for the Governor's Office.

Cosson has been tried and not found wanting. He has made a splendid record as attorney-general and is well known all over the state and to every voter. He stands square on every principle that means good government and he will wield a powerful influence as governor of this, the best state in the union. Study his past record closely and you will find that Cosson stands only for what is right, and he will continue along these lines if the people of Iowa will stay by him. During his career as office holder he has gained a national reputation as the author of many splendid laws and of the kind that other states are copying. Note what the press of the country say of him.

The Dubuque Times Journal says that "There is just one way to avoid the horror of a wet and dry campaign and that is for loyal citizens to stand for law enforcement, not only of the liquor laws, but all other laws as well."

The News agrees to this. This is the reason why The News is for Cosson for governor. At the last election Cosson was elected for the third time as attorney general of the state and we did not have to go through "the horror of a wet and dry campaign" because the people approved of his work during the previous terms of his office and they know exactly what to expect.

The governor under the new law has control of the special agents to enforce the law. If Cosson is elected governor the policy of the law enforcement will proceed without the slightest friction and without the slightest unsettlement of business. He knows local officers.

Cosson has no superior in thoroughgoing law enforcement with the least friction and the least disturbance.—Des Moines Daily News.

Cedar Rapids Gazette: Then Attorney General Cosson and Lieutenant Governor Harding will represent the issue, backed by the dry and wet forces as gubernatorial candidates probably never have been backed before in this state. Cosson's nomination will mean prohibition in Iowa * * * Casting all consideration of the prohibition issue to one side, George Cosson is the most logical man of the two for governor. * * * Cosson typifies the open game in politics.

Des Moines Evening Tribune: "They will turn rather to Attorney General Cosson, who is right on this question and on a great many others."—H. L. Rann in Manchester Press.

There is plenty to indicate that the real gubernatorial contest in the republican primaries is going to be between Lieutenant Governor Harding and Attorney General Cosson, with all sorts of possibilities of complications.

Marshalltown Times-Republican: Cosson can command more than thirty-five per cent of the vote and will get it.

OUT FOR BUSINESS

Cosson Outlines Clearly State's Business Needs.

INSISTS LAWS BE ENFORCED

Cosson Wants To Enforce the Laws and Nothing More—This is a Law Enforcing Age and a Progressive Age.

A vote for Cosson is a vote for a man of ability known all over the country. A man who does things and who has no fear. He is the right man for the office he seeks and the voters of Iowa should rally to his support at the 1916 primaries and then elevate him to the highest office in Iowa, that of governor. Cosson is the type of a man that makes good. Mr. Cosson believes the people of Iowa want clean legislation and that is his platform. Iowa has taken the lead in cleaning up and it should be followed by nominating the man who started it—Attorney-General George Cosson. He believes, too, that the rural population are entitled to consideration and has always championed their cause.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Council Bluffs Nonpareil: Cosson has made a fine record. He has done this by hard work. He has a wider acquaintance in the state than any other aspirant. He represents the best sentiment in the state and in the republican party. He is trustworthy in every way. He has been tried and not found wanting. He is likely for these reasons to be centered upon by the republicans who are not concerned about individuals and who simply desire to avoid division of strength which would result in placing in the governor's office a man out of sympathy with the state's best ideals.

Audubon Republican: No one can question that Cosson is the pioneer of law enforcement, submitting to a defeat for a second term as county attorney of this county because of his stand upon this question, at a time when law enforcement was not popular in Iowa. As state senator he achieved an enviable reputation through the Cosson laws. He was while in the senate the chairman of the committee on suppression of intemperance, at a time when few were seeking this particular chairmanship.

Burlington Hawkeye: Present indications point strongly to the nomination of Attorney General George Cosson for governor. He has proven himself one of the most efficient, practical and industrious officials ever occupying that highly responsible position. He is a man of fixed political principles, resolute, broad-minded and with high ideals of the requirements of public service. He has had experience in legislation and executive administration.

Carroll Herald: George Cosson would go into the governor's office with a full knowledge of the state's business and an intelligent conception of the exercise of executive prerogative, and, we believe, would make one of the best governors Iowa has ever had.

Sioux City Tribune: Attorney General Cosson is an honest, clear thinking man who would make a good Iowa governor.

RIGA, RUSSIA'S GREAT NAVAL BASE ON BALTIC, FACES CAPTURE

Continuing their tremendous onslaught on the Russian lines, which resulted in the fall of Warsaw, the Germans are expected to force the capture of Riga, Russia's great port and naval base on the Baltic. Riga is, after Petrograd, Russia's most important port and commercial city on the Baltic, and in point of population comes sixth among the cities of the czar's dominions.

WHY JEFFERSON DAVIS WAS NEVER TRIED

From the Columbus Dispatch.

Do you know why Jefferson Davis was never tried and convicted in the civil courts of treason against the United States? If your thought in the matter is not clear, you will be interested in a contribution by Hon D K Watson, of this city, to a recent number of the Yale Law Journal. On May 8, 1866, Mr Davis was indicted by the grand jury of the federal district court of Virginia. In May of the following year he was produced in court by the commandant of Fortress Monroe and surrendered to the civil authorities The case was continued until November, 1868, when Mr. Davis' counsel filed an affidavit, reciting the fact that Jefferson Davis was in the year 1865, previous to the alleged commission of the offenses charged, a member of congress and took the oath to support the constitution of the United States"

The affidavit raised a constitutional question the claim of counsel being that section 3 Article XIV just adopted as an amendment described the only punishment possible in the case of a congressman who had subsequently committed treason—that is, disqualification for holding any office under the United States or any of the states

The judges, on December 5 announced their disagreement which fact was certified to the supreme court of the United States and the latter never decided it The president's proclamation of amnesty followed the indictment in the district court was laid away, and the matter was dismissed from the docket of the supreme court, February 18, 1869

Use the Summer Mornings.

From the Dayton News

We have gotten ourselves into about the worst habit that ever happened in the matter of sleep We have arranged our affairs, as a people so that it is almost impossible to get to bed before 11 or 12 o'clock [illegible] remaining [illegible] or 9 o'clock in the morning So we lose the best part of the day, especially at this season of the year

At this time the most productive part of the day ought to be from 4 to 9 o'clock in the morning A man ought to be able to do better work and more of it during those four hours than during all the rest of the day And he would be able to do it if he could only retire early enough to enable him to secure the necessary sleep before 4 o'clock But our habits of life are such that it is impossible with most of us

The evening meal comes along at from 6 to 7 o'clock Then an hour or two is spent in the yard or on the porch, or puttering around until darkness falls about the earth which is now well along toward 8 The papers must be read, of course before one retires, and that takes an hour or so Then if there is any amusement a picture show or a social call from friends or upon friends, it is 11 o'clock before one can "turn in" So when 4 o'clock comes next morning, one has not had enough sleep to enable him to arise at 4 and feel like doing a day's work.

Now and then, however, a fellow will be found who is wise enough—or foolish enough, depending upon the point of view—to go to bed at 8 or 9 o'clock. He gets up earlier than his fellows, and is better fitted for the daily tasks. Naturally he succeeds better than his fellows, and when age comes upon him he is occupying an important place in the community. Then people who do not understand that his success has been due to his early retiring and his early rising begin talking about how lucky he has been in life, how everything to which he turned his hand brought success, how all of his adventures turned to money or brought him fame.

German Influence Dominated Russia.

From "The World Storm and Beyond," by Edwin Davies Schoonmaker.

The real Russian people lie almost unseen under a foreign overlay which has somehow got itself recognized among the nations as Russia, and which began to be deposited more than 1 000 years ago when Rurik the Norseman was his followers, came in and established themselves as rulers of the land. Then for more than two centuries the land was under the heel of the Tartars, another conquering people who left behind them a deep deposit of violence and crime. And almost immediately after the expulsion of the Tartars there began a third period of foreign domination, that peaceful Germanic invasion which from the days of Peter the Great has persistently warred against the ideals of this peaceful people, which became the source of the repressive bureaucratic system and which, as an active influence in Russian politics, is responsible for many of those crimes that the world has ignorantly laid at the door of the Slavic people. It is not generally known that the present house of Romanoff, which has held the scepter for 300 years, is half German. * * *

And if we except Pobiedonostsef, the fanatical Procurator of the Holy Synod, Count Witte has been the ablest champion of the reactionary movement. He it was who fought the establishment of the provincial assemblies and who, in a manifest to the czar, expressed his conviction that there was no way of ruling the peasant except by the knout. And Plehve, the notorious minister of the interior, was another Baltic German. I do not mention these facts as a reflection upon the German people, for they, too, have suffered at the hands of these same oppressors in the fatherland, but simply to show that neither upon her borders nor within her interior can all the inhumanity of Russia be fairly charged to the Russian people. * * *

Tolstoy is the living voice of the Russian people, as Lincoln is the living voice of the American people. Tolstoy is the glorified Russian peasant uttering his heart to the world from the cross of the ages.

Navies for Defense Purposes.

From the Review of Reviews.

One hundred years ago we had a vast fleet of merchant ships sailing every sea. They could readily be fitted with guns and turned into privateers in case of war. But navies cannot be improvised in these days. If a country as large and important as ours is to have a navy at all, it can afford to have one strong enough to serve adequately those purposes we have in view in the maintenance of any sort of naval establishment. We should either have a navy of no importance at all, like China or Mexico, or else we should have one commensurate with our deeds, in the opinion of those best qualified to judge. If we had possessed only two or three more battleships in 1908 Admiral Cervera would not have sailed to our side of the Atlantic, and we should have settled the Cuban question with Spain by peaceful negotiation. Unfitness for self-defense does not make for peace in a warlike world. Until the world is organized for the avoidance of war, and the protection of the weak against the strong, it is the duty of the United States to be well prepared.

Applied Art.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

"What's your hired man plowing up your front yard for, Blinks?"

"My daughter has a new camera and the instructions say to break up the foreground before taking pictures, and I couldn't very well let her do that hard work."

The Abstemious Diaz.

From the Indianapolis News.

Porfirio Diaz, former president of Mexico, who died recently at the age of 85 years, was the grandson of an Indian woman. He cited as an example of longevity due to temperance an uncle who he averred lived to be 102 years old "because his lips had never touched a drop of alcohol." Diaz himself was a total abstainer. Le Cri de Paris says that one day when he was seriously ill his physician prescribed that he should drink "some fingers of fine champagne." "Never a drop of that poison in my body," exclaimed Diaz. "One has no need of it to regain health; and still less to give him courage."

In 1865 when imprisoned by Bazaine in the fortress of Pueblo, Diaz escaped by jumping through his cell window, the bars of which he had sawed. He fell on the sentinel who was asleep at the foot of the wall. The fugitive took the awakened soldier by the arm and shaking him said: "Wretched man, you sleep while on duty! Don't you know that General Porfirio Diaz is imprisoned up there? If he escapes it will be bad for you. They'd take you out and shoot you, that's all." The soldier put his heels together and as the general saluted, presented arms, after which Diaz, with much dignity, withdrew.

English Extravagance.

From London Statist.

The country has been at war for practically 10 months now, and yet no class seems really to understand the need for economizing. We are spending two and a half, possibly even three, millions every day. We are borrowing sums that would have been thought utterly impossible and incredible 12 months ago. And yet people are living as extravagantly as they lived in the piping times of peace.

There are new demands for recruiting. There are even hysterical demands for compulsory service. And yet we are told in the same breath that the army is exposed to unnecessary loss of life because there is not a sufficient supply of munitions. And people, for all that, will not recognize that there is a scarcity of trained men to turn out the munitions that are needed.

In the same way, while great fortunes are being made by those who are working for the government what may be called peace business is practically at a standstill. Even the trades that we always have conducted we are neglecting. On the other hand, we are buying fabulous quantities from the United States, Argentina and other countries.

Debts are being run up in enormous amounts, and nobody seems to ask himself: How is the bill to be paid when the day of reckoning comes? We shall probably muddle through, to use the accustomed phrase. But is it not time that we saw the folly of muddling through, and made up our minds to act as business men in a country which prides itself on being exceptionally good in business?

REVOLUTION REARS ITS HEAD AGAINST PRUSSIA

In spite of a policy of suppression in Germany evidence is revealed almost every day of the awakening of a spirit of revolt that has been in a hypnotic slumber It appeared in the recently published manifesto of the social democracy, but was curbed by the obsession so assiduously kept up by the imperial government that the empire was forced into the war for the defense of its very existence. It is boldly asserted by a committee of the German Humanity league, which is more safely dated at Rotterdam. That the members of that body are free from the obsession is shown by the assertion that they are "convinced" that there has been "no conspiracy by any government or any nation against Germany, and that on the contrary it is only by the victory of the allied armies as guardians of humanity that we ourselves shall be emancipated from the accursed yoke of Prussian militarism."

"Enlightened democrats in all countries," it is declared, "must assist in breaking that yoke before German states can regain the pathway of peace." As evidence that those whose sentiments are expressed in this new manifesto can "look facts plainly in the face," and see them as they are seen by all who are not obsessed, such familiar "facts" are thus stated "No state coveted our land or menaced German integrity. Our ships were free to sail and were welcomed on every ocean. Our citizens enjoyed the fullest civil rights in all parts of the world. Our industrial output found a ready market in every quarter of the globe Commerce was increasing year by year"

A Brand of Shame For Kaiser.

A year ago nobody would be found even in Germany to dispute these facts. As further evidence that there are Germans who see and feel as others do, the desire is expressed that "outraged Belgium Luxemburg and France be restored to tranquility and the liberation of Poland and Bohemia from the fetters of servitude." How far this feeling may exist cannot now be judged, because, according to this same German authority, "by false declarations the press is compelled to deceive the fatherland and our compatriots continue to be slaughtered in the trenches. By golden gifts members of the reichstag and publicists have been seduced to betray the people's cause they have sworn to defend."

No more severe charges have been made against the ruling power of the "great central empire" of Europe than those uttered by these German voices. They cry out that this power "has shattered our homes, darkened our lives, robbed us of our bravest sons and set the whole civilized world against us." They charge it with having by foul corruption deceived the Turkish nation and compassed its ruin," and they declare that to their last hours the kaiser, Von Tirpitz and Bethman-Hollweg will carry upon them the brand of shame for the unparalleled ruin they have wrought and the misery into which they have plunged the world by their barbarism on land and sea.

Like a Smoking Volcano.

The significance of this language lies in the fact that it does not come from enemies of Germany, or even from men of German blood who were exiled by this very Prussian militarism in time past and have shared in the blessings of democratic government in other lands. It is uttered by devoted sons of the fatherland who long for such blessings in the home of their race and their kindred. They are making an earnest appeal to "every democratic Saxon, Bavarian, Hanoverian and Wurtemburger to join hands with all who realize the unspeakable crime of unprovoked war and to persevere in demanding the evacuation of Brabant, Flanders and Luxemburg and the cessation of bloody outrage in Alsace and Lorraine."

One can only wonder how much of this spirit of revolt is still slumbering benumbed under the surface of the states which constitute the empire of Germany, ready to break out if some great climax should be reached to cause an eruption. It has been suppressed, but it has not become extinct. A generation has grown up under the molding influence of the Prussian system of government, derived from the medieval time, and on the surface it is cased with iron and adorned with imperial splendor. But there may yet be something volcanic underneath. It can only rumble while the armies are trampling over the fields and holding their ground against enemies who have been aroused to madness in their own defense and in a determination to expel the demons of war from their borders and extinguish the fires in which they revel and threaten the peace of the world and the welfare of mankind.

Lord Northcliffe's Frankness.

From the Washington Times.

There is a frankness about the publications of Lord Northcliffe in his paper, the Daily Mail (London) that is almost startling. It is doubtful if so bald-faced a prediction of possible defeat for home forces would be tolerated in the publications of any of the other countries at war. His publication of yesterday is an example of the brutally frank way in which he attacks the war-office and its work. He says:

"We can win this war, but unless the British public takes the matter into its own hands and insists upon the dismissal of the inefficient bunglers among the politicians and at the war-office we shall lose the support of our allies and the enthusiasm of the dominions, we shall waste the magnificent efforts of our soldiers and sailors, and eventually we shall lose the war."

Such expressions will lead either to the betterment of the conditions against which he complains or the elimination of his publications as an English influence.

FAMOUS PARIS TENOR JOY OF PRISON CAMP

Gottingen, Germany, (by mail)—A Paris opera tenor, clad in wooden shoes, dirty mud-streaked trousers and a thread-bare sweater vest, singing arias from La Tosca, Mignon and the Barber of Seville on a rude wooden stage whose "scenery" consisted of one rudely painted drop and a few strips of colored paper, to an audience of 500 French and Belgian soldiers, all of them as dirty as he, was one of the entertaining incidents which The Associated Press correspondent encountered on his visit to the great war prisoners' camp at Goettingen.

Jean Mainy, until last August tenor of the "Opera de la Gaite Lyrique," in Paris, was the singer. It is doubtful if in his best role he ever sang better than he is singing now, seven or more times a week, that prison life may be more endurable for the thousands of his fellow prisoners.

The opera at Goettingen has its own orchestra which consists of pianist on the stage in his shirt sleeves and down among the audience, English soldiers in khaki as violinists and cornetists, Belgians as flutists, Frenchmen as cellists and a French lawyer as leader.

It is notworthy that the Russians, who are present in the camp in large numbers, neither are represented among the musicians nor attend the concerts to any extent. As in every other camp, they prove to be willing, automatic, husky workers who have little interest in anything but eating all they can get when they come back to camp at night, and in loafing in dull satisfaction afterward.

THE CHILD'S BATH.

Now, as we all know, the child who is prettiest at the party is the clean child, yet simple as the word "bath" sounds there is many a mother who knows nothing about the proper way to bathe her child. In every bathroom there should be a soft bit of rug before the tub for the child to step on when getting out and a bath towel over that. You have seen the kiddie shudder, when tumbling out of the warm plunge on the cold tiled or wooden floor, and this means not only the memory of the unpleasant moment next time, but the possibility of chill that may result in cold. Then there are the soap, the brush and scrubs small nails, and the towel that wipes dry. If mothers only knew how unwelcome they may make these necessary luxuries they would turn over a new leaf, for I have seen mammas employ laundry soaps on small faces, use brushes with wooden bristles on tender finger and toe nails and do the final wiping down with new huckaback towels which were almost as harsh as sandpaper.

For small faces and ears there are the old damask tablecloths and napkins that can be torn up and hemmed for wash cloths and face towels; but even with these please remember not to gouge too hard into little ears and eyes. The quality of the soap is a very important matter to consider, for it is quite easy to damage a child's skin with a cheap grade of soap, and once some imperfection is started up it is hard to cure. For all round use on little faces, scalps and bodies a soap jelly made by scraping a six-inch length of castile bar and boiling it to a pulp in a quart of water is desirable. This can be kept in a preserve jar with a screw top, and the tiniest dab of the soft soap be used at a time.

Both soda and sea salt are sweetening to the flesh while a bag of oatmeal or bran agitated in the bath will leave the skin soft and smooth as satin and whiten it besides. The toilet water should be of a simple and refreshing sort, and I can think of nothing better for this than a mixture made of equal portions of toilet ammonia and violet water When this is used pour a little in the hand and apply it to the small body after it has been bathed and dried, taking care however, to keep it clear of the child's eyes, as to get the least ammonia in the eyes is agony in the extreme For the powder there are scented talcums which are both delicious and cheap, but a cupful of cornstarch pounded to a dust and sweetened with natural flowers would do as well.

The proper time to wash a child is two hours after eating or half an hour at least before the next meal.

Pomp of Beauty.

From the Century Magazine.

"It is a healthy human impulse to defy the influence of Circe. And there is, indeed, a barefaced pomp of beauty—beauty that cannot enter a room without giving the whole house a shock; beauty that, as Mr. Kipling vigorously says, 'hits you right between the eyes and knocks you flat'—of which the mere existence carries a challenge to stand up against that avalanche. I do well remember a certain opening night when Miss Maxine Elliott sat throned in a stage box, and the emotions of the whole audience beat and broke upon that imperturbable statue, icily regular, splendidly null. About that beauty the shivering mortal mind fluttered in hope of some reassuring blemish, slipped along the glacier without finding a crack, and, blinded by excessive light, fell away, baffled. It was natural to revolt against that."

What Is Carnegie Worth?

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

When rumors were flashed over the land again one day recently that Andrew Carnegie was dead the query on everybody's lips was: "How much money did he leave?"

Mr Carnegie himself made the immortal remark that it is a crime to die rich—being one crime which most of us will escape without violent effort.

But how much is Carnegie worth?

Since he sold his steel works the income from the bonds he received in payment has amounted to $210,000,000. Hence the Laird might have spent $5,000,000 a year to maintain his frugal household and still have all of his original fortune intact.

Are There Other Eastlands?

From the New York Independent.

Are there other Eastlands in the same or other waters, their passengers running the same deadly risks from day to day?

Who should hunt them out and make them safe—or keep them idle?

Once more we are all by a heartbreaking disaster shocked awake. But it is so easy to drop off again. Shall we stay awake long enough this time to do the job?

CLEARLY NO MILK FOR HIM

Traveler's Hopes of Nourishment Disappeared as Woman's Explanations Came to an End.

A traveler from the North, walking through the mountains of North Carolina, came on a cabin that gave unusual evidence of rural industry, says Harper's Magazine. Although it was only ten o'clock in the morning, the traveler decided to stop and ask for refreshment, since he might not come on anything so promising for many miles.

A tall, apparently ill-fed woman came to the door. She looked at the traveler in amazement, and seemed to be resentful when he made known his wants.

"We've et," she said in a reproachful tone. "Tom's gone to town to fetch cornmeal."

The traveler suggested a glass of milk.

Again the woman shook her head, while her sallow visage lengthened. "Tom went and forgot to milk the cow. He won't be back till evenin'."

That seemed to be the traveler's opportunity, both to show his good nature and obtain a glass of milk.

"I'd be glad to milk her for you," he offered. "I was brought up on a farm."

Again the woman shook her head. "Ye caint, stranger." And this time her resentment was tinged with futile regret. "Tom rid the cow to town."

War and Necessity.

Assuming an air of sage importance the fat plumber ejaculated:

"War is a necessity."

"Pooh! How do you make that out?" demanded the thin carpenter, deprecatingly.

"Did you read that Edison is going to devote his energies to American protective measures in time of war?"

"Yep. What of it?"

"That proves my contention."

"How?"

"War makes invention necessary, doesn't it?"

"I suppose so."

"And necessity is the mother of invention?"

"Huh!"

"Therefore war and necessity are synonymous."

The thin carpenter is still thinking it over.—Youngstown Telegram.

What Was in the Barrel?

McTavish was accused of having illicit whisky in his possession. A reluctant witness admitted that he knew of a suspicious barrel going to the accused.

"Now," said the prosecuting counsel, warningly, "remember, you are on oath. What was in the barrel?"

"Weel," replied the witness, "there was 'McTavish' marked on a'e end of the barrel, and 'whisky' on the other, but being on oath, your honor, I couldna say whether it was whisky or McTavish that was in the barrel."

Eric thrust his face close to the other's. "Do you mean to tell me that Jack Payson hasn't had the whole story from you? Answer me that question. You can't deny it."

Adam fell back a step, genuine astonishment in his face.

"No!" Why do you ask? What has he said to lead you to believe—Nonsense! He doesn't know it. It's impossible. Eric, there isn't a soul on this earth that knows the truth, except you and I."

"Jack knows—I'm sure he knows," cried Eric hotly. "And how could he know, except through you? I know what he is to you. But, even at that, it was a blamed scurvy thing to do."

The look in Adam's eyes put a sudden check on the ruthless words that were rushing to his lips. The man's face had turned a ghastly hue. He glared for an instant into the fierce eyes opposite, and then slowly drew back, reaching out with his hand for the support of a chair. The hue of apoplexy had covered his face. Eric had never seen a man who looked like this. He was filled with a sudden consternation. Was the man about to die?

"Look out, Mr. Adam," he cried out. "Here! Sit down. I—I take it all back. I shouldn't have said that. I'm half crazy—I'm out of my senses."

Adam waved him off. The purplish hue receded and left his face almost sallow.

"You mean that you take back what you said about—about what?" he demanded.

"About your having told him, of course."

"Ah, I see," said Adam, fixing Eric with eyes in which lay the light of humble appeal. "You don't take back the other."

Eric's gaze wavered. "That's neither here nor there. We won't discuss it, if you please."

"Just as you please, Eric," said Adam slowly. Then with a positive snarl in his tones. "He doesn't know. Get that out of your head. No one knows. No one need know. Let me finish. I'll put an end to the whole game if you insist. Give me a week—no, a month. I'm getting sick of the thing myself. The pleasure's all gone out of it. I'm not altogether heartless, I can even feel sorry for Horace. But we've got to use judgment, discretion. I can't go to him today with my lie about Chetwynd's death in some foreign land—or sea. It will have to be worked up slowly, deliberately. I've got the thing fixed in my mind. I'll tell him that the boy was killed in the South American revolution now in progress in—"

"No, no!" cried Eric, pounding the mantelpiece with his clenched hand. "I'm going to make a clean breast of it. I'm going to purge my soul of all that curses it. No more trickery, no more lying, no more subterfuge, Mr. Adam. I'm not ungrateful for what you've done for me, God knows I'm not. I can only curse myself for letting it go on so long. I've been a dog, a coward, a—a demon. That's it—a demon. But I can't go on with it. I just can't."

Adam laid a hand on his shoulder. "You'd better be guided by me, my boy," he said kindly. "I am your friend and I am in full possession of my wits. Which is more than you can say. Let it go as I have planned. There's no harm in that. I'll go to Horace in a few days and put his mind at rest forever. I will produce positive proof that Chetwynd is dead and—"

A sharp cry broke from Mary's lips. The two men were again conscious of her presence in the room. She was standing near the window with her back to the light, her hands clasped over her breast.

Her brother hesitated and then sprang to her side.

"I don't know how to tell you, Mary dear. It's such a horrible— Yes! I'll get it over with. I'll begin with you, Mary. Do you remember the night you dreamed that Chetwynd—"

"For heaven's sake, boy," groaned Adam, "stop and think before you do this."

"No! You remember that night, Mary, don't you?" he rushed on, something like frenzy taking hold of him. "Six years ago? I slept on the floor in—"

"Yes, yes, I remember," she cried, bewildered.

"Well, that was the day that Chetwynd died. He did not run away. Mr Carr has not been looking for him all these years. He's been dead all the time." He stopped to pull the collar away from his throat.

"Impossible!" gasped Mary. "Why—why, Uncle Horace has been expecting him home all—"

"Uncle Horace doesn't know. No one knows but Adam Carr and—I. Sit down here beside me, girlie. I'll tell you the whole story, and Adam Carr will vouch for it. I'm going to tell Uncle Horace, too. He can do what he likes with me—hang me, if he wants to—but I've just got to tell."

He drew her down beside him on the sofa, over in the darkest corner of the room. Then, for 10 minutes, he delivered his soul to her. She sat as one petrified, white and still, staring with unblinking eyes at his twitching, distorted face all the while he poured out his unhappy story.

Once her gaze was diverted, ever so briefly, to follow his as it went to the broad, motionless figure of Adam Carr, who stood at the window looking out upon the street.

"But, Mary, Mr. Adam says it was not murder," pleaded Eric in conclusion. "He says it was an accident. It might just as well have been I who went over—"

"And he's been dead all these years," she murmured. "Out there in the ocean?"

"Yes."

"He can't be washed ashore? It was a great iron chest, you say?" she went on dully. Her hand went to her temple.

"For heaven's sake, Mary, don't put it—"

"And they think he is still alive?"

He nodded his head slowly, his lips writhing.

"Oh!" she cried, as if in dire pain. A great shudder ran through her body. "How horrible! Oh, Eric, it was not right! You don't know how they've suffered. I do. I have seen it all. And, God pity me, I have rejoiced in their misery more times than I can remember. I used to laugh——yes, actually laugh—to see Aunt Rena sitting there in the window hoping that he would come up the walk——Oh!" She buried her face in her hands.

He held her tight in his arms, moaning a sort of accompaniment to her dry, racking sobs. For a long time they rocked back and forth on the frail little sofa, clinging to each other as if fearing the presence of someone who stood ready to drag them apart forever.

"I did kill a man," groaned Eric at last. "They said I would, Mary."

"Don't, Eric! Please don't!"

"God!" burst from his tortured lips. Adam Carr turned at this. For a minute he watched them through narrow eyes, then walked over to take his stand before them.

Eric looked up at him, dully.

"Tell her I've told the truth, Mr. Adam—the honest truth," he begged.

"You've made an utter fool of yourself," remarked Adam, but in a way that was not unkindly.

Mary looked up in angry amazement. Her moist eyes swept the figure of the speaker with a look that would have shrivelled a less imperturbable person than Adam Carr.

"How dare you say that to my brother!" she cried.

Adam smiled almost approvingly. "I'm not so sure that he's a fool after all, Mary. The secret is safe with you. Now, if you love him, help me to protect him against this idiotic thing he calls a conscience—or maybe it's honor. I'm sorry he has told you all this. Not that it could be dragged out of you, my girl, with red-hot tongs, but that doesn't help matters. You—"

"I am glad he has told me," she exclaimed. "It isn't right that he should bear it alone. Oh, Eric, if you had only told me years ago! I could have helped you. I could have comforted you. Why—why you are not a murderer. It's preposterous!"

"We're agreed on that," said Adam. "But will your Uncle Horace be so considerate?"

Mary shuddered. "Eric, I am so afraid of Uncle Horace. He will be very bitter. He may—"

"See here, Mary," he broke in, coming to his feet with renewed resolution in his face. "You're not going to stand in my way, are you? You're not going to side with Mr. Adam, are you? If that's what you're thinking of, let me tell you it won't deter me. I'm going to Uncle Horace this evening." Turning to Adam, he said with absolute finality. "You may do as you choose, Mr. Adam, so far as backing me up is concerned."

Adam's smile was a wry one. "I don't occupy a very creditable position in the matter, my boy. Please don't overlook that little point. See here," with sudden vehemence, "do you think you're playing fair with me? Where does this leave me? I did the best I could for you, and now you break faith. I did not expect it of you."

"You have done a great deal for me," said Eric abjectly. "You must consider me an ingrate."

"Not exactly that. I can understand how you feel. It's not unnatural. You see, you're not morally guilty of a crime. It's irksome to live as if you were. I admire your courage, your honesty—"

"It isn't courage," cried Eric. "It's cowardice! Good heaven, do you think that if I was as brave as you are I'd go into a funk like this? No, I'm a coward. I can't face the music any longer. I've lost my nerve. Why, every time Aunt Rena looks at me out of those sad eyes, every time Uncle Horace forgets himself and lets the lines set about his lips, I shudder all over. I'm a coward, that's all there is to it."

"I shouldn't say that," said Adam quietly.

"Well it's the truth!"

"I still maintain that my way is best," said the detective. "You'd better let me see you out of the woods, Eric. I'm used to it. I'm quite capable. The minute I tell them that Chetwynd died in South America, they'll be transformed. It's anxiety, dread uncertainty that's doing the work for them now. Once they know—"

"No," said Eric firmly, "it's got to be my way."

"Which means, in other words, that you want to get rid of me as a millstone."

"Yes, Mr. Adam, that is one of the reasons."

"But you will tell Uncle Horace just how it happened won't you?" cried Mary anxiously.

He did not reply at once, but sat down in the rocker a few feet away, with his elbows on the arms of the chair facing them. Although his face did not betray the fact that he was perturbed, an involuntary movement of the hands served to betray him. He took his pipe from his pocket and had it almost to his lips before he bethought himself and restored the disreputable thing to its habitual resting place.

Mary was watching the set, hard features with narrowing eyes, in which hope and fear struggled for supremacy. Eric with his hands jammed into his pockets, started sullenly down at the man.

"Give me time to think," muttered Adam Carr.

"You surely will not desert him now," implored Mary. Her hand went forth in search of Eric's. Not meeting it, the tense fingers clutched the skirt of his coat in a frenzied grip.

Leaves a Bad Taste.

From the Wichita Beacon.

A new cause for complaint has been discovered touching Mr Bryan. When he left the secretary of state's office he took the desk that has been used by secretaries of state for 50 years. Mr Bryan desired this as a souvenir. He attached unusual value to it not because of the great secretaries of state who have used it in the past, but because it was the desk on which he signed his own peace treaties. He had the government reimbursed by having builded a desk of the same size to take the place of the historic one. Some are saying that Mr Bryan could not legally do this since the desk that he carried away was the property of the government and that the government also attached a sentimental value to it by reason of its long service in the state department. Of course, the government lost nothing actual and Mr Bryan gained nothing actual, but the chiefest value in a nation's life is made up of its sentiments and its memories and the symbols of its past glories. These constitute an everlasting heritage and for that reason relics, such as Mr. Bryan removed, belong to the nation. The Beacon has no desire to join in criticism of the episode, except to say that it was a peculiar thing to do, and, as an admirer of Mr Bryan, we wish he hadn't done it.

City Streets.

They took a little gravel,
And they took a little tar,
With various ingredients
Imported from afar.
They hammered it and rolled it,
And when they went away,
They said they had a pavement
That would last many a day.
But they came with picks and smote it,
To lay a water main;
And in time they called the workmen
To put it back again.
To run a railway cable
They took it up once more;
And, later put it back again,
Just where it was before.
They took it up for conduits
To run the telephone;
And then they put it back again,
As hard as any stone.
They took it up for wires
To feed the 'lectric light,
And then they put it back again,
Which was no more than right.
Oh, the pavement's full of furrows;
There are patches everywhere;
You'd like to ride upon it,
But it's seldom that you dare.
It's a very handsome pavement,
A credit to the town;
They're always digging of it up,
Or putting of it down.

COMPLETE AND NOISY MEAL

Traveler Surely Well Fitted With Abundance of Nourishment and "Music."

The longest and noisiest dinner that Mr. James Sibree, Jr., the author of "A Naturalist in Madagascar," ever attended was given by the governor of a town called Texarkana. About a score of officers were at the table and seven ladies. After a long grace by the pastor, dinner was brought in, and consisted of the following courses:

First, curry; second, goose; third, pigeons and waterfowl; fourth, chicken cutlets and poached eggs; fifth, beef sausages; sixth, boiled tongue; seventh, sardines; eighth, pig's trotters; ninth, fried bananas; tenth, pancakes; eleventh, manioc; twelfth, dried bananas.

And lastly, says Mr. Sibree, when I thought everything must have been served, came haunches of roast beef. Claret went about very freely, and at length some much stronger liquor, and the healths of the queen, "Our friends, the two foreigners," then those of the prime minister, chief secretary and chief judge, were all drunk twice over, the governor's coming last, and each was followed by musical and drum honors.

There was a big drum just outside on the veranda, as well as two small ones, besides clarinets and fiddles, and these were in full play almost all the time. Then the room was filled by a crowd of servants and aids de camp, and the shouting of everyone, from the governor down, was deafening. The old gentleman directed everything and everyone. I was glad when I could take my leave, after two hours' sitting, but I was not to leave quietly. The governor took me by the hand and escorted me home, while the big drum was hammered at ahead of us all the way.—Youth's Companion.

Starting Trouble.

"Why is it that the attendants in telephone offices are all women?" Mrs. Brown made this inquiry of her husband.

"Well," answered Mr. Brown, "the managers of the telephone offices are aware that no class of attendants work so faithfully as those who are in love with their labor; and they know that women would be fond of the work in telephone offices."

"What is the work in a telephone office?" Mrs. Brown further inquired.

"Talking," answered Mr. Brown. And that conversation came to an end and a different kind of conversation began.

Freckles.

"Is it true that only people with an excess of iron in their systems have a tendency to freckles?" asked the summer girl of her father.

"I don't believe it is," replied Dad. "That young chap who goes bathing with you has an excess of brass, and he's got freckles."

A Dull Time.

"I don't know how we'll get along without you, Nora."

"Thank you, ma'am."

"You've been with us a long time."

"Yes, ma'am. Nearly seven months."

"And you still refuse to tell us why you are leaving?"

"The idea! Our house is frequented by the best people."

"It's not that, ma'am. I was speaking of my own company. Where I used to work most of my friends were chauffeurs, ma'am. The only man who has asked me to ride with him since I've been here was a vegetable peddler."

Not a Grumbler.

In one of the southwestern states the courtroom of the courthouse was overlooking the cemetery. A negro had just been sentenced for two years. The judge, piqued at his apparent indifference, remarked: "You don't seem to mind your sentence."

"Bless you', judge, des plenty ob 'em ovah yondah would like to hab it."

Youngster's Ingenious Idea for Getting Out of a Situation That Didn't Please Him.

Jack disliked being kissed, and, being a handsome little chap, sometimes had a good deal to put up with. One day he had been kissed a lot. Then, to make matters worse, on going to the picture palace in the evening, instead of his favorite cowboy and Indian pictures there was nothing but a lot more hugging and kissing.

He returned home completely out of patience with the whole tribe of women.

After he had rolled into bed, mother came in to kiss him good-night.

He refused to be kissed.

Mother begged and begged, till in disgust he turned to his father, who was standing at the doorway looking on, and said:

"Daddy, for the love of heaven, give this woman a kiss!"

Fallacious Fabrications.

"Oh, ho, ho!" said the horse, arising stiffly. "Another day's work ahead, I suppose."

"For once," said the hired hand, who was a college graduate in disguise, "your supposition is incorrect. You will be permitted to remain in your stall and rest. Your master is dead, and his funeral will be held today."

"But I am going to the funeral," said the old horse.

"Why, for the love of Mike," gruffly asked the hired man, "should you go when you may as well stay here and rest?"

"For 20 years," replied the aged horse, "I have been wanting to attend my master's funeral, and now that the opportunity is present, I will not be denied."

Occasionally it happens that all those in the funeral train are not there for the purpose of shedding the scalding tear.—Judge.

Farming this year must be mighty hard on the nerves, but remember, that in spite of all the vicissitudes, we have garnered the best crop of small grain ever raised in this section It is a whole lot to hope for but it is within the realm of possibility, that we will yet have an excellent crop of corn, not a bumper crop, for the stand is too poor, but a good, average crop All it will take to make the crop is a good August and September and we often get them Cheer up anyhow we are not poor Poland, with armies running over us and laying things to waste

Almost Every Type of Silo Can Be Seen at the Fair

Few, if any, discoveries in the world of agriculture and stock growing have been as important and far reaching in effect as the perfection of the silo. Its influence has been little short of revolutionary in upsetting and eliminating ancient methods in farming and handling of stock. The silo idea is not so essentially new by any means. Its advantageous features were advocated a good many years ago but the farming world, as a whole, hailed from Missouri, and a vast deal of "showing" in the way of demonstration work was necessary to establish its claims. Not much real headway was made in exploiting silo work in this part of the country until prosperity appeared on the scene in the late nineties, following a period of the most woeful business depression. Land prices began to soar to unbelievable heights. Land owners sat up and began to use their brains. They were up against new propositions. The man farming land worth $3[illegible] or more an acre realized that he would have to run things in a different way to dig out even a reasonable percentage of profit on his investment. It was altogether different from farming forty dollar land. It was the golden opportunity for the silo enthusiast and you may believe that gentleman was right in using it.

The silo has come [illegible] institution no man should think of [illegible] without. Probably thinking and planning the time rolls around of another crop [illegible] different kinds and might well be a choice. The logic under such circumstances the Iowa State Fair August 25 to Sept the fair and visit object lesson in silo methods there is in it, or even to be day, for that matter makes; the various principles exploited, machinery in use, all and demonstrated for all who may be interested of receptive mind a practical knowledge of silo work in one than it would be possible in an entire year of factories and listen spiels of agents [illegible] ed in silos attend it all in one big [illegible]

SEND THE BOYS TO THE FAIR.

There will be a multitude of features and exhibits in the various departments of the Iowa State Fair and Exposition that will appeal to young America. Iowa's best asset today is her boy and girl crop. Just a few short years and the conduct of affairs will be given into their hands. The lad of today is the man of affairs of tomorrow. The state fair affords such unexcelled opportunities of educative value that [illegible] regret that every [illegible] cannot spend a few wonders. Here, in a few days, can be seen resources of this and of the mechanical of the entire country mechanical department alone [illegible] self, and might have shaping and influence [illegible]

WINNING MANY PRIZES

C. E. Gibbs has been taking in fairs with his pure bred stock at the Mason City and Forest City fairs the past two weeks and has been winning a large number of first prizes on both his cattle and Shetland ponies. He will take in a number of other fairs before returning home. A. Kirkwood is asfisting him and at the same time enjoying a sort of vacation from his duties at the Kirkwood Cafe. Mr Gibbs recently made a valuable addition to his herd of pure bred short horns when he purchased nearly one-half of the W. A. Riddle herd of pure bred dual purpope animals at Hampton, which purchase included Benwilldon Duke, said to be the largest pedigreed bull in the United States. Mr. Gibbs believes in continually improving and now has without question one of the best herds of Short Horns in this section, not mentioning his fine herd of Percherons, horses, Shetland ponies, and mule foot hogs. The Sterling Stock Farm is doing its share to keep Klemme before the public.

MULLIN & RAWSON WILL REBUILD

Elevators Recently Destroyed by Fire Will be Replaced by Modern Structure, Electrically Equipped--- Feed Shed Will be Added

After getting a satisfactory settlement from the insurance company, Mullin & Rawson decided to build a new elevator. A contract has been let to the Newell Construction Co of Cedar Rapids for the construction of an elevator 24x26-40. The building will have a capacity of 20,000 bushels, will be electric lighted, have an electric motor installed for power, will be covered with galvanized siding, and will have all the most modern equipment. Besides the main elevator a building 22x32 will be erected. A part of this 12x22 will be used for office and the balance 22x20 for a feed shed. The contract calls for the completion of the entire job by September 15, 1915 at a cost of $5,500.

Mr. Mullin states that they will be equipped so that it will be impossible to clog or overtax them. When completed this firm will have one of the most up-to-date elevators in this part of the state and can take care of their business in much better shape than they could formerly. They have always enjoyed a large patronage and will continue to do so.

Work will commence just as soon as the material can be put on the ground.--Britt News.

MOVES TO GARNER

Tom Elder and family are moving to Garner this week so that their daughter, Miss Agnes, may take advantage of the advanced schools at that place. This is not the first time Klemme has lost some of her best people on account of schools and it seems to us that it is about time that we wake up to the fact that we should have a couple more grades added to our schools. The Klemme schools are good as far as they go, but Kleme is a good town, and it would be much better if the schools were more advanced. We are sorry to see the Elder family leave, and hope that they will return to live with us again at some future date.

Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Church autoed to Rowan Wednesday to look over the new consolidated school building there and they think it fine in every detail.

HANCOCK COUNTY FAIR

August 31 and September 1, 2, 3

L. M. Goodman has had his men busy the past week wiring the buildings at the fair ground. The fair this year will hold day and night performances and the grounds are being well prepared for electric illumination. The judges stand, amphitheatre, floral hall, horse stables, hog and sheep house, cattle sheds and poultry section will be equipped with plenty of electric lights so that those who attend at night can see the exhibits fully as well as in the day time. There will be fine fireworks and shows to entertain the evening crowds besides a big dance for the people who care for this kind of entertainment. The ground will be well policed, and with the splendid lights it will aid in keeping everything running orderly. The officers are working hard to make this exhibition the best in the history of the county. They are anxious to have as many as possible go to the grounds before the fair starts and see the fine improvements. No fair in Iowa in a town the size of Britt will have better buildings. Plan to go every day and enjoy yourself.—Britt News

THE MAN IN THE BOX.

He Startled but Did Not Unnerve the Express Car Messenger.

The messenger was alone in the express car, and the train was making fast time about 200 miles outside of San Francisco. At the last stop the messenger had been very sorry to see an ordinary rough box loaded from the truck. The experience was common enough, but it always depressed him a little.

Having set things to rights, he sat down near his little writing desk and dropped into a doze. A sudden lurch of the train roused him, and, as he stretched himself awake, what was his consternation at seeing that the lid of the rough box was lifted about three inches!

Express messengers live in daily expectation of train robbers, and the thought flashed through his mind in the twinkling of an eye that one of those gentry was in the box.

As he got up from his chair he was grieved to see the lid quietly drop into its place. However, he knew that the bandit was no doubt watching his every movement from a hole bored in the side of the box and that what he did he must do cautiously.

Moving out of the hidden man's range of vision, he got his hands on a few nails and a hammer. Then he slowly worked his way through the lofty pile of packages, which he pretended to be rearranging, suddenly threw a heavy trunk on the lid of the rough box, jumped astride it and nailed down the lid securely. The imprisoned robber roared and struggled, but to no avail.

The messenger rushed to the rear of his car and looked back through the coaches. He could see the man's confederates 'going through" the passengers, who held their hands aloft while a member of the gang "covered" them. The express car carried a valuable shipment, and the messenger determined to save it.

Grasping the lever that operated the automatic coupler, he put every ounce of strength he possessed into one terrific jerk. The drawheads parted, and a gap almost instantly opened between the express car and the coaches. Running back through his car, barring the door as he went, the messenger reached the front door and shouted to the engineer to open his throttle. The engine and the express car leaped forward, but not a minute too soon.

The bandits, emerging from the coaches, were insane with rage when they saw themselves foiled and poured volley after volley from their rifles into the fast fleeing car.

From the next station a coach and engine with a posse armed to the teeth went back to the relief of the stalled train, from which the bandits had long since fled. The express car and engine, under a heavy police guard, proceeded to San Francisco. The bandit was unboxed at the police station, and an ugly looking customer he proved to be. He got a sentence of twenty years in the penitentiary.—Wells-Fargo Messenger.

Compulsory Drinking.

Compulsory abstinence would have seemed a complete inversion of the natural order to some of our ancestors. They believed in compulsory drinking, and in some old county mansions may still be seen, I believe, a ring let into the wall of the dining hall for the punishment of the man who would not or could not drink his allotted share of liquor.

The culprit's arm was fixed in the ring, and he was given choice of drinking in the ordinary way or having the liquor he refused poured down his sleeve; hence the medieval jest, "Leaving's sleeving."—London Standard.

For Eastern Laughs.

"Mr. Dewer called again this morning," said the new office boy as Mr. Wilson entered the office. "Did you tell him I had gone to California, as I told you, Frank?" "Yes, sir." "What did he say?" "He asked when you would be back, and I said, 'After lunch.'"—Indianapolis News.

At the safety exposition held in New York recently, Dr Charles Frederick Pabst demonstrated how to make fireproof clothing. He poured from one pound to a gallon of cold water in a solution of ammonium phosphate. Then he took an eight-inch strip of ordinary cotton gauze and dipped it in the ammonium phosphate solution. He dried it with an electric fan and held it in a flame for 30 seconds, but it did not burn. He took another strip of gauze that had not been treated with the solution, and on igniting it it burned in four seconds. He advised that the whole family washing should be made fireproof. The expense for an average size family would be about 15 cents a week.

The banner cotton county in respect to number of bales produced is Ellis county, Texas, in which the ginnings from the growth of 1914 amounted to 143,714 bales—approximately 75 per cent more than the entire crop of Missouri or Florida, about three times that of California and nearly six times that of Virginia. The area of Ellis county is 975 square miles, and its population is about 55,000

The deadly nightshade, in addition to its extremely poisonous quality, is described as full of hatred.

TELEPHONE COMPANY PERFECTS APPEAL ON POLE AND WIRE FEES

Final Outcome Will Affect All Iowa Cities Disposed to Tax Franchise.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 21.—The Iowa Telephone company yesterday perfected an appeal in the supreme court in the action brought by Des Moines to recover $100,000 pole and wire tax as payment for use of the city streets.

The company lost in the Polk county court. Judgment for $71.658.49 was rendered in favor of the city. From this the telephone company appealed to the high court. It claims the right to use the streets without payment of tax. The attorneys for the company assert that the courts ruled in 1903 that the Iowa Telephone company has a right forever to occupy the streets, avenues, alleys and other public places of Des Moines.

The city of Des Moines has been attempting to force the telephone company to apply for a franchise to continue in business here. The pole and wire tax is said to be one of the methods employed. The telephone company is resisting the action spiritedly for the reason that many other Iowa cities have threatened to adopt similar ordinances.

If the supreme court affirms the decision of the Polk county district court in this case, the city of Des Moines will be entitled to collect from the telephone company the amount of the original judgment and $27,683 for every year after 1913 which the case has run, Other Iowa cities are watching the case with interest.

FORT MADISON FACTORY GETS LARGE TIRE ORDER

Fort Madison, Ia., Aug. 21.—The Perfection Tire & Rubber company, Fort Madison's latest manufacturing acquisition and one of the largest and most important industries to be secured to the state within the past year, today closed contracts with an eastern concern, capitalized at $1,000,000, for 1,000 tires per day for five years from the local factory.

The steel workers are now erecting the skeleton of the main factories of the company and some smaller buildings have been completed and the engine and power house will be completed in a few days. The labor required when the factory is in operation will approximate one man per tire. Officers of the company have been in the city for several months and already the population stimulus resulting from the factory's coming is being materially felt.

COMPANY C SURVIVORS HOLD REUNION AT LOGAN

Logan, Ia., Aug. 21.—Five survivors of Company C, Twenty-ninth Iowa infantry, enlisting from Harrison county, at Magnolia, August 18, 1862, and serving in the civil war, held their annual reunion at the home of Mr and Mrs J T Case, of Logan, Wednesday. The home was appropriately decorated for the occasion, red, white and blue being much in evidence.

A fine four-course dinner was served at high noon, patriotic airs were played and the day otherwise spent in a social manner by those in attendance. There were 102 members of Company C at the time of enlistment. The following yesterday answered to the rall call: B. F. Roberts, Ames; J. W. Reed, Ute; Isaac Bedsaul, Magnolia, James and Elias Owens, of Logan.

SERBIAN LABORER SAVES $900 IN TWO YEARS' WORK

Waterloo, Ia., Aug. 21.—That America is indeed the land of opportunity and the place of acquiring quick wealth, even for unskilled foreigners who do not speak the English tongue, is amply shown by testimony given by Dan Curubiga, a Serbian laborer, at the preliminary hearing of Eli Petkovich, who is accused of having stolen $410, which Curubiga had kept under a mattress. The men occupied the same room at a boarding house.

Curubiga, who has been in America but two years, having come almost directly to Waterloo and been employed in the Illinois Central shops, says he saved $900 in the 24 months.

A. E. MINION WINS FIGHT FOR HUMBOLDT INDEPENDENT

Humboldt, Ia., Aug 21—A. E. Minion was today granted his action for specific performance against the administrators of the late Albert M Adams by Judge D. F. Coyle, compelling them to turn over to him the plant of the Humboldt Independent.

The action was based upon alleged contract between Adams, editor of the Independent, for whom Minion had worked for 30 years, that he was to have the plant upon Adams' death.

The property is estimated to be worth about $7,000 The case has attracted much attention over Iowa. Mr Adams was secretary and treasurer of the Upper Des Moines Editorial association for many years.

CREDITABLE EXHIBITS AT MONONA COUNTY FAIR

Onawa, Ia., Aug 21—Hundreds of persons attended the second day of the Monona county fair here yesterday Residents from all parts of the county were present Exhibits of farms products this year are not as numerous as in the past. Perhaps the best appearing exhibit at the fair, is that entered by the Arcola Farmers' club, north of Turin, Ia The arrangement of the products is neat In the stock department, the entrants from the Walnut Ridge stock farm, owned by E. M. Cassady, of Whiting, eclipse all others. Horse racing, both harness and running, are booked for today's program. Relay races between picked quartets of horses furnish much excitement

The feature of yesterday's program was the 10-inning game between Onawa and Mapleton The score stood 1 and 1 at the end of the ninth inning. In the next frame Onawa landed seven runs Batteries—Onawa, Deardorf and Tallman, Mapleton, Hinkley and H. Thompson

Onawa will meet Ute this afternoon in the second game on the program. Saturday's game will be against Blencoe

COSSON DECLARES HE DOES NOT INTEND TO MAKE WILD SCRAMBLE

Little Disposed to Worry About Iowa Governorship—Liquor Question Settled.

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 21.—"Whatever else happens, I will not engage in a mad scramble for the office of governor," was the declaration of Attorney General Cosson in an interview here today. "It is too early to open an active canvass, but if conditions are favorable along next February or March, I may go after the office."

Continuing, he said. "There are sections of the state where I have a large following, and there are other sections where Mr. Allen and Mr. Harding are admittedly strong. I have not formulated as yet any definite platform. Of course, I shall be in favor of permanent roads and by that I mean hard surfaced roads. I am also in favor of control of cities by the municipalities themselves and I shall favor consolidated schools.

"The reforms that I expect to advocate are closely connected with each other, but I believe the question of hard surfaced roads is one of the most important that confronts the state at the present time. I think Governor Clarke's selection of the permanent road commission was well taken and I believe that one of the biggest that will come before the legislature in 1917 will be the question of hard surfaced roads.

"The liquor question in Iowa has been settled and I don't think there is any necessity of entering into the discussion of the question I haven't heard any person state that they desired the return of saloons in Des Moines and that is the most convincing argument against the return of saloons to Des Moines.

"I have worked out a plan whereby all prisoners that are held during the year in city and county jails in the state would be provided with employment. Each year we have 30,000 men in Iowa who are held prisoners in the city and county jails and during the time they are confined in those jails they are in idleness. I believe we should provide work for them."

POLICE SAVE IOWAN FROM CONFIDENCE MEN

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Peter Minnasett, of Victor, Ia., was quietly awaiting a train to his native hearth last night when John Willis, a sport promoter, introduced himself. The two became quite confidential, Mr. Minnasett volunteering the information that back home he was considered some "rassler," and could throw the best in his district. The chance acquaintance volunteered to show Mr Minnasett where he could secure an excellent match of brawn and muscle

Patrolman Henry McMurray espied the two leaving the station together, so he followed. Mr. Minnasett was introduced to Charles Martin, another promoter of sporting events. The Iowan was asked if he would match coins, and he assented. Just when luck was running right the patrolman appeared and nabbed Willis and Minnasett, Martin disappearing.

At the police station Minnasett was released and Willis was held on a charge of operating a confidence game.

"Say," said the Iowan, as he walked out, "I only won $2 from you and that's not much. I'm a bear at this game 'cause we flip 'em every night back home. So long."

FIRE AHEAD OF RIVER IN GAME OF DESTRUCTION

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 21—Doomed apparently to certain destruction by the Missouri river, which is steadily eating its way inland, the dwelling house on the Edwards farm, southeast of Lake Manawa, has escaped drowning by being consumed by fire. The fire that destroyed the house also burned one of the barns, with a large part of its contents. The Edwards family left the house last week, but had not completed the work of taking away the stuff stored in the barn.

The Edwards farm was sold a month ago to Bromley & Lewis, of Glenwood, and has since been sold by them to a man in Nebraska. The deed has not been recorded and the name of the new purchaser has not been learned.

The Edwards farm was one of the most fertile and valuable in the rich territory southeast of Manawa. Until the river began eating its way eastward the house and farm buildings stood so far from the river that the stream was not discernable from the public highway there .Now the river has approached to within 100 feet of its location, with apparent certainty that destruction was inevitable. The roadway has disappeared at several places.

ANNUAL M. E. CONFERENCE AT CENTERVILLE, SEPT. 1

Centerville, Ia., Aug. 21.—The Iowa annual conference of the Methodist church will convene in Centerville, Wednesday, September 1, for the first time since 1880. It will be presided over by Bishop Homer Stuntz, an Iowa man, elected bishop at the last general conference, the only man to secure election on the first ballot. He now has charge of the South American field, but is home for a few months and was assigned this conference to relieve Bishop F. M. Brittol, who is in poor health.

Many leading men of the church will be here to present their causes, including Clarence True Wilson, general secretary of the temperance society, Dr. Freeman D. Bovard, corresponding secretary of the Church Extension society, Dr William S. Boyard, of the board of Sunday schools, Dr. J. F. Ream, of the board of education; Prof. J B. E. Shaw, representing the Freedmen's Aid, and Wilber F. Sheridan, representing the Epworth league.

HARLAN—Rev. W P. Canine, a former well known Shelby county boy, pastor of the Philadelphian Baptist church, of St Paul, Minn., is dead after a lingering illness, from heart disease. Mr Canine was a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Canine, pioneers of Shelby county, and received his education in the Harlan high school, Des Moines college, and the Rochester Theological seminary. Rev. Mr. Canine was pastor of Baptist churches for five years each at New Hampton, Ia.; Tama, Ia., and Jamestown, N D.

DES MOINES—When Iowa suffragists announced their appeal for farmers throughout the state to contribute "a bushel of corn, or the price of a bushel of corn" to the cause of equal suffrage they did so as much for purposes of propaganda as anything else. But from reports beginning to reach headquarters here it appears that the appeal is going to have a result far more substantial than anticipated, and that by the time the state fair is over the suffrage party will have reaped a rich harvest of gold—in grain and money—through the donations from agriculturists.

To Get About $100,000 By Death of Former Famous Church Singer.

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 20.—Mrs. Alice Dutton Atwill, well known in tri-city musical circles, and her sister, Miss Kate Dutton, of Bettendorf, with their nephew, William A. Dutton, formerly of Davenport, have been left an estate of $100,000 by the death of Mrs. Charles Burros-Greene, formerly Miss Jennie Dutton, of New York city and Paris.

Mrs. Greene died very suddenly Tuesday, August 3, at her summer home at Tannersville, N. Y., following an operation for appendictis. She was at one time one of the best known soloists and the highest salaried church singer in New York city. She was married to Charles Burros-Greene, a wealthy business man of New York, several years ago, and on his death was left a considerable fortune. Mrs. Atwill left at once for Tannersville on receipt of word of her sister's death, and is now in Neew York city. She is expected home some time this week.

Mrs. Atwill has a country home on the Bettendorf bluffs, overlooking the river, where she has resided for the past 15 years or more. She has also a studio in the city for her large class of piano pupils.

DISCOVERY OF "VICTIM" SETTLES MURDER MYSTERY

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 20.—After two months' work in an attempt to ferret out the strange disappearance of Homer McBroom, a young farmer living near Laurel, the mystery was cleared up Monday afternoon when Lloyd McBroom, a brother of Homer, and Charles McBroom, of Chicago, a railway postal clerk and a cousin of Homer and Lloyd, reported to E. N. Farber that Homer McBroom was alive and well at Brandon, Buchanan county.

In an effort to find out as much as possible of McBroom's whereabouts, an investigation was started two months ago, in charge of Supervisor W. H. Jones and E. N. Farber. A Des Moines detective was employed and has been working on the case while ostensibly a clerk in a Laurel store. He was unable to find out anything very definite. McBroom's whereabouts were traced as far as September 1, 1914, but after that date all information concerning him ceased.

IOWA ELKS ASSOCIATION IN SESSION AT IOWA CITY

Iowa City, Ia., Aug 20—The annual convention of the Iowa State Association of Elks began here this morning and will last three days. This meeting, together with the national guard encampment and the Johnson county fair, held at the same time, is expected to bring to Iowa City the largest crowds in its history.

The big parade, scheduled for Friday morning, will be featured by the 1,500 men and 600 horses of the militia encamped here. Prizes are offered amounting to nearly $400 for best appearances in the five-mile parade.

The annual open meeting for delegates and the public will be held Thursday morning, and a program of speeches and music will be given The business session is scheduled for that evening. Social meetings for Elks and ladies at the clubhouse, automobile rides through the city, band concerts, dances and a special cabaret program at the Engler theater are among the entertainment features planned for the visitors.

UNKNOWN PERSON FIRES SHOT THROUGH WINDOW

Knoxville, Ia., Aug 20.—An attempt at assassination occurred at the Daniel Maloney home near Knoxville Sunday evening, when a night prowler, evidently on murder bent emptied a charge from a single barreled shotgun into the mattress and pillow directly under the head of Miss Mary Maloney, who had just retired. The would-be assassin shot through the window and screen and only missed the head of his intended victim by the narrow margin of a few inches.

Miss Maloney is housekeeper for her brother, Dan, and a hired man, the three being on a farm near Donley station. The men retired at 8 30 o'clock but Miss Maloney, who was reading, did not retire until something like an hour later She had blown out the light and had just gotten into bed when the crash came through the window. The men responded to her screams as quickly as possible and called the sheriff, who went to the scene at daylight with a posse of men.

BROAD DUTIES ASSIGNED TO NEW COMMISSION

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 20.—Certificates of appointment were mailed yesterday from the governor's office to the seven men selected to form the better roads commission of Iowa.

The certificates assert that the men are appointed "members of the better roads commission for the purpose of investigating and studying as to methods and experience in the construction of hard surfaced roads, materials, costs of maintenance, economic value and advantage of such roads and all such other matters as may pertain to the better roads question, and report the result thereof to the 37th general assembly with recommended legislation." By this language the governor gives the commission the entire good roads problem, with no limitations.

E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, is in communication with D. W. Norris, of Marshalltown, chairman of the better roads commission, with the view of arranging for a meeting of the seven men selected to form the board, for the purpose of organizing before September 1.

TRAMP KILLED AT SPENCER WHILE STEALING RIDE

Spencer, Ia., Aug. 18 —Last evening the west bound train on the Milwaukee ran over a man, a stranger, supposedly a tramp, who was trying to steal a ride. His head was crushed to fragments and was found near the freight depot. The body was picked up a block away frightfully mangled. From letters found in the clothing it is thought his name was Roland Peasley, or Peasley Roland, and Carrollton, Mo. his home.

HOD CARRIERS STRIKE FOR INCREASE, IN PAY

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 17.—Because they demanded an increase of 5 cents per hour, from 35 to 40 cents, plasterers' helpers, members of the local union of the International Association of Hod Carriers and Laborers, struck. As a result building operations that have advanced as far as the plastering are at a temporary standstill.

DES MOINES TO MAKE COURT FIGHT ON ITS RIGHTS TO REGULATE

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 17.—Collusion between the owners or a majority of stock of the Des Moines City railway, the trustees and the holders of the majority of the outstanding bonds is charged in a resistance which was filed yesterday afternoon in the federal court by Corporation Counsel Byers for the city.

The resistance was entered to the application of the Illinois Trust & Savings bank for permission to file a supplemental bill.

The city charges that the bill to prevent an ouster, the filing of the bill to foreclose and the answer and consent to the appointment of a receiver and the granting of an injunction were all the result of an understanding and arrangement among those interested in the street railway.

The object of this arrangement, the resistance alleges, is to furnish a basis, if possible, for the jurisdiction of the federal court and "to create a situation upon which plea might be made for relief from the judgment of the Iowa supreme court."

Federal Judge Wade will hear the application of William McHugh, George F. Henry and other attorneys for the Illinois Trust & Savings bank for permission to file a supplemental bill at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The application recites among other things: "So much stress was placed in the argument by counsel for the defense (the city) upon the inability of this court to protect the rights of the complainants even though this court should adjudicate them to be as claimed, that it has been deemed wise to ask to have these supplemental facts formally brought to the attention of this court and made a part of the record in this case."

CARL FRANKE TALKS ON POLITICAL SITUATION

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 17.—"The newspapers of Iowa have taken all sorts of liberties with my name in connection with both national and state politics." This is the way C. F. Franke, member of the national progressive committee, former chairman of the republican state central committee, and candidate for United States senator, put it in an interview today. Continuing Mr. Franke said:

"I have endeavored to keep still, but the evident intent of the newspapers is to draw me out to ascertain my position I have not returned to the republican party, and I have not deserted the progressive party. Those statements are the most important I can make at this time. From present indications of what the next national republican convention will be, I can see no reason why a progressive like myself, who left the republican party in 1912, should return at this time. If there is any reason it hasn't been shown in open discussion or by any sort of reasoning I have been able to get hold of. It will be the same old sham program of favorite sons getting enough state delegates to control the convention, and let the other fellows think they have something to say about the nomination.

"In regard to state politics I consider it entirely too early to say what the situation in Iowa will be. According to the work some republicans are doing one would think the primary election was near at hand. The voters, however, will not get very excited over the contest for some time to come, and the progressives will have plenty of time to talk it over."

MUTE COUPLE CELEBATE GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 17.—More than 100 relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Zorbaugh of this city yesterday gathered at their home and joined with them in the celebration of their golden wedding anniversary. A family dinner at noon was followed by a picnic gathering in Fairmont park, followed by a reception in the evening at the First Presbyterian church.

Especial interest attaches to the event from the fact that both the principals in the affair are deaf and dumb. They have resided here for many years, coming to Council Bluffs from Iowa City when the state school for the deaf was removed here. They were married at Iowa City by the first superintendent of the Iowa school for the deaf, the Rev Benjamine Talbot, and at that time both Mr. and Mrs. Zorbaugh were teachers in the institution. Neither was born deaf but both lost their hearing at an early age.

MERCHANT'S WIFE GETS $10,000 IN SETTLEMENT

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 17.—A stipulation was entered into here Friday by H. G. F. Wessels, a prominent merchant of Laurel, and his wife, Mrs. Fannie E. Wessels, who is now living in Melbourne with her father, Henry Hessenius.

A week ago Mrs. Wessels filed in the district court a petition in divorce, setting forth statutory grounds and cruel and inhuman treatment as causes for action. The plaintiff asked $15,000 permanent allmony, which was half of what she claimed her husband was worth.

According to the stipulation the case will not be contested, Wessels pays his wife $10,000 and gives her all of the household furniture "she may desire." Mrs. Wessels will be granted her decree.

Sheldon, Ia., Aug. 17.—There are 137 entries for the races at the Sheldon district fair to be held here this week. (Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.) The entry list for Wednesday is 19 for the 1:14 pace, 14 for the 2:30 trot; for Thursday, 17 for the 2:15 trot, 20 for the 2:17 pace and 15 for the 2:20 trot; for Friday, 18 for the free for all pace, 15 for the 2:25 trot and 19 for the 2:25 pace. There will be night programs on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, with Martin's fireworks. The Sheldon commercial band, 30 pieces, will provide the music. The grounds are packed with concessions.

MANY MAROONED BY CLOUDBURST AT MILNERVILLE

Milnerville, Ia., Aug. 17.—One of the worst storms of the season visited this locality Sunday evening, being in the nature of a cloudburst. Within 15 minutes after the storm broke the little creeks were roaring torrents, and the level Broken Kettle road in one place for at least a mile a river of water high enough to cover the hubs of automobiles. Eighteen people were marooned at the C. L. Knapp home, unable to cross the bridge in either direction and many other pleasure parties were obliged to take refuge in other homes nearby.

GEORGIA STILL ABLE TO HANDLE AFFAIRS

Governor Insists State's Right to Responsibilities—Resents Suggestions

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 23.—Governor Harris let it be known today that the people of George would resent outside interference or advice in dealing with conditions growing out the lynching of Leo M Frank He said

"If the members of the mob are brought to justice, it will be through the efforts of Georgia officials and courts, supported by the sentiment of the citizens of the state, and not through the newspaper editorials and resolutions of indignation and offers of rewards coming from other states

"I am afraid these things will only serve to aggravate a situation that already is deeply humiliating to our people, and if they continue will eventuate in a great deal more harm than good."

So far as the public is advised, the only forward step taken in connection with the lynching today was the announcement that the Governor soon would ask the prosecuting officials of Baldwin and Cobb counties to confer with him on what future action shall be taken The state prison farm is in Baldwin county and Frank's death so far as known, occurred in Cobb county

Apparently the only tangible investigation of the lynching actually under way is that being conducted by Coroner Booth of Cobb county, who impaneled a jury soon after he cut down Frank's body last Tuesday morning, but postponed the sitting for a week

Coroner Booth said today that he had discovered only two witnesses who had seen the lyching party in automobiles One of these witnesses is William Frey, but neither was able to fix the identity of any member of the party. Frank was recognized, they say, because of his only partly clad figure.

The lynchers wore heavy automobile goggles which effectively served the purpose of masks

DEATH LIST OF 37 ON SUNKEN LINER

Arabic Death List Increased By Discovery That Eleven More Passengers Are Among Missing.

London Aug 23—An amended list of passengers lost on the Arabic gives a total of 16, which, with the 21 members of the crew who were lost, places the number of dead at 35

London, Aug 21—Dr Edmund F Wood and Mrs. Josephine L. Bruguiere are the only Americans in the list of passengers. The other passengers whose names do not appear in the list of survivors, and are believed to have perished were all British subjects The cabin passengers were.

Miss Mary English
Mrs. Mary Eaton
Mrs. Negus.
W. G. Randall
Mrs. W G Randall
Miss Irene Tattersall
Mrs. Frank Tattersall
Mrs. John H Neave

The names of six steerage passengers, four women and two men, also appear in the list

The management of the White Star line telegraphed today to Captain Finch an expression of its profound admiration of the excellent discipline and exemplary conduct of all concerned, which resulted in minimizing what, under other circumstances, might have proven to be an infinitely greater calamity"

New York, Aug 23.—The body of Mrs. Josephine L. Bruguiere, one of the two Americans lost with the Arabic has been found, the White Star line announced today This was based on a conversation, it was said, with Mrs. Marion Bruguiere, the dead woman's daughterinlaw, who was quoted as saying she had received a cable message to that effect.

Maid's Body Found.

Young Mrs. Bruguiere also was quoted by a representative of the line as having said that the body of her motherinlaw's French maid, Margaret Boudet, has been recovered, too. M Boudet, one of the two maids who sailed with Mrs. Bruguiere, had heretofore been listed among the survivors.

It was said that the cablegram received by Mrs. Marion Bruguiere contained no details.

London Aug 23—At least five passengers, two of whom were Americans, and 40 members of the crew lost their lives when the White Star liner Arabic was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off Fastnet Nine other passengers are missing and are believed to have perished.

The two Americans who went down with the ship were Mrs. Josephine Bruguiere, of New York, and Dr. Edmund T. Wood, of Janesville, Wis. Mrs. Bruguiere was thrown into the water and kept afloat for some time by her son Louis, who was forced to relinquish his hold when he was struck by a piece of wreckage. Nothing was seen of Wood after the steamer was struck.

Most of the missing members of the crew belonged to the engineer's staff. They remained at their posts and went down with the ship.

Gave No Warning.

Captain Finch and the other officers of the Arabic assert that the submarine gave them no warning. They declare the torpedo was fired as they were going to the rescue of the steamer Dunsley which had just been torpedoed, presumably by the same submarine.

That the loss of life was not much heavier was due to the preparations made by the officers in view of the possibility of an attack while passing through the "war zone," to the fine weather which prevailed and to the splendid discipline maintained by the crew. Life belts had been placed on the decks and the lifeboats swung out. As soon as the ship was struck, rafts were flung over the side. Many of the passengers and crew who were thrown into the water climbed on board these rafts or were dragged on to them by persons already upon them.

Baggage Lost.

The Americans who reached Queenstown were cared for by the United States consul. With the other passengers they left Ireland for England last night. They lost all their baggage and many of them wore borrowed clothing until the consul had provided for them.

WASHINGTON FEARS ARABIC CASE WILL DRIVE U.S. TO SEVERANCE OF RELATIONS

ELEVEN DEAD IN ST. LOUIS FLOOD

Chicago Aug 23—The Texas storm which yesterday swept northward crossing Illinois and touching Chicago, was central over Indiana today and moving east, according to the local weather bureau It was somewhat decreased in energy today, but high winds and heavy rains still followed in its path

St Louis, Mo Aug 23—Eleven persons 10 of whom were negroes, are known to have perished in the flood that swept the west and southern parts of St Louis and some of St Louis and some of the suburbs yesterday, and two persons are missing Nine bodies were found today, one that of a white woman and eight those of negroes. The missing are negroes.

The wind and rain storm was an offshoot of the storm which swept Texas earlier in the week It did damage estimated at several million dollars to crops and other property, seriously impaired transportation and wire facilities and endangered thousands of lives.

St Louis, its suburbs and neighboring Illinois towns, suffered most from the flood waters which followed the storm Seven to nine inches of rain fell in 24 hours.

At East Alton a 100-foot section of the new levee gave way and a wall of water from the Wood river rushed toward the towns of Woodriver, Benbow and East Alton, but two horsemen who had stood watch at the levee, raced 100 yards ahead of the oncoming water calling right and left. "Run for your lives!"

In less than an hour the three towns were covered with 10 feet of water, but not a soul had lingered. The population of Woodriver and Benbow City raced for West Wood river, while residents of East Alton took refuge in Alton

Springfield, Mo., reported that the damage to the Ozark peach crop would exceed $500,000, the damage to corn is estimated at near $1,000,000, real estate men believe the aggregate property damage to St Louis buildings will be in the vicinity of $1,000,000.

The flood waters receded rapidly today and, as the waters went down, policemen, firemen and national guardsmen searched the houses for missing City sewers, with the cessation of rain, drained off rapidly the waters that had flooded streets in the west part of town

By far the greater part of St Louis was not affected by the storm, other than by the inconvenience the heavy downpour caused, and the flood damage was limited on the west side of the Mississippi river to a long and narrow strip along the southern, through the southwestern and along the western parts of the city Suburbs adjoining this section were damaged and residents of other suburbs were inconvenienced by the discontinuance of suburban trains and traction service

Transportation service was rapidly resuming a normal condition today.

MEXICANS FIRE ON U. S. CAVALRYMEN

Washington, Aug. 23.—A detachment of American cavalry was fired upon yesterday while on a practice march between Ranch 80 and Lochiel, Ariz., by Mexicans over the border line. General Funston, in reporting the incident to the war department today, said 3,000 Mexicans, under General Calles, were at Santa Cruz, near Lochiel.

Washington, Aug 23.—General Obregon's reply to the Pan-American appeal for peace in Mexico, received here today politely refers the Pan-American conferees to General Carranza, for their answer

"You may answer in my name to the above mentioned gentlemen," said General Obregon, "that I am transmitting their note to Citizen Venustiano Carranza. The communication denotes clearly that the honorable gentlemen who have signed it were absolutely in ignorance of the solidarity of our movement and of the perfect control which the first chief exercises over the whole constitutionalist army My opinion is that if our sister republics are, as I believe them to be animated by lofty principles of morality and sincerely desire for our beloved Mexico a future of peace and prosperity and are ready to lend their aid to accomplishing it, they could do so by the mere act of not allowing themselves to be misguided by false information or unscrupulous influences and allow the constitutionalist administration to end its work of pacification and to establish a really democratic government. In this case the Mexican people would look upon the brother country with profound gratitude and sympathy."

COTTON DECLARATION TOMORROW.

200 KNOWN DEAD ON TEXAS COAST

Governor Ferguson Advises the President Storm Toll Will Not Exceed 300—Damage Estimates Exaggerated.

Washington, D. C., Aug 23.—Governor Ferguson, of Texas, today telegraphed President Wilson that the loss of life from the tropical storm along the Texas coast will not exceed 300, and that estimates of the damage have been greatly exaggerated He said the situation was under control. The message was in reply to a message from President Wilson offering sympathy and assistance.

Galveston, Tex., Aug 21—Mayor Fisher, of Galveston, today said it was probable that the citizens there would send an appeal to the Texas legislature asking that they be given an extension upon their taxes in order to meet the big financial drain caused by Monday's storm.

The people, according to the mayor, already are discussing additional grade raising and filling to meet the new problems which the latest storm brought to light. A wall inclosing the inner harbor has been suggested as a protection in case of further storms.

Work continued at increased speed upon the cleaning up of the city, every available man being put to work by the authorities. It was promised that before night water in fair supply would be coming into the city through the big main from Alta Loma.

Galveston, Tex., Aug 21.—The fourth day after the cessation of one of the most severe storms Galveston has ever experienced, found this city gradually but steadily approaching normal. Last night the city still showed plainly the distressing effects of storm and tidal waves, but the worst of the damage had been more or less remedied, and putting of the city in order was progressing as rapidly as possible. Fear apparently had been eliminated of a food shortage and communication with the outside world by wire had been established Two Western Union wires and a Southwestern telephone company wire were working via the submarine cables to Virginia Point and overhead to Houston Wireless communication had been established between the army transport Buford and other ships in the harbor with the radio station at Port Arthur.

Need For Water Worst.

One disappointment was the failure to bring water from the municipal reservoir to the city. Early in the day officials expressed the belief that before night the great main between here and Alta Loma would be repaired and fresh water would be available to augment the limited water supply which had been allowed for drinking and cooking, that clothing could be washed and bath tubs be used, but the water did not arrive. Gas was in use last night in part of the business district, but the plant had not resumed full operations. There was no power for operating the city electric plant.

The Evening Tribune, which since Tuesday has been issuing a sheet 12x18 inches, yesterday afternoon issued four pages of seven columns of regular size, printed on presses operated by power from motor trucks.

SHIPS SAIL DESPITE SUBMARINE CAMPAIGN

Trans-Atlantic Liners Bear 2,000 Passengers Toward War Zone.

New York, Aug. 23.—Recent activities of German submarines had no apparent effect on sailings of trans-Atlantic ships from this port today. Four liners, flying American, British French and Italian flags, with more than 2,000 passengers on board, in addition to full cargoes of exports, sailed, or prepared to sail before night.

The Cunard liner, Orduna, with 275 passengers, of whom seven are Americans, left port at 10:20 a. m., for Liverpool. The American line steamship, New York, was to sail at noon with 470 passengers. The French line steamer, La Touraine, with 220 passengers, was to leave at 3 p. m. for Bordeaux, and the Italian liner, Stampalia, with 1,087 passengers, will let go her line at 4 p. m. The passengers on the Stampalia include more than 1,000 in the third class, the majority of whom are men going to Italy to enlist for the war.

JEWELRY ASSOCIATION WINS SAMPLE RATE CASE

Washington, D. C., Aug. 21.—The Interstate Commerce commission, deciding today a proceeding instituted by 15 associations of manufacturing, wholesale and retail jewelers against 69 railroads operating in all parts of the country, upheld the contention of traveling salesmen that present regulations defining sample baggage as "that carried by commercial travelers, and not for sale or free distribution," are unreasonable.

The commission prescribed a new regulation which does not prohibit the occasional sale or free distribution of samples. All the railroads were ordered to cease enforcing their present restrictions on October 15. The order will stand for at least two years.

CONVICT POLICE ASSAILANTS.

Boston, Aug. 21.—Jail sentences varying in length from three to 18 months were imposed today on four men convicted of assaulting policemen and rioting in connection with the departure of several hundred Italian reservists for Italy last Sunday.

Von Tirpitz Element of German Navy In Favor of Kaiser Who Has Offered Thanks For Effective Work In Blockade—Interests of America Appear to Have No Place In Regard of German Government.

EXPECT PRESIDENT WILL STRIKE SUDDENLY

State of War Would Likely Follow Dismissal of Ambassador Von Bernstorff—Few Believe Failure of Lansing to Strike Effective Note Will Be Followed By Complete Surrender of Principle Involved.

Washington, Aug. 23.—It was announced at the state department today that Ambassador Gerard probably will be directed to call the German government's attention to the sinking of the White Star liner Arabic and to invite an explanation.

This was the first indication from any official source that Germany would have an opportunity to give the reasons for the attack apparently in disregard of President Wilson's solemn warning that such an act would be regarded as deliberately unfriendly.

The state department's attitude is that if the German government has any facts which in its opinion go to mitigate the circumstances of the attack the Berlin foreign office should have opportunity to present them.

Today's announcement moreover indicates that before President Wilson takes any action there may be some exchange of diplomatic communications.

It is understood that the state department's policy is to show the utmost deliberation consistent with the delicate question and to omit no opportunity of avoiding a severance of relations with Germany so long as there is a reasonable expectation that a sufficient excuse can be given for the sinking of the Arabic.

London, Aug. 23.—The British government today authorized the statement that the steamer Arabic was not being convoyed when she was torpedoed by a German submarine.

[From The Tribune Bureau.]

Washington, Aug 23.—Unless extenuating circumstances which are not yet revealed are shown to exist in the case of the sinking of the Arabic, the administration will soon have to decide what action it must take in satisfaction for a German act which was "deliberately unfriendly."

The question most freely discussed in Washington today is this: "Will the United States break diplomatic relations with Germany?"

Nor are public men here blind to the obvious fact that if diplomatic relations are broken the consequence of such a course sooner or later will probably be a state of open war with Germany.

Moreover, to a greater extent than at any time except the days following soon after the sinking of the Lusitania there is a revived discussion of whether Germany is really seeking to drag this nation into the European conflict, thinking that thus munitions will be shut off from the allies and that in the peace conference it will be well to have the United States a party.

Regardless of whether this is true or otherwise, this appears to be a fact of extreme importance in the present situation:

The Von Tirpitz element is completely in the saddle so far as German naval affairs are concerned; the submarine campaign against allied shipping is being renewed with great energy, it is to be kept up regardless of consequences to neutrals, and the kaiser has lately expressed his deep appreciation of Von Tirpitz by conferring new honors upon him. In other words, it looks much as if the German government had determined to wage submarine war on English and allied shipping to the limit and deemed it of much more moment to cripple such shipping than to placate the feelings of this government.

If this is correct, and there is much to bear it out, this government is almost certain to find itself steadily crowded to the wall, steadily forced into a position where technicalities must be ignored, protests abandoned and action taken.

Today two flatly contradictory views obtain here. One is that the administration, having used strong language to Germany in previous notes, and having failed to make any visible impression, will back up when it comes time for a showdown.

The other is, and it is held by some of the men who know the president best, that he will wait until he has what he regards as indisputable proof that Germany intends to pay no attention to American rights at sea and then will act with a celerity and a directness that will surprise this country and Europe.

So far as can be known no one has any real authority for saying what the president will do, and it continues to be a case where it is anybody's guess.

In the Arabic case officials today continued to wait for fullest details of what occurred. Inasmuch as certain technical questions continue to be raised, these will have to be cleared up. That the vessel was torpedoed unwarned and American lives lost continues to be the state of facts indicated. American survivors at Queenstown insist there was no warning.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 21.—Tension increased in official quarters when consular messages forwarding affidavits of American survivors of the British liner Arabic brought definite information that the vessel was torpedoed without warning, and that probably some Americans had been lost. It seemed that but one point remained to be cleared up—whether the Arabic attempted to ram the submarine or whether a change of the liner's course to assist the already sinking British steamer Dunsley, nearby, was misinterpreted by the German submarine commander as a hostile approach. The attitude of the American government for the moment is receptive, anxiously awaiting accurate details, and reserving judgment as to whether the action was "deliberately unfriendly." The final decision rests with President Wilson.

Hope for Word From Gerard.

In addition to awaiting information from the American survivors, the embassy in London and American consuls, officials expect some word from Ambassador Gerard at Berlin to indicate whether the attack without warning on the Arabic had the sanction of the German government. Should Germany offer an explanation, asserting there were qualifyi. circumstances, such as an attempt by the Arabic to escape or ram the submarine, the disposition on Germany's part to discuss the case would in all likelihood be construed here as a disavowal of any intention deliberately to violate the principles for which the United States has contended.

Officials here have found it difficult to reconcile the act with previous declarations from Germany that the purpose of the submarine warfare was to prevent the carriage of munitions of war to the allies. The Arabic was bound for an American port and carried, therefore, no contraband.

The censorship in Great Britain of press dispatches on the disaster created the impression that perhaps facts were being withheld which might affect the case vitally. Official messages, however, are not subject to censorship, and confidence prevailed that within another 24 hours the circumstances of the torpedoing would be definitely learned.

Boats Drifted Hours.

For a while today some officials, hearing that the Arabic was convoyed for a time on her outward journey from Liverpool, thought this might have caused the German submarine to disregard the rule of visit and search and the giving of warning. Later, however, the statement of an American survivor, transmitted officially, told how the life boats drifted for hours before being picked up.

This was regarded as destroying the theory that convoys could have been anywhere in the vicinity when the Arabic was sunk. Even if the Arabic was convoyed part way, it would not affect her status, in the opinion of lawyers in the state department, who declared numerous precedents and decisions establish that it is only the actual presence of the convoy with a merchantman at the time the latter is encountered which can alter the rule of visit and search.

The theory that the Arabic may have attempted to ram the German submarine was scouted by naval officers of high rank, who said the prevailing impression that a large passenger vessel could ram under water craft was erroneous. The submarine can maneuver about so quickly, they explained, as to be able to torpedo the larger vessel without difficulty. Officials also though that no vessel of large tonnage, especially those with passengers aboard, would even take such a risk.

BRITISH FINANCIERS MAY VISIT NEW YORK

Projected Loan Must Await Arrival of Authorized Agents.

New York, Aug. 21.—Misgivings as to developments in this country's relations with Germany as the result of the destruction of the Arabic was the feature of the foreign exchange situation today. The possibility that American bankers might be called upon to finance a large domestic loan gave rise to many rumors concerning the negotiations now pending over the flotation of a $150,000,000 foreign credit loan, or some other form of British credit here.

"We can well conceive of such a situation," was the comment of one international banker whose views were sought upon this point.

A report that negotiations for the flotation of a British credit loan of from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 to pay for American supplies purchased by foreign buyers had been virtually suspended, was denied.

Financial representatives here of the allied powers, while asserting that the situation had become complicated by reason of the Arabic incident, refrain to discuss prospects for placing the contemplated foreign loan as did also domestic financiers.

Aside from the Arabic the feature of the day in foreign exchange markets was the reported decision of British financiers and treasury officials to send a deputation of three men from London to New York to arrange the details of the projected loan. Their arrival here, it was said, would be unanimously welcomed by American bankers as an obviation of the difficulties of negotiating a loan of such large proportions in these days of censored and delayed cables.

NO GRAPE JUICE FOR LANSING

Washington, D. C., Aug. 21.—At the first official dinner of the new secretary of state, Robert Lansing, to be given Monday night for Cardoso, Brazilian minister at Mexico City, now visiting here, the grape juice issue raised by Bryan will be involved. The new secretary will serve wines and revert to the old custom.

Elbert Bede Says:

A girl can marry a man for his money but she can hardly be a wife to him.

The United States has a hardy constitution or it couldn't have stood so much battering.

A man who starts smoking with the idea that it is easy to break off any time, has a pipe dream.

Did you ever say, "Oh, that's all right," when you wanted to condemn the person to eternal fires.

The only kind of popularity that is worth while comes from doing the things that are worth while

Most of us can comfort ourselves by saying, "Well, the neighbors said we were a pretty baby, anyway."

If some people could have all the money they could use they would still kick about the price of things.

We are quite frequently surprised at the good we unexpectedly find in those we had condemned as wholly bad.

What's the use of promising to love. If you already love it is unnecessary to promise, and if you do not love it will do no good to promise.

SEPTEMBER

As seen by the—

Ice man: Alas! 'twill soon be o'er.

School boy: The school bell tolls the knell of parting fun. Displayed in windows are the book and rule It seems vacation is hardly begun, when here again we are trotted back to school.

Sixty-four years ago this month gold was discovered in California. In a short time thereafter Easterners had carried it all on the other side of the Rockies, and now California is putting on a couple of expositions in an effort to get it back. It has been but 68 years ago this month, too, since the United States went down and took Mexico City, and now it looks like history would have to repeat itself, as it has a habit of doing.

The 23rd the moon will be full and Autumn will begin; the housewife, fearful of a frost, will bring her garden in. Then pickle-lilly, chili-sauce, preserves, and buters, too, will fill the jars they filled last year, and many that are new. It seems incredulous that we could ever eat it all, but mother knows how much it takes—she does it every fall. The fields of corn are ripening, the streams are running low; tho summer wanes—but let 'er wane—there 'll be no yard to mow. Another thing—we soon can dress in comfort and in peace without a feeling that we are but melting chunks of grease.

RUTH SENDS WORD

"Here is a letter from Ruth," said her sister happily, as she held it out to her mother. She is coming home next week and wants me to wash her white corduroy skirt for her, and she has given me directions for doing it. This is what she says: "Make a soap jelly of any of the good white soaps, and put the skirt to soak in water strong with the jelly. Then put a cupful of the jelly into a boiler, and boil the skirt for 20 minutes. Rinse in clear water until all the soap is gone, blue and hang out to dry while dripping. Do not wring or squeeze. While on the line pull into shape, and do not iron." She says if I follow these directions her skirt will look like new.

"Well, get right to work on it," said her mother, "after all Ruth has done for the rest of us, we should be willing to do almost anything for her."

Among the wonders of the Panama-Pacific Exposition is a block of coal weighing 4250 pounds. It measures 6½ x 5 x 3 feet and came from Montana.

In modern war it now costs on the average about $15,000 to kill a man. In the Boer War this expense ran up to nearly $40,000,

Mica is the name applied to a group of metals which are noted as being easily split into sheets. These sheets may be so thin that 1000 of them are required to make an inch in thickness. It is found in granite and quartz and is mined in Norway, Sweden, New Hampshire and North Carolina. It is transparent, will stand heat and is used in place of glass where there is more or less heat.

Considerable threshing has been done in this vicinity and the farmers are as busy as can be. The oats in this locality is turning out from 60 to 90 bushels per acre. One instance is reported where the oats went even more. John Pals, southeast of town, had four acres of oats that yielded 500 bushels, or 125 bushels per acre. This is certainly a record yield in this locality. The farmers have no reason for complaint as to the hay and oats crop this season, and the corn will doubtless yet yield a bountiful harvest. A good old mother in Israel heard a cricket singing one evening last week, which she said was a sure sign of frost in six weeks. If the prophecy only holds true and frost does not come until the first of October, Iowa will get a good crop of corn and the early fears of the farmers will prove to have been groundless. — Belmond Herald-Press.

Ou in Wisconsin they take the boulders from the fields, first dynamiting them so they can be handled, and then crushing them into small pieces. Mixing these on the roadbed by first covering with crushed rock, then shoveling sand on top and thoroughly sprinkling with crude oil and rolling until a smooth oval surface is obtained. Thus a roadbed is made six inches thick that defies wagon wheels carrying four tons. We hear they are going to utilize "hard heads" in this state too, but in a different manner. Fritz Norris and Bernard Murphy are two of these "hard heads" and others will be found. They will mix brains with road materials, and we will get some roads and the "hard heads" will not have to be crushed either.—Britt Tribune.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

EDNA EARLE CRUM CONCERT PARTY

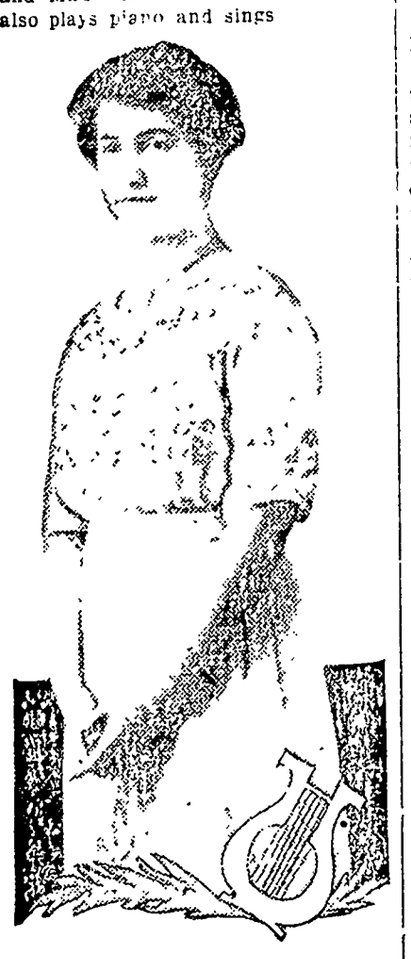
Seldom is a program of more artistic merit given in Lyceum than the one presented by the Edna Earle Crum Concert Company.

Miss Crum begins her part of the program with two movements of one of the most popular of violin concertos. It is played nearly every season by the great artists with the Thomas Orchestra of Chicago and other orchestras in the large musical centers Her second number is a novelty in violin music, being the famous Sextette from Lucia for violin alone This in the original is a six part selection

EDNA EARLE CRUM
with Edna Earle Crum Concert Party

and playing it on one violin is not far short of a marvel Kubelik played this number in his first Tour of the United States Miss Crum also gives an interesting group number which is of a descriptive nature She plays the "Cradle Song" by Schutt which Mischa Elman has arranged and made popular thru the United States. The Brook" by Boisdeffer in which the accompaniment represents rippling water, and "The Chase" in which Bugle calls and galloping horses' hoof beats are heard. Miss Crum's last number is a whirlwind of technic, being "La Ronde des Lutins" or "Dance of the Goblins" by Bozinni.

Miss Crum's support this year will consist of Miss Marie A Barney, a concert pianiste and soprano soloist and Miss Clare Kvello, a read who also plays piano and sings



MISS BARNEY
with Edna Earle Crum Concert Party

Miss Barney is a composer of merit and sings and plays some of her own selections. One of the attractive features of her work is her pianologues using "The Boy Who Stuttered and the Girl Who Lisped" successfully.

Hon. Granville Jones, the Humorist, Politician and Sociologist.

Granville Jones was born in the Arkansas mountains in 1861, though he insists that this event should not be combined with the great Civil war as the latter would probably have occurred anyway. He has had a varied experience, as a public speaker on political, religious and sociological questions. He began by discussing the Louisiana Lottery question when a mere youth and was one of the pioneer champions and debaters of the local option question in the South. His present home is Howard, S. D., where he is a member of the law firm of Jones & Kavaney.

MISS KVELLO
with Edna Earle Crum Concert Party

Miss Kvello uses dialect numbers in her part of the program and is very successful in her child impersonation numbers

Do not fail to hear these artists when they appear in our Lyceum Course

THE MEISTERSINGERS IN A VARIETY PROGRAM

Variety is a mighty good thing when part of it is not mediocre The Meistersingers were built originally as the University Four all being university boys with much quartet and glee club experience. Three of them play the piano, an unusual accomplishment for boys All are soloists, and from the heavy rumbling bass to the tenor who can live around high C all the time no fault can be found with the range or the blending The organ chimes, which form a novelty instrument, are beginning to be considered a standard and necessary part of the equipment of any first class orchestra or band, give the needed change from vocal music to make the program a well rounded affair There is a sweetness, coupled with a volume, not to be found in any other instrument, and the chimes warm up the heart of the most cynical and round out a male quartet program as no other instrument can. In fact, it is worth the price of admission to hear them alone. It doesn't matter as to technique. They are not intended for anything but simple music, but simple music takes on a new meaning when interpreted on the chimes. Church music especially is effectively rendered on this novel instrument, and there is a sweetness to be found nowhere else

The set of chimes carried by the Meistersingers Male Quartet is not the ordinary small set occasionally seen with orchestra. It is a large instrument twelve feet long and nine feet high when set up and is usually played by all four boys playing at once Since each tone on the chimes is a combination of three distinct sounds it is not hard to imagine what the effect must be when manipulated by eight hands at once

Hear the Meistersingers without fail, because this will probably be their last trip in this territory.

BILL BONE WAS BORN ON AN ILLINOIS FARM

Bill Bone is a native of Illinois. He was born on the farm, where he followed the plow, pitched hay and split wood some years after he had reached manhood. Bill learned to work the soil, as well as his father, and after his parents left the farm and Bill took to teaching school he continued to work, becoming one of the successful teachers of Menard county, Illinois. After eight years of pedagogy Bill took to the Lyceum field, where he has been a constant worker for nine years, each year growing in demand and popularity until today he stands as one among the three foremost readers of his own verse upon the platform. Bill was taught in boyhood, by his parents, to work out his own salvation, and he did. While he worked with his hands for them, he worked with his brains for Bill. He lived close to earth. Mother nature saw he was natural—one of her true children and she bade him speak, and Bill answered in rhyme and just kept on rhyming until today his poetry and philosophy have been recognized and appreciated by hundreds of intellectual societies and colleges in over thirty states. His early home is not far from where Abraham Lincoln began his great career—Old Salem. This historical spot is now the home of one of the biggest assemblies in the United States—Old Salem Chautauqua. Three years ago Bill was called back to become its superintendent and platform manager. Strange as it may seem, he made good—at home and is still with them giving one evening program each year along with his managerial duties. His poems on Lincoln are said to be masterpieces and his first book of verse will be published this year.

COSSON FOR GOVERNOR

He Is Without a Doubt the Most Talked of Man Today.

HE STANDS FOR PRINCIPLE

If Elected The Law Enforcement Will Proceed Without the Slightest Friction and Unsettlement of Business.

The platform upon which Cosson will make the race for the nomination for Governor may be briefly summed up in the following:

To those friends and citizens who believe that my record as a public official, my knowledge of constitutional law gained by years of experience in dealing with constitutional questions in the office of attorney general, my experience as a legislator, and as an administrative and executive officer, and my knowledge of the needs of the state and her institutions, together with my stand upon public questions, makes me the logical candidate at the next primary, I suggest that affirmative work be done in my behalf instead of wasting time in attempting to arrange conferences or in criticising other candidates, present or prospective. If I win I desire to win upon my own strength, and not the weakness of some other candidate.

I have sufficient confidence in the intelligence and the discriminating judgment of the people of Iowa to believe that if a majority of our people think in view of the peculiar circumstances, and the problems which will confront our state during the next few years, that I can render the most service I will be selected regardless of whether there are two or more candidates in the field.

GEORGE COSSON.

COSSON COMMENTS

Views of Press Concerning His Work and Candidacy.

IDEAL MAN FOR GOVERNOR

Widely Informed and Broadly Sympathetic and Whose Thought and Act Are In Tune With Best Purposes of the Times.

Attorney-General Cosson has made a splendid record in his present office, has had vast experience in the political arena, is honest and is a vote getter which no one will doubt when the votes are counted. Iowa should feel proud to get the opportunity to vote for such a man as George Cosson for governor, a self-made man, an upright man and a man that always stands for betterment in everything. Cast your vote for Cosson for governor at the 1916 primaries. Every voter should be a booster for Cosson on his past record, which has proven him a man well qualified for the office he seeks.

Harlan Republican: The thing for dry republicans to do would seem to be that they should concentrate on Attorney General Cosson. He has the wider reputation as a dry and would be a platform of himself. His reputation as a law enforcer is greater than that of perhaps any other state official in the nation.

Guthrie Center Guthrian says to make the new temperance laws effective it is necessary to elect an executive in sympathy with them; that "George Cosson had demonstrated his fitness for the job and it will be handed him at the proper time."

Des Moines Daily News: Cosson is entitled to support for governor not merely because he is the man who can beat Harding, but because under all the circumstances he is the best qualified man for the place.

THE SILO IS MORE IMPORTANT THAN EVER THIS YEAR

Due to the exceeding wet season there will undoubtedly be a great deal of immature corn this year. The silo is a source of saving this crop and should be included among the buildings on every Iowa farm.

We find by analysis that over 50 per cent of the food value is in the stock and leaf. If only the ears are gathered, we are securing but half the value of our crop. In other words, if the farmer has 50 acres of corn worth $20 per acre, for the ear alone he secures $1000 worth of grain, or 60 per cent of the crop. He leaves the other 40 per cent, or $666 worth in the field. Of course it would be impossible for all of the corn to be placed in the silo, but if 25 per cent was made into ensilage it would mean a great deal to the farmers of the United States.

Again, if we compare the value of silage and corn stover, we find that the latter is only one-half as good as good as the former. The stalk and leaves are preserved in the fodder, but it is seldom that animals will eat the stalk It becomes dry and brittle and is not palatable, especially to milk cows. By doubling the feeding value of the corn plant, we are enabled to double the number of animals which can be fed from that crop.

Silage as a milk producer compares very favorably to the other more concentrated and more expensive feeds. It is a very palatable, succulent food, and can well be called the substitute for pasture. We are all aware of the increase of milk flow when cows are turned to pasture in the spring, after receiving nothing but dry feeds for six months. The milk cow is a sensitive animal at hard work, and therefore should be provided with the best food possible. The succulence furnished by silage acts as a spur to the appetite of the cow and causes her to relish her food in winter as well as in summer.

At the Ohio Station several years ago, the substitution of silage for grain in the ration proved very successful. Silage was used to take the place of over half the grain and proved much cheaper. The silage ration produced milk for 68 cents per 100 pounds and butter-fat at the rate of 13 cents per pound. The grain ration produced milk at $1.05 per 100 pounds and butter-fat for 22 cents per pound. This made the profit per month with the silage-fed $5.86 and those of the grain-fed $2.46, or more than double the income per cow. If the same method of feeding was applied on the farm, undoubtedly the same results could be obtained.

For many summers previous to this one, the pastures have been very poor owing to dry weather in July and August. At this season the milk flow drops and is difficult to be restored. The dairymen should have something to take the place of grass at this time and the use of soiling crops or silage is the only substitute. Soiling crops are good, but as a rule require too much labor. They must be cut every day and hauled to the cows. Besides there is necessarily a great loss in being obliged to feed the crops before they fully mature and after they are over-ripe.

Chas. L. Hill, of Guernsey fame, says that he feeds silage 365 days in the year, and he furthermore advises that his cows eat their silage with relish even when they are supplied with rich pasture grass.

IOWA MUSICIANS WILL BE IN EVIDENCE AT THE STATE FAIR

T. Fred Henry, Iowa Band Master.

Iowa musicians will be very much in evidence at the State Fair and Exposition August 25-September 3, and incidentally will demonstrate the musical talent of the state. The Ballmann Symphony band will come out from Chicago to assist in the work of entertainment, but aside from that organization the music at the State Fair will be typically Iowan. The Henry band, a Des Moines organization of forty pieces, has been engaged to give daily concerts, forenoon, afternoon and evening, also the Fischer band, twenty-five pieces, of Burlington. Three orchestras have been engaged, Graham's of Des Moines; Quist's of Fort Dodge and the Myer's orchestra of Waterloo, all of more than state wide renown and reputation. It will be Iowa music for Iowa people.

"Horace may forgive Eric, but he'll never forgive me," said Adam slowly, calculating. "There's only one guilty person in this case, and that is me. Let's be perfectly frank about it. I am the one who has made Horace suffer, not you, Eric. Can't you see what he will do to me? He will take it all out of me. He will ruin me, destroy me. I won't say he can put me behind the bars, but he can make me the most despised creature in America."

"You should have thought of all this before," said Mary sharply.

"I have," quoth Adam, with a frown. If he meant to say more, he was checked by a sharp, eager exclamation from Eric.

"By George! Listen to me!" His face was bright with a new resolve. He leaned forward eagerly, his voice dropping to a tense, insistent half whisper. "I know how I can protect you, Mr. Adam. It's as simple as A B C. You have stood by me, I'd be a dog to drag you down with me. Here's what I can and will do. I will not mention your name in connection with the affair. I will not call on you as a witness. I'll leave you out of it altogether, and take the whole blame on myself. That will let you off clean as a whistle. There's no reason why you should be punished for—"

"Hold on, Eric," cried Adam, rising slowly from the chair to look the impassioned young man squarely in the eye. With an effort of the will, he managed to conceal the feeling of pride, of joy that Eric's words produced. "There are several obstacles to that sort of a plan First, leaving me out of it, how are you going to acount for the disposal of the body?"

A slight shudder ran over Eric's frame.

"Oh, I can say that I weighed it with iron and rowed out—"

"You haven't told a lie in connection with the affair up to date, have you?" asked Adam levelly

"Why, no—I haven't even mentioned —"

"Don't you think it's rather poor policy to begin now?"

"Well, it's the only way I can think of to keep your name out of it."

Adam had been thinking hard all this time His active, resourceful brain had been groping for the means with which to successfully combat this rather primitive, quixotic sense of honesty that afflicted Eric To gain time that was Adam's sole purpose The real object of his visit to the little Verner cottage was forgotten in the face of this amazing revolt. Strategy—ay, more than that would be required in the handling of the conscience stricken man, harsh unfeeling measures would be necessary. Nor was he thinking only of his own safety, although, somehow, it was becoming paramount He loved Eric, in a strange, bear like fashion, peculiarly his own He was a far sighted man, he foresaw dark trials for the boy if his present purpose was carried out It was quite impossible for him to realize that he, too, had been short sighted He had played a deep, ugly game without counting on the certainty of this very hour. Time to curse his stupidity and to reckon the cost, not only to Eric but to himself.

"But suppose I don't choose to be left out of it what then?" he demanded in a hard voice

"I don't have to implicate you," went on Eric earnestly You can appear to be much surprised as anyone when the truth comes out"

"Just go on being a detective, eh?" retorted Adam with grim humour. "Chase me, old man for six years, eh? Do you think I have no pride? 'Pon my word, I'd rather be called a scoundrel than a fool!

Eric began to argue his point, but the older man cut him off short with the curt reminder that he was old enough to look out for himself

"See here Eric" he continued, ignoring the hurt look in his young friend's eyes, "we'll get right down to cases. If you go to Horace Blagden with your tale, I shall have to tell the world what I know of the affair Do you realize what that may mean?"

"You saw the fight," cried Eric. "You can prove that it was self defense—no, an accident"

"I can do nothing of the kind," said Adam coldly He had thought of a way

"What do you mean?" stammered the other

"Just this I did not see the fight. I saw one blow struck I do not know who went before I have only your word for that. Not competent testimony in a boy"

Eric's face was a puzzle.

"I—I don't see what you are driving at, Mr Adam. Surely you don't—" He stopped short, his lips twisting into a sickly smile.

"Don't what?"

"You don't mean that you doubt my word?"

Adam Carr shook his head "I've always said it was an accident, haven't I?"

"Certainly Then what do you mean?"

"Do you suppose that any court, knowing my interest in the case, will accept my statement that I believed it to be an accident?"

"Why not?"

"Simply because what I believe and what actually occurred are in no way connected by fact. You did strike him. I did not see him strike at you So far as I can testify, you struck the only blow"

"Good heaven!"

"Just think it over, Eric," said Carr coolly. "Don't put your neck in a noose in the hope that I can get it out for you. He was a big, powerful chap. It doesn't seem likely that—"

"Why—why, curse you, do you mean to say that I struck him without warning?"

Eric was towering over the square, heavy figure, his face convulsed by rage. His arm was drawn back as if to strike. The older man did not flinch.

"You seem to forget that I taught you a blow that would be likely to catch any man off his guard. It is a blow that never fails to do the work. That was the only blow I saw pass between you and him. As I said before, just think it over."

He picked up his hat and strode toward the door. Eric sprang after him, rage giving way before apprehension and dismay.

"Are you turning against me?" he cried. "Wait! Where are you going?"

"I am going to my room in the hotel. Day after tomorrow we may hear of Chetwynd's death in South America. I am expecting a message to that effect. Believe me, I hope to receive the news before you go to your uncle with this tale of yours. It would hurt me more than I can tell, to be called to the witness stand against you, Eric. I am glad that I came here today. A good fairy must have sent me. I came for an entirely different mission, but—upon my soul, I've quite forgotten what it was. Goodbye."

He did not offer to shake hands with the amazed, panic stricken young man, but walked calmly out of the door and into the street, an ominous figure that filled their eyes until it was lost behind the hedges—and even longer, for they had him in mind for many minutes.

They had followed him to the door. Mary clung to her brother's rigid arm, staring down the gray, wind-swept street, a great and growing dread in her lovely eyes.

"What are you going to do, Eric?" she asked dully.

He started, and turned to look down into her eyes, as if suddenly aware of her nearness to him.

"Do?" he asked blankly. "Why, he's gone. He's in Baxter street by this time."

"I wasn't thinking of him," she said, a shrill note beginning to make itself felt in her voice. "I mean about going to Uncle Horace."

"I can't believe that Adam has turned against me," went on Eric, as it stupefied. "But there was something ugly in what he said, wasn't there? It—it was like a threat. God! It was a threat!"

She shivered. "Is this all real, Eric? Am I having another of those terrible dreams? I am so cold. See! My hands are like ice. I—I—"

He clasped her in his arms. "God forgive me, little sister! I've blighted your whole life. Why—oh, why did I tell you this beastly thing? Mr. Adam was right. He did his best to stop me. I'm a beast, a—"

He drew her back into the room, still holding her in his arms. For a long time they stood motionless and silent in the middle of the little parlor, dry-eyed, dry-lipped and unseeing. She shivered again.

"Close the door, Errie," she murmured. "It's queer how cold the air has grown. It's off the sea. When did the wind change?"

"I'll stir up the fire in the grate," he said, with nervous haste. "It's the dampness." He closed the door.

She watched him poke up the embers and pile on the chunks of wood.

"I hadn't noticed the change," he said mechanically. "It is off the sea."

"Where do you suppose he has gone?" she asked, drawing near to the grate.

He did not look up. She noted the grayish, bloodless look of his neck and half averted cheek.

"We were standing at the corner above the Massasoit house when Uncle Horace somehow felt his presence. That was not more than 10 minutes before I— What are you asking, Mary? Excuse me."

"Where has he gone?" she repeated shrilly

"See here, Mary, I'm in for something nasty," he exclaimed, coming to his feet and running his hands into his pockets once more. "I don't know what to do. If I go to Uncle Horace now, Adam Carr will turn squarely against me. That's plain. Somehow, I can't find it in my heart to blame him, either I suppose I ought to consider his position as well as my own. On the other hand, I can't go on this way any longer It's unbearable. I can't even look at Uncle Horace and Aunt Rena without cursing myself for a beast. Adam Carr has never let up on them—not for an instant. He's been a devil, so far as they are concerned I should have stopped it long ago."

He threw himself into a chair and stared, wide eyed at the crackling, snapping logs. Mary stood at his elbow, looking down upon him, her eyes full of love and pity. Presently she laid a hand on his shoulder

"I don't believe Uncle Horace can forgive you, Eric," she said.

"He can't forgive me for letting it go on in the way it has," he groaned. "Why, it's been hell on earth for them, Mary!"

"I pity them now," she said simply "I never can love them—never! But I do pity them. If there is anything I can do, Errie dear, to make life easier, happier for them, I shall try my best to—"

He did not look up, but as she hesitated he said quickly:

"They don't want you to marry Jack Payson"

"Oh, Errie, can't they overcome—"

"There's a great and sufficient reason for their opposition, dear. Something you don't understand, but I do. Adam Carr's greatest triumph over Uncle Horace would come the day you married Jack Payson."

"I don't understand," she cried, bewildered.

He checked the impulse to blurt out the horrid truth, as he took it to be—concerning John Payson. She loved the fellow. Why strike at a heart that was already sore and bleeding? Why add another cruel slash to the wounds that perhaps were marking it for life? And then up from some dark, secret recess of his own heart, came an astonishing throb of pity for John Payson; a curious revolt within himself. After all, what wrong had John Payson done? Why strike an innocent, unsuspecting man in the back? Why inflict a wound that could never be closed?

"It's something that dates back to the time when Payson's father was alive," equivocated he.

"He was lost at sea. Were they enemies?"

"I only know that Uncle Horace hated Jack Payson's father."

"Then why did he put Jack in the bank?"

"Well, he got him out of it soon enough, didn't he?" demanded her brother, hard put for explanations.

She waited a moment. "There is something you are holding back, Eric," she said, closing here eyes. "How would you feel, dear, if I were to hint that Joan Bright isn't what she ought to be?"

"Joan!" he cried out, a new despair rising in his voice. He covered his eyes with his hand. "What will she think when she hears what I have come to?"

"If she loves you, she will not let anything come between," said Mary, slowly, significantly. The true appeal in her words was lost on him. He walked over to the window and stood there, staring blankly out into the little garden. For a long time she kept her eyes on his straight, tense figure. Then she moved up closer to the fire, resting a hand on the mantelpiece as she looked down into the writhing flames. Finally her shoulders relaxed and drooped, and her whipped gaze went once more to the back of him who was so racked and harassed.

She crossed slowly to his side.

"Eric," she said, her voice very low and unwavering, "I will give Jack up if it will make you happy. I—I shan't see him again."

"Good heaven, Mary you—you would do that?" he cried hoarsely. "Why, little sister, you—you! No, by heaven, you do not make me happy. You make me feel so small, so puny, so ashamed of—"

"Don't Eric, I beg of you!" She spoke rapidly, jerkily. "I mean it. I will try to make them a little bit happier than they are. I will do this for —" She stopped in the middle of the sentence, the soft, warm glow in her eyes fading like a flash. In its stead came an almost venomous glitter, completely transforming her lovely face. "But, wait! What am I saying? Why should I do this for them? They may try to hang you, Eric."

He took a long, deep breath. "I can't stay in the house any longer, Mary. I've got to get out where I can breathe." He started toward the door, catching up his hat as he passed by the table.

"Where are you going?" she cried.

"I don't know—oh, anywhere. Listen! Can you hear the breakers? A mile and a half to Stone Wall. There's a big sea running. Mary, I haven't been on Stone Wall in six years. I'm going out there now. I'm going to face the thing I've dreaded all these years. He's out there somewhere. He hasn't moved. It's horrible to think of. But, I'm going to smash this contemptible fear, once and for all. I'll be back by dinner time. Out there I can think it over, as Adam says. Don't worry, dear, I will not—"

"I am going with you, Eric," she said quietly.

"No!" he cried, but she was rushing off for her hat and mackintosh.

Half an hour later they crossed the bleak, wind-blown stretch of meadow land and came out upon the rocks. They had not spoken in all this time. The stiff gale that blew in from the Atlantic drove the words back into their throats. A fine drizzle smote them in the face. They had not noticed that it was misting when they left the cottage.

"This way," he managed to say when they came to the forlorn coast road which wound through the rocks. "We'll cross the bridge. If you care to look, you may see where he fell. The clump of vines, too."

They stopped in the middle of the bridge, leaning side by side on the stout, new rail to look down into the ravine. He pointed to the jagged rocks and then to the mass of vines behind which Chetwynd's body had been secreted on that memorable day. Then they passed on, skirting Bud's Rock, and bent their bodies against the gale that shrieked across the rocky waste. It was a chill, raw wind that beat in their faces and cut through the clothes they wore, an insistent wind that seemed bent on keeping them back from the brow of the cliffs.

At last they stood at the edge of the great Stone Wall, with the ocean snarling madly at the crags, 200 feet below. Never had they seen the sea so wild, so furious, so ugly. It came in, black and devilish, with none of the rollicking blues and greens that they were so used to seeing; nothing but great black things with hoary crests and foaming maws, crashing against the huge rocks that stood guard in front of the palisade, swirling in between and bounding back again as if surprised to find resistance so strong.

A drab sky seemed to flatten itself like the low top of a circus tent over the whole world, sloughing off into a thick, impenetrable bank of fog which brought the bleak horizon close to hand, and out of which slipped shadowy billows that took vivid shape as they raced into the arena. On they came with ever-increasing size and velocity, only to shatter themselves against the mammoth barrier that had defied them for ages and ages. They struck with splintering force, roaring like a thousand cannons, swishing with the mighty hiss of a hundred cataracts, and then ground their way back for another and mightier assault.

The puny spectators at the top of the cliff braced themselves against the wind and stared out over the majestic foe of all mankind. Mary pointed to a vast cleft in the wall far to the left, the fury there was greater than anywhere else, the struggle more sublime.

He was looking far out across the bounding waves, his eyes set on a certain spot in the shifting scape.

"The sea was like a mill-pond that night, Mary. How different now. It seems as though it is working up all this rage for my especial benefit. It's a grewsome thought, but do you know I have a feeling that—that our cousin is doing all this. He's trying to burst the sides of that staunch old chest, just as the genii of old tried to split the jar that the fisherman found and opened. See! Follow my finger, Mary. Out there beyond Lord's Point, eight miles or more, where it's 300 fathoms deep,—that's where Chetwynd lies. No sea is strong enough to move that coffin of his. It's buried too deep. All the grave robbers in the world could not snatch Chetwynd from the grave he's in. No! He's there forever and ever. Isn't it horrible!"

International Anarchy.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Last July there was a thing called international law. True, at many points it was not exactly definable; but, in spite of vague and debatable boundaries here and there, a very solid and definite body remained which was presumed to be binding on all civilized nations. And on that noncombatants and neutrals were as much entitled to rely as a man walking down the street of his home town is entitled to rely on the rule that his property shall not be taken from him except by due process of law.

To assume that any belligerent can change the code of accepted international law to suit its own exigencies is simply to throw the ewhole code into the waste basket and accept international anarchy. It is to put a neutral in the unhappy position of a traveler in Mexico, where the first man he meets with a gun in his hand can declare whatever law he pleases and execute it on the spot.

To say, for example, that international law cannot apply to submarines because they were developed, in their present efficiency, since the law was framed, is as cogent as to urge that a belligerent would be entitled to blow up a neutral's powder factory if it could do so with the new agency of an areoplane. If a nation is absolved from international law because it is "fighting for its life," theen any attempt to set up international law is only a silly futility; for every nation that fights at all is always "fighting for its life."

Neutral nations can no more afford to hand the world over to belligerents to set up whatever rules their various exigencies may dictate than peaceful members of a community can afford to give a free hand to the truculent ones. Neutral nations are entitled to say to belligerents: "Shoot one another if you insist on it; but you must not shoot away our guaranteed rights."

A century ago there was no German empire—only a number of German states whose aggregate wealth and income were probably less than those of France. Now united Germany is estimated to possess an income of nearly $10,000,000,000 and accumulated wealth of about $80,000,000,000. During the century Germany's population has grown from 24,000,000 to more than 67,000,000, or 180 per cent.

SKY MARAUDER IN AIRSHAFT

Birds Cling Fearfully to Fire Escape While Sparrow Hawk Hovers Near.

A servant maid in an apartment on the fourth floor of the Victoria, at Riverside drive and Ninety-seventh street, opened the kitchen window Monday morning and wondered why dozens of sparrows that were huddling on fire escape and window sill did not take fright and scurry away. Then she glanced outward and upward into the airshaft and discovered the reason.

A sparrow hawk, sun glinting on its wings, was wheeling rapidly high up in the airshaft, but below the roof level. Occasionally, when the marauder's keen eye glimpsed a sparrow which hadn't taken refuge it darted like a flash. Twice while the maid watched the hawk made a capture and soared out of the airshaft.

The air pirate worked for about two hours and disappeared shortly before noon, but it was at least half an hour later when the plump, brown sparrows recovered from the terror caused by the hawk's appearance.

Two Boys, a Cow and Two Calves.

This is a short story of how two Vermont boys, still in their teens, have made some real money on a thoroughbred Guernsey. They paid $200 for the animal when she was two years old, and as their father was a banker and they were away to school a farmer was induced to keep the animal for them. They owned the cow a little over two years and during that time she had two calves. The boys found a ready market for the calves and have just sold the cow, the three animals having been sold for $525.

The farmer charged them $125 for keeping of the stock and other expenses and the boys will net $100 apiece from the transaction. The boys are quite satisfied with their investment and incidentally have become somewhat interested in life upon a Vermont farm.—Springfield (Vt.) Reporter.

BERT'S BURGLAR.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When Bert Harlan came home from school on the last day of the session he found his father busy unboxing something in the front hall. The thing was finally put together and there it stood, a fine set of old Japanese armor.

The set was that of some soldier who had lived many hundred years ago. It was made of brass and red silk, with heavy leather trimmings, and the headpiece or helmet was a gorgeous affair with a waving plume on top.

"Gee, but that's a peach!" laughed Bert. "It just about fits me. Here's a battle sword that goes with it," and he fished up a quaint old kind of a hatchet from the bottom of the box. In a few moments Mr Harlan had the figure all mounted and standing at the foot of the front hall stairs. The right arms was held up by means of a wire and in the hand was the shining sword. After tea Mr Harlan and his wife went to the theater "I will not be home before 11," said he, on seeing Bert reading by the library lamp, "so take good care of the house."

"Don't worry," laughed Bert, "with that old Japanese warrior standing up so fiercely in the hall I should think it would take a pretty brave man to come in alone. Don't hurry—I will read here till you come back."

Bert sat in the quiet room deep in his book till after 10. Then he turned off the light and lay down on a lounge. But he could not sleep, for outside he heard footsteps on the gravel walk. Nearer and nearer the sound came, then the sound of steps softly tipping on the porch till they reached the door. Then Bert remembered that he had forgotten to lock the door. Quickly the steps entered, and he heard a man's heavy breathing. So Bert made a dive and crawled under the sofa, thinking it best to watch how things were going on. The man came into the room and switched on the electric light; then he walked back into the dining room and began to gather up the silver. This he did by placing the table cloth on the floor and tumbling the knives, forks and spoons into it. Then the robber went to the cabinet in the sitting room and took out some valuable bits of antique jewelry, got a pair of silver candlesticks from the mantel and put a tiny gold statue in with the other plunder. Bert saw all this, but kept quiet. Yet when the man went on another trip to the sitting room the boy darted out from beneath the lounge into the dark hall. He knew that the next move of the man would be to go for anything of value in the bedrooms, and he formed a plan to trap the burglar nicely. So he opened the sides of the Japanese armor and crept in it. It hid him completely, but through the eyeholes of the helmet he could see everything the burglar did.

Just as Bert expected, the man presently went upstairs and in a few minutes began to descend. As the burglar set his foot on the step the big clock in the hall chimed 11.

"Father will be home soon," thought Bert, who was almost smothered in the hot armor.

Bump, bump, bump came slowly down the steps the burglar with his hands full of toilet things and a fine watch. Outside Bert heard the gate click and his father's voice. But the robber heard it, too, and stopped just in front of the Japanese armor. This was the chance for which Bert had been waiting. With a quick jerk he tore the sword free from the wire and threw himself with all his weight on the man, at the same time giving a loud scream. The weight of the boy and the armor threw the man to the floor and when he tried to rise Bert gave him a tap on the head with the sword. By this time Mr Harlan was in the hall and had settled the man while Mrs. Harlan phoned for the police.

The burglar was too much astonished at the armor jumping on him to defend himself, but he could not help laughing when the boy stepped out.

"Well, I wonder what the old fellow who owned this armor hundreds of years ago would think of its catching a burglar now," remarked Bert, as they watched the man being taken away by the officer.

"I suppose he would be very proud of what it did, if he knew," laughed Mr. Harlan. "Just as proud as I am of the way my boy trapped a burglar with an old suit of armor."

Commerce Reports.

Illustrated lectures on packing of merchandise and its handling in foreign ports, as a means of educating American shippers, is advocated by Consul James Oliver Laing, of Karachi, India, who writes of the dangers to which such freight is subjected unless properly packed. He says:

If single photographs of a smashed packing case, or a lighter full of goods being landed, or other illustrations are good, a picture showing how the case came to be smashed or how the goods were put into or taken out of the lighter would be better. Everyone knows that cases are smashed and a single photograph shows only the result, which any shipper can imagine.

If, however, a shipper of flour, let us say, could see a lot of Levantine stevedores swing a loop full of sacks over the side of the ship and let it down on the run to a flatboat bobbing about the waves, the sight of what happens when the boat rises suddenly to meet several hundred pounds of muslin-sacked flour would be an education to the shipper.

If an American furniture merchant could see a moving picture of his packing cases dropped from a cart tall to a stone floor by a gang of Maltese dockers, he would appreciate the cause and effect.

Ready to Risk It.

From London Answers.

"Mr. Jones wants a windy pane 12 inches be 14," remarked young Patrick Mulrooney, entering the glazier's shop.

In the shop was a smart young assistant who wanted to have a joke with Pat.

"Haven't any that size," he replied gravely. "Will one 14 inches by 12 do?"

Pat looked thoughtful for a minute. Then he replied:

"He's wantin' it at once, and this is the only shop in town. Give me wan o' thim. P'h'aps if we put it in sideways no one will notice."

SARBONNE PAYS HONOR TO HEROIC FRENCH BOY

Paris, (by mail)—For the first time in its history, the old University of Paris, the Sorbonne, has just conferred the degree of bachelor of sciences upon an Alpine chasseur in campaign uniform, on crutches and with one eye only free from head bandages.

The soldier candidate was Georges Habert, scarcely more than a gamin of Paris, who interrupted his studies to enlist at the age of 17. With the Thirteenth battalion of Alpine chasseurs he participated in the assaults upon Hartmanns Weilerkopf and helped carry the German trenches at the point of the bayonet. Grievously wounded in the head, he fell into a German trench and was a captive for a quarter of an hour, his comrades, determined not to leave him in the enemy's hands, won the trench by a supreme effort.

Commencement exercises and prize distributions everywhere in France were the occasions of patriotic manifestations. At the Ecole Alsaciene, the ceremony was presided over by General Malleterre, who lost his leg in the Argonne during the battle of the Marne.

Among the successful candidates for the baccalaureate at the University of Nancy was Marcel Herrette, sergeant in the French infantry at 17 years of age. Wounded at the Eparges, he had rejoined his regiment and fought until two days before the examinations. He returned to the front after graduating, two days before his leave expired and was killed while leading a charge the first day.

The youngest bachelor of the year is, no doubt, Leone de Castelnau, the youngest son of Gen. Curieres de Castelnau. He gradutes at Toulouse university at the age of 15 by special dispensation, being a year under the prescribed age.

In many of the lyceums and colleges the roll of honor, comprising the names of all former students that have been killed or wounded or have distinguished themselves, was read. Perhaps the record belongs to the Janson de Sailly lyceum, with 100 dead, 130 prisoners, 640 wounded, two crosses and 22 chevaliers of the Legion of Honor.

A GIRL'S BASHFUL AGE.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Much ado there was, God wot;
He would love and she would not,
She said, 'Never man was true.'
He said, 'None was false to you.'"

There are many classes of girls, some of whom are popular in their early teens, whose faces are very seldom seen among their girl chums' lively gatherings. Bright hum of voices, laughter and jolly merry making appeal to them, just as others fancy when girls meet and have good times. Invitations are not lacking and those who invariably send their little notes of regret are the very ones who listen wistfully, their hearts in their mouths as to the next gala affair and of the nice young men and maids who will be there.

Their cheeks flush hotly as their eyes con over the words which mean so much of pleasure in the invitation. The brilliant lighted scene of girls in their fluffy white gowns and young men bowing attendance to their fair partners, the tables groaning with dainty confections and odorous flowers pop into rosy imagination, until finally she is in a mood of uncertainty, which amounts almost to a despair as she reviews what her own presence would mean there. The handsome card she had been deeply interested in receiving falls from her lap. She takes in the situation critically, with a pang in her heart.

Young ladies who were most popular with each other, as well as with the beaux, would predominate in that lively crowd. If she were there, her besetting bashfulness would spoil the fun of the evening. Cupid would not single her out, but would be apt to call attention to her strained, reserved, oversensitive way and, as she hurried home, to care little about meeting her again. Others pity the young girl who goes to places where she might enjoy pleasant acquaintances and have a good time if she were not kept back by being in the old rut of "wall flower," which she enforces on herself. Often it rests with the girls to offer themselves as partners in some new amusement which is designed to bring girls and beaux together, such as promenades, dancing, tableaux choruses and chasing under the mistletoe bough, evading pursuers.

The less they know about the precise steps they should take the more they join in over a rollicking laugh, over some trifling mistake they stumbled into, the less self-conscious and painfully bashful their hours will count for them. They should venture round in bright anticipation of something new coming their way, and keep the heart light, bubbling with cheer and good fellowship, drawing the attention of young men and girls toward them.

If they are charming and forgetful of self they will find partners spring up even in the most miraculous manner. They will take well at this party, and be invited and looked for at the next. By that time, the whole secret of a girl's popularity will be well realized by the once bashful, shrinking class of girls, who at last concluded the only way to do was to put the best foot forward at every place.

There is only one advantage which young girls must not think of being too forward in and that is in exerting themselves to frame their own futures. Cupid has this right. If left alone, the best intended will single out the maid from far or near. The betrothal time will crown the golden hour when true heart meets true heart.

The Pauper Labor Peril.

From the New York World.

British manufacturers are gravely alarmed over the invasion of their home market by American motor cars. No more deplorable effect of pauper labor has been seen in a long time. Because the American workman must subsist on starvation wages of $5 a day, and toils like a slave for eight hours a day, with a Saturday half-holiday, the foreign manufacturer is reduced to despair. He faces at home the ruinous competition of American rivals whose workmen are contented with the American standard of high living and whose laws are framed to protect the domestic consumer against the bane of cheap goods.

If the people of the United States do not take warning from the breakdown of their high tariff system they may soon find themselves in complete possession of the British motor car trade, and if Great Britain does not organize a home market club and a protective tariff league she may witness such an invasion of her markets by cheap American labor as even the most hysterical Chamberlainite never dreamed of. How can free labor anywhere meet the competition of workmen who are compelled to work eight hours a day for a paltry $30 or so a week.

I have kept a diary every year fur the biggest part of my life, but the only object in it was to prove to myself that I did not know half as much as folks gave me credit fur.

HIDDEN IMPURITY

"If American women knew how much of our Coffee lies on the ground for days, before the berries are finally swept up and harvested, greater care would be exercised in purchasing this food. For this Coffee is impure. But its moldy color is lost in the roasting, and the partial decay is concealed until it comes up harsh and bitter in the cup. This fact is not generally known to importers, for few of them have studied conditions existing prior to the arrival of their ships in port."

So writes F. C. Harwood. And Mr. Harwood knows. His long experience in the tropical coffee growing countries, his deep intimacy with plantation owners, his close study of their customs, their methods and the "Tricks of their Trade" has acquired for him a fund of knowledge which places him far in the leadership of coffee connoisseurs, both here and abroad.

Denison's Coffees are selected by F. C. Harwood, personally, and it is here that his power in the Coffee Industry manifests itself to the qualification of Denison's Brands. His wisdom and critical discrimination is appreciated by Coffee Growers the world over, and their respect gives him first choice of the world's finest crops. Thus, only pure, hand-picked berries find their way into Denison Coffees. His care is your safeguard against impurity.

Try Denison's and realize your ideal Coffee put up in Cans, Cartons or Bags. Ask your grocer or write Denison Coffee Co., Chicago, for the name of the nearest dealer.—Adv.

Great Man Didn't Scare.

A student once tried to frighten Cuvier, the great naturalist, and succeeded only in giving the wise man a curious way of showing his knowledge of living things. The student dressed up as a terrible animal and crept into the professor's bedroom one night.

"Cuvier," he cried, in a hollow voice. "Cuvier, I've come to eat you!"

The naturalist peered at him and immediately broke into a laugh.

"What, horns and hoofs—graminivorous—you can't," he said.

He saw that the supposed monster had hoofs and horns and he knew that such animals eat grain and grasses and not flesh. So he was not in the least afraid of being eaten.

Mandy Didn't Care.

"Mandy," said the old woman to her daughter just back from a day's washing. "Mandy, whut-all did Mis' Sally done say t' yo'?"

"She done say," repeated Mandy solemnly and impressively: "'Mandy, does yo' know that yo' persesses a immor-tal soul?'"

"Lan' sakes, Mandy! An' whut did yo' respon'?"

False Pride.

"I'll never forget the wise advice that an old employer of mine once gave to a youth who had a good deal of false pride.

"The youth was complaining about the hard times, his enforced idleness and so forth. My old employer cut him off gruffly with the words:

What kind of roofing shall I buy?

The General says: You can buy a cheap unguaranteed roofing and save a few dollars in initial cost—or you can pay this slight difference and get a roofing guaranteed by the world's largest manufacturer of roofing and building papers. The final cost is what counts and you'll find it cheaper in the long run to buy

WORSHIP HEROES IN EFFIGY

In Kashmir, India, it was once my good fortune to visit a Hindu Dussrah, or native fair. The cantonment of my host was some distance away from the grounds, so we mounted two of his horses and rode through the village out on the road to the fair grounds, where we rode much of the way in the wake of an interminable procession on its way to the Dussrah.

Above the heads of the multitude three towering figures caught my eyes. They were fashioned after the form of man, but crudely and grotesquely, and they were 100 feet tall. I turned to my companion and asked him what they were. He told me that these monstrous effigies were reared to commemorate an ancient mythological war which, according to Hindu belief, took place in Ceylon in the long ago.

Whether the story is true or not, the figures were undoubtedly real, and became more monstrously real the closer we approached them. Later, when we strolled at their feet, I saw how they were made. Bamboo poles, bound together after the Indian fashion of piecing out scaffolding, formed the framework, and they were anchored to the ground by ropes hidden under the costumes that were made of coarse cloth. The heads of the figures, grotesque and unreal in their workmanship, were surmounted by fancy crowns of gold and colored paper.

The fair, indeed, was devoted entirely to the praise of these mythological warriors and the heroic deeds they are supposed to have done in the ancient Ceylon wars.

Some people are so disagreeable that they feel ashamed when they laugh.

Any of us could draw the salary of a ten-thousand-dollar-a-year job.

More Than a Stranger.

Manager Hughey Jennings of the Detroit Tigers makes it a rule to give a tryout to everyone claiming to be a ball player who comes seeking a place with him. One day at morning practice, as Jennings tells the story, a chap wandered in and asked for a chance.

"You're an experienced player?" questioned Jennings.

"Oh, yes," replied the candidate.

"Can you hit and field pretty good?"

"Oh, yes, indeed!"

"What do you usually play?"

"I'm a right fielder."

Jennings instructed one of the pitchers to hit a few flies to the new man in right and turned to other affairs. He was back in a few moments and, greatly to his surprise, found the candidate still beside the plate.

"What are you doing here?" he asked. "I thought I sent you out in right field!"

"Yes, Mr. Jennings," was the reply. "You'll have to excuse me, but you see I'm a stranger here, and which is right field in this park?"—American Boy.

What Peons Believe.

Just as the religion of the Mexican peon causes him to people his daily surroundings with the presence of the saints, so does his superstitious mind assign supernatural causes to things not easily explained, and bid him see evil spirits and hobgoblins in strange or unfrequented places.

Naturally, much of this superstition has come down with the traditions of his Aztec forbears, whose polytheistic religion set up many imaginary gods and spirits.

But—happy tribute to the strength of Christianity!—the sign of the cross is potent to banish imaginary fiends on all ordinary occasions.

Every town dog believes he can catch a rabbit, but a country dog knows better.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

RABIES—HYDROPHOBIA

Information on This Dangerous Disease From the State Board of Health

BY GUILFORD H. SUMNER
Secretary-Executive Officer

Rabies is a disease of animals and of man. The dog seems to be most subject to it. For many years it was maintained that it was comparatively rare in this country, but recent studies have shown that it is anything but rare. In a registration area, consisting of 10 states, there were, during the five years from 1900 to 1904, 200 authenticated cases of hydrophobia. In the District of Columbia, during the six months ending July 1, 1908, 68 animals were attacked by it, and for the seven years from 1893 to 1900 28 persons suffered from this disease. This seems a large tax to which we willingly submit in order that the dog may enjoy privileges not allowed to other animals.

Rabies, or hydrophobia, prevails at all seasons and is about as frequent in winter as in summer. Not every dog infected runs wild on the streets foaming at the mouth, for in not a few instances the animal seems but slightly sick and is only a little restless. These cases are very dangerous, as the owners are liable to caress the animal at such times and become infected

The most important step in the prevention of this disease is to have all dogs muzzled whenever they are on the public streets, no matter whether they are in the leash—tie string—or not. This is quite common in foreign countries—Europe—and in every case where it has been done the disease has practically disappeared. Some of our people will object, on sentimental grounds, to the use of muzzles, but it is necessary, and if properly fitted the dog isnot injured in the least and will be saved from many a bite from his fellows.

A dog the least bit sick should be watched with great care lest he be suffering from this disease. If there is the slightest suspicion about a dog which has bitten a person, the Iowa State Board of Health Laboratory at the Stato University, Dr. Henry Albery, director, should be consulted, and under his advice the dog may be killed and its head sent to the laboratory where it can be examined. Persons who have been bitten should receive the Pasteur treatment immediately The expense ought to be charged against the person owning the dog, and, should he be unable to pay, the public should furnish the funds This is sound teaching from an economical as well as from a sanitary standpoint, and will tend to reduce the number of unmuzzled dogs to the minimum. A community which does not properly protect its citizens should pay for any damage they sustain from lack of such protection.

FILLING THE SILO

To farmers who are filling silos this year for the first time, the Iowa agricultural experiment station offers the following suggestion:

The corn should be cut when the kernels are dented, or when about a fourth of the husks and lower leaves are turning brown. It should be as near maturity as possible and yet contain enough moisture to insure fermentation.

Either a half inch or three-quarter inch cut is best because that length insures less waste and a larger pack of corn in the silo.

Silo filling makes it possible to pack the corn more thoroughly and get in a larger tonnage. With rapid filling the cost is less, but to fill to capacity the silage should be allowed to settle and then refill.

Corn should be uniformly packed in the silo and with good distribution of stocks and ears. If the sides are kept about two feet higher than the center, the silage wedges against the sides, keeps in the heat of formentation and kills molds.

Water needs to be applied when filling if the corn in the silo is not moist. Water must always be added when the corn is very ripe, when the corn is severely frozen before it is properly matured, or when filling filling late in the fall with shocked corn.

Keep the sides of the silo air-tight by filling cracks with soft clay, if the silo is wooden, or with cement if of masonry.

IOWA ROAD COMMISSION

Governor Clarke of Iowa has appointed a commission of seven representative men of the state to act as a better-road commission, for the purpose of "investigating and studying as to methods and experience in the construction of hard surface roads, materials, cost of maintainance, economical value, the advantage of such roads, and all such other matters as may pertain to the better roads question, and report the result thereof to the 37th general assembly, with recommended legislation.". The chairman of the commission is D. W. Norris, of Marshalltown, who has been a very thorough student of the road question. The members of the commission will receive no pay for their services, but will elect a secretary who will be paid a salary. It is expected to finance the expenses of the commission by voluntary contributions.

This commission can render a valuable service to the state by collecting reliable information on the road question. Whatever the general assembly may do with such recommendations as the commission makes, the dissemination of the information it gathers will be of very decided educational value. We have been discussing the road question in Iowa for a good many years without knowing very much about it. The average western man thinks he knows how to judge a horse and how to make a road What we need is some definite and accurate information as to the cost of making and maintaining various kinds of roads. This sort of information can be gathered by such a commission.

USE NAIL TO SET BONES

An eight penny wire nail was used to repair a broken bone in the arm of William Worth, near Trear. Several weeks ago Mr. Worth fell and broke one of the bones in his right arm near the wrist. Repeated effort to set the fracture have proved unsatisfactory as the end of the bone would always slip out of place. Finally an ordinary eight penny wire nail was driven thru the ends of the bone in such a way as to hold them in place until the ends may knit together, then the nail will be removed

IOWA STATE COLLEGE LEADS

Iowa is gaining world-wide recognition for the high type of its agricultural education through the special exhibit of Iowa State College at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Many letters from prominent foreign educators and government representatives are arriving at the College, making request for more detailed explanation of its work. One just received from the Commissioner General for Sweden is typical. It states that this official was attracted by the unusual quality of the exhibit, extends congratulations to the institution for the high standard of its work, and then asks for more complete information along various lines.

OLD MAN HARE.

The Actor's Meeting With Gladstone Outside the Theater.

John Hare, the eminent English actor-manager, said that the most delightful compliment he ever received was from Mr. Gladstone. It was a double ended compliment. Whichever way you took it it was satisfactory.

Mr. Hare earned fame playing old men's parts, his character as Mr. Goldby in "A Pair of Spectacles" being a good example. Added to this was a horror of having his picture taken.

Mr. Gladstone had never seen a picture of the actor, but he knew him well behind the scenes as well as before the footlights. The premier's favorite play was "A Pair of Spectacles," and he always went behind the scenes to chat awhile with the actor. The really old man and the made up old man would sit there and talk in the most delightful way for an hour after the show.

One day the Earl of Rosebery had Mr. Gladstone to dinner, and he also invited his friend John Hare. The actor came in smooth shaved, looking about thirty-five. He was presented to Mr. Gladstone, and the prime minister shook his hand most cordially and said:

"My dear sir, I am very, very glad to meet you. I know your father very, very well. Splendid actor! Fine old man!"

It took the whole evening for the earl and Mr. Hare to convince him that this son was really the father.—London Tatler.

Something over a couple of centuries ago the principle of the taxicab was known, remarks an exchange. An advertisement in the London Daily Courant of Jan. 13, 1711, announces that at the Sign of the Seven Stars, under the piazza of Covent Garden, a chariot was on view that would travel without horses and measure the miles as it goes. It was capable of turning and reversing and could go uphill as easily as on level ground.

American motor cars are to be thrown into Europe, particularly into Germany and France, immediately after the war is ended, in a manner which will make all former American "invasions" pale into insignificance. One of the largest of the automobile companies is known to be preparing to send no less than 10,000 touring cars and roadsters into the German market, within a month after the war is ended. Other companies plan a like invasion, and the export business in American motor cars will be such as simply to swamp the factories. Great Britain already sees the writing on the wall, and frantic appeals come from the trade press and the dealers to the large manufacturers, imploring them to try to produce a small, standardized car in large quantities, to sell for about $700 or less.

Scientific experiments have demonstrated that, contrary to the general belief, the yellow color of cream and butter is not necessarily an indication of their richness. It was discovered long ago that most vegetable matter contains a yellow substance called "carrotin"—because it exists abundantly in carrots. It is this substance contained in the cow's feed that gives rise to the color of milk and butter Carrotin is most abundant in the green forage available in spring and summer so that milk and butter produced then are more yellow than in the winter, although the percentage of fat in winter milk often is actually higher than in the rich looking product obtained in summer.

The Daily Illini reports that not one of a class of 25 university rhetoric students could spell all these words correctly Accommodate, dissipate, disappoint, laboratory, embarrassment, athletics, lose, courtesy, professor, stopped, precede, harass, companies, equipped, development, occurred, interfered, inferred, noticeable, lovable, Thackeray, Macaulay, proceed, acknowledgment, permissable. Only 13 made a passing grade, and the grades ranged from 44 to 96. Out of 625 words, 441 were misspelled. Nineteen could not spell Macaulay. The test was then put to an advanced class of juniors and seniors, but only one out of seven could spell all the words.

A new application of compressed air is in cooking. An electric air pressure cooker has been invented, consisting of an air tight chamber with an air pump driven by an electric motor which operates automatically. The advantage of the invention lies in the fact that it preserves the flavor and prevents the loss of substance that usually results, particularly in the case of meats, when ordinary cooking methods are used.

NEW PROCEEDING FOR CLEARING UP RECORD OF IOWA SHORT LINE

Construction Firm Wants Road Sold at Once to Pay Off Its Obligations.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 28.—The Lana Construction company and W. M. Lana have filed a petition in district court asking the court to enter an order appointing appraisers for the Iowa & Omaha Shore Line and also order the receiver to proceed with the sale of the road.

Some months ago the trustees of the road, J. J. Spindler and August Dammrow, brought an action against the road and the Lana Construction company, W. M. Lana and George W. Adams, creditors, securing an order for the appointment of appraisers and the sale of the road. Now the Lana people asfi that this be carried out for the following reasons:

That the decree heretofore entered has been standing for a number of months, that no sale has been made and that no appraisers have, in fact, been appointed,, that the prospects for an advantageous sale are not growing better and that the receivers' expenses are accruing. It is the opinion of the petitioners that the longer the sale is delayed the less net will be realized by the creditors and that the interests of the creditors will be best served by an early sale.

The petitioners ask that the appraisers be appointed and that the receiver proceed with a private or public sale as may best seem to serve the purpose for the disposition of the road.

REFORMED CHURCH FESTIVAL HELD AT ORANGE CITY

Orange City, Ia., Aug. 28.—The annual missionary festival of the Reformed churches of this part of the county was held at the fair grounds Wednesday. The attendance is estimated at about 5,000 Those in attendance came from all parts of the county. Some came by team and some in carriages, but most of them came in automobiles. There were over 500 autos and carriages on the grounds. A collection was taken for the missionary board of the Reformed church which amounted to $1,453, surpassing all former records. To this will be added the profits on the sale of all eatables at the stands, which will amount to about $300.

Many prominent speakers took part in the program, among them Rev. S. M Zwemer, D. D., of the University of Cairo, Egypt; Rev. J. Cantine and Rev. G. Pennings, of Arabia, and Rev. H. P. Boot, of China. The Sioux Center male quartet furnished the music.

PIONEER CRAWFORD SETTLER BEING SUED FOR DIVORCE

Denison, Ia., Aug. 28.—Judge Hutchinson is holding a special term of court to hear the testimony in the case where Mrs. Clara T Marshall is asking for a divorce and property valued at $60,000 The defendant is one of the pioneer citizens of Crawford county, having lived about Charter Oak for 50 years, and there is much interest in the case The court granted the plaintiff $30 a week alimony pending the outcome of the case. Mrs. Marshall is a second wife and has been married to Mr. Marshall some 10 years. She is the daughter of A. D. Melony, who was the auditor of this county in the early days.

FARMERS ORGANIZE TO BUILD 14 MILES OF ROAD

Knoxville, Ia., Aug 28.—The farmers along the main highway between this city and Melcher have organized an earnest good roads campaign and will grade the entire distance, about 14 miles. After the necessary grading and ditching have been done, graders will be put on the work and finally the surface is to be thoroughly oiled

This is the greatest road improvement ever inaugurated in the county and is receiving the support of the entire community. Farmers on either side of the long stretch have taken one mile and half mile contracts in such shape that three men and two teams will be at work on each half mile lap.

BUGGY STRUCK BY TRAIN; MAN KILLED; WIFE INJURED

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug 28.—August Funke, aged 45, a farmer living near State Center, was killed and his wife, Anna, aged 41, was seriously injured when their buggy was hit by a Northwestern freight train at a grade crossing in State Center late last night. Funke's skull was fractured and his neck was broken. Mrs. Funke was picked up 250 feet east of the crossing, almost scalped, her leg broken, and splinters of the buggy driven through her hip and arm. The family includes four children

ESTHERVILLE—Torger Martinson died at his home in this city Wednesday evening, after an illness of two years. Death came suddenly and unexpectedly from heart failure The deceased was born in Norway in 1836, and came to America in 1866, settling first in Winnebago county, Ill., and then coming to northwest Iowa, where he took up government land in Lost Island township, Palo Alto county

DENISON—Miss Emma Raine, who has been a teacher in the public schools of Danison for over 20 years, has suffered a stroke of paralysis. There will be a program of sports and free street attractions. Ruthven and West Bend baseball teams will contest for the championship of Palo Alto county.

ARTHUR HAIGH OF DES MOINES MURDERED AT HANLEY, NEW MEXICO

Supposed to Have Been Killed By Mexican Sheep Herders—Went West For Health.

Des Moines Ia., Aug. 28.—The skeleton of the man believed to have been murdered, found near Hanley, N. M., with a Des Moines newspaper in his pocket, was Arthur Haigh, of 513 North East Second street.

The wearing apparel of the dead man and articles found in the pockets, according to the description furnished by J. W Ballow, county clerk of Roosevelt county, New Mexico, positively were identified yesterday by Mrs. G. W Entwistle, a sister, with whom Haigh made his home until March 1, when he left, saying he was going west for his health.

Mrs. Entwistle declared that she had not heard from her brother after he left home until Tuesday, when Edward H. Jones, of the Jones Piano company, received a letter from Clerk Ballow, giving the circumstances under which the body was found. Mrs. Entwistle believes her brother was murdered in the lonely spot about two miles and a half from Hanley, where the skeleton was found, with the head severed, by some sheepherders.

When Haigh left home it was thought by his relatives he was going to visit a brother, Edward Haigh, who owns a ranch in Texas. He had been in ill health for the past several years and was forced to give up a position with a jobbing house in Des Moines. He went to Colorado and after a time returned to Des Moines much improved. Several months ago, according to Mrs. Entwistle, he began to experience trouble with his throat again. Last March he decided to go west.

FROST TRACES REPORTED IN TWO IOWA COUNTIES

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 28.—Following is the regular weekly bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service, for the week ending August 23:

Another week of fairly favorable weather has aided the progress of farm work and the growth of corn. The temperature was, however, considerably below the normal and several nights were very cool. A trace of frost was observed on the morning of the 20th in Audubon and Crawford counties. This is the 14th consecutive week that has given an average temperature near or below the normal. For the state as a whole, the week was comparatively dry, but copious to heavy local showers occurred in many localities, which interfered with farm work for a day or two. Stacking is nearing completion, and shock threshing is progressing as rapidly as the weather will permit. Threshing reports continue to show good yields of small grain generally, but the quality is mostly poor and the yield of timothy seed is below the normal. Considering the cool weather, corn is doing as well as could be expected, and some of the earliest planted is in the roasting ear stage, but much of the late planted is not yet in tassel The third crop of alfalfa and the second crop of clover is ready to be cut, and both are heavy Potatoes, garden truck, fruit and pastures continue in good condition. The soil is in good condition but no fall plowing has been done on account of other work being more urgent.

MAN AND WOMAN FOUND DEAD UNDER AUTOMOBILE

Decorah, Ia., Aug. 28.—Yesterday afternoon parties driving along the Ridgeway road about seven miles out from Decorah, found an automobile upside down beside the road Help was secured and the machine righted

A man and woman were found dead underneath. Investigation of the pockets of the man revealed the name of W. C Hobart, a traveling salesman from Minneapolis. The place where the accident happened is on one of the best pieces of road in the county. The woman had a large sum of money and considerable jewelry on her person.

O. P. MILLER INDORSED AS M. E. LAY DELEGATE

Rock Rapids, Ia., Aug. 28.—At a meeting of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal church Tuesday night the following resolution was adopted·

Resolved, That the official board of the Methodist Episcopal church of Rock Rapids, Ia., present to the lay electoral conference the name of Brother O P Miller for re-election as lay delegate from the Northwest Iowa conference to the general conference of 1916.

Mr. Miller has been general conference treasurer since 1904, and was for 16 years a member of the book committee. He is known as the father of the annuity fund of the northwest Iowa conference, the interest from which goes to the support of worn out preachers, their widows and orphans Since his connection with it this fund has increased from $6,000 to $100,000.

NOT TO PUSH PLAN FOR EXTRA SESSION IN IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 28.—While the Greater Iowa association has indorsed the good roads campaign in Iowa, it has not taken formal action on the proposal to hold a special session of the legislature in 1916 to enact improved road laws, declared one member of the association who arrived in Des Moines yesterday. He said that the special session plan has been discussed by the members, but not in an official way.

The member declared that if the governor does not approve the plan of calling a special session of the legislature, the association undoubtedly will immediately drop the idea. He said he had heard reports that the governor disapproved of the proposition and favored turning the road matters over to the Thirty-seventh general assembly in 1917. No official communication on road matters has been sent to the association by the governor up to the present time, it is said.

IOWA CITY—Heirs-at-law of the late Mrs. Marinda Moscow have begun action to break her will. They allege, through Herbert Cook, Pearl Beecher and others, that Charles and Frank Moscow received all of the estate by reason of misinfluencing a weakened testatrix. The property at issue is in Oxford, Johnson county, and in Iowa county.

ALGONA—Bill Donahoo, who has been in the county jail several weeks charged with burglary at Whittemore, struck Sheriff Samson on the back of the head with a weapon, knocking him senseless, and made his escape. He is a Bowery rough, and has not been apprehended.

DES MOINES GAS CO. TO REFUND $115,000 BY ORDER OF COURT

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 27.—By an order made late yesterday by Federal Judge Martin J. Wade, the Des Moines Gas company will begin paying approximately $115,000 refund money to Des Moines gas consumers on December 1, 1915. The checks will bear the date of November 15, 1915, under the provisions of the ruling which was made after attorneys for the city and gas company had conferred with the court in the latter's private office at the federal building. Consumers will receive their rebates in alphabetical order.

The signing of Judge Wade's order ends the famous fight on the part of the city for 90 cent gas. The case has occupied the attention of the federal court for the past five years. It was carried to the supreme court and a decision rendered by that tribunal a few months ago affirmed the decision of the lower courts giving Des Moines gas at 90 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

The order permits the company to make the refund directly to each consumer entitled to it instead of forcing both the company and consumer into court although the entire matter will be transacted under the supervision of the federal court.

STREET CAR HITS AUTO; WOMAN SERIOUSLY HURT

Ottumwa, Ia., Aug. 27.—Mrs. Alice Smith, night captain of the city police force, is at St. Joseph's hospital suffering from a fractured skull and clots upon the brain as the result of a collision of the automobile in which she and her 14-year-old daughter Eva were riding and a street car here last evening.

The girl, who was driving, says that she lost control of the machine. She and her mother were both thrown out, but the girl was only slightly injured. The car later was completely demolished by fire, supposedly from a match thrown into the gasoline, which had trickled down into the street.

GREAT WESTERN OPERATORS ARE THREATENING STRIKE

Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 27.—The Order of Railroad Telegraphers on the Chicago Great Western railroad have broken off negotiations with the railroad officials relative to the wage increase demanded and are now preparing for a strike, according to E. E. Delaplaine, of St. Louis, who is here representing the telegraphers. Delaplaine states that President H. B. Perham and a committee of telegraphers are now at Chicago, perfecting plans for a strike which may be called at any moment. As soon as the strike is called telegraphers will be called out of Dubuque, St. Paul, Chicago, Oelwein, Des Moines and Fort Dodge.

According to Delaplaine the railroad agreed to increase wages for telegraph operators, but would not consider an increase for telephone operators doing identically the same kind of work.

FAMILY TROUBLES CAUSE TRIPLE TRAGEDY NEAR PERRY

Perry, Ia., Aug 27.—Harry Crispin, 27 years old, shot and killed his wife and her mother, Mrs. Ed Stiner, at the Stiner farm six miles southwest of here, yesterday. About 10 minutes later he turned the shotgun on himself and died from the wound.

Family trouble is thought to have been the reason for his act. No one saw the shooting of Mrs. Crispin or Mrs Stiner, but Mrs. Crispin's sister, Sadie Davis, 14 years old heard the shots when she went to the cross roads about a half mile away to get the mail

When she returned Crispin was sitting in the yard with the 18-months old baby on his lap. He told his sister-inlaw that he had just shot his wife and her mother, asked her to take the baby to his parents' home and then pointed the shotgun at his own stomach and pulled the trigger.

The three bodies were brought to Perry. The coroner has not yet decided whether he will hold an inquest.

AMES COLLEGE BULLETIN DENOUNCES CHOLERA "CURES"

Ames Ia., Aug 27.—Not a single one of the so-called hog cholera cures and specifics that are widely advertised proved to be effective in the thorough tests just made by the veterinary section of the Iowa agricultural experiment station Each of the alleged remedies was given fair trial with a good many pigs along with the Niles-Dorset, or government serum, and every pig treated died of cholera, except those treated with the serum. Dr C H Stamm, who conducted the test, says in circular No. 25, just issued "Up to the present time we have failed to find any product that will cure hogs afflicted with cholera, and the only product that will immunize against cholera is the Niles-Dorset serum."

HOUSEKEEPER BASES SUIT ON BREACH OF PROMISE

Harlan, Ia., Aug 27.—Henry Mattox, a pioneer of Shelby township, Iowa, said to be worth $50,000, has been sued for $5,500 by Margaret Adsit, for alleged breach of promise to marry, and for services as housekeeper over a period of two or three years. This suit is brought by Preston & Dillinger, of Avoca, while the defense will be represented by E S. White and Shelby Cullison, of Harlan. Mr. Mattox stands well in his community, and has several children by his first wife residing in the county, he having been twice married.

The plaintiff formerly lived at Yutan, Neb., and it is said has been several times divorced from former husbands.

SENATOR THOMAS ASPIRES TO STATE TREASURERSHIP

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 25.—Formal announcement has been made of the candidacy for the republican nomination for state treasurer of Senator Charles H. Thomas, of Union county, who was one of the most active workers in the last general assembly. Senator Thomas' home is at Kent, where he has large mercantile and banking interests.

ENGAGEMENT RING FOUND IN COLLECTION BASKET

Corning, Ia., Aug 25.—A very unusual circumstance happened Sunday at Mount Etna when the collection basket was passed in the meeting held by the Rev. Mr Davis, the temperance worker, who was presenting his cause at that place. In one of the envelopes provided for the offering was found an engagement ring.

The temperance evangelist had grave suspicions that the ring must have gotten into the envelope by some mistake, and he left it with parties in Mount Etna with instructions for them to endeavor to find its owner.

ASSEMBLE HORSES AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS

St. Louis Inspector Unable to Make Terms With Members of Fair Board.

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 26.—Negotiations between horse buyers who supply almost all the war mounts for the allied governments and the state fair board for use of the Iowa state fair grounds for assembling horses, failed yesterday.

Dr. Reed, of St. Louis, head of the horse buying firm, offered $500 a month rental for the fair grounds until the close of the European war. The board declined to consider the offer and made a counter proposal to lease the property in question on a basis of $1,200 a month rental. The horse buyer refused the board's offer. The fair board then offered to permit the use of the grounds on a basis of 50 cents for each horse stabled there. This offer also was refused.

The negotiations were carried on at the administration building at the fair grounds. Following the failure of the deal, Mr. Reed was angry. He declared the fair board is unreasonable in its demand.

Mr. Reed left for St. Louis last evening, after stating that the central horse station cannot be located in Des Moines. He looked at several other sites but declared that they will not be suitable for his use. There is a possibility that Waterloo can meet the conditions. The horse buyers will investigate conditions in other cities before passing Iowa up, it is said.

Leo Stevens, president of the Century Savings bank and Lee Fleener, Des Moines horse buyer, aided Mr. Reed in the negotiations. A number of prominent boosters also called on the members of the state fair board yesterday to urge that body to accept the offer.

"FLAGSTAFF" DUBIOUS ABOUT MOVING TO CALIFORNIA

Shenandoah, Ia., Aug. 26.—"My attention has been directed to a letter published in the Sentinel-Post written from El Centro, Cal. I understand that this city is located in an extremely hot part of the country and the burning question of the hour is, do we have to go to Helen Hunter or is she coming on?" says D. W. Thayer in a letter addressed to the W. D. Jamieson amateur matrimonial agency.

Mr. Thayer is prompted to write this letter in response to one received by Postmaster Jamieson from Miss Helen Hunter, of El Centro, who wrote desiring to get in communication with the marriageable Shenandoah walking flagstaffs. Mr. Thayer was selected by his friends as the most eligible one of this unique organization of tall men whose picture was recently published in several newspapers.

WOMEN ENTER PROTEST AGAINST VACCINATION

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 26.—An anti-vaccination crusade is on here, as the result of a sweeping order of the local health board that all children be vaccinated at once. The order grows out of the present smallpox epidemic in this city, which has prevailed during the past three months and has cost the city many thousands of dollars.

A delegation of women waited on Senator F G. Henigbaum to protest against the state law requiring general vaccination and to ask what he could do for them Senator Henigbaum wrote to the attorney general to ask him his opinion regarding the constitutionality of the law He will report to the delegation later.

ONION HARVEST STARTED IN ST. ANSGAR VICINITY

St. Ansgar, Ia., Aug. 26.—The onion harvest is on in the onion belt around St. Ansgar. The field of Hume & Moeller has been harvested and yields a little over 800 bushels per acre. The Gilbertsons commenced work this morning in harvesting their 50-acre field. There are 97 acres of nions close to St. Ansgar this year and about 1,000 acres of potatoes. Both crops are an abundant yield.

Crescent, Ia., Aug. 24.—J. A. Miller, alias J. A. Meyers, alias J. H. Smith, was arrested here yesterday afternoon on the charge of stealing a livery team at Rulo, Neb., a few days ago.

Miller, who represented himself as a solicitor for the Omaha Bee, hired the team and drove over parts of Richardson and Otoe counties, and took a number of subscriptions, for which he collected cash. He left the team in a livery stable at Falls City and disappeared.

KAISER PURPOSES DRIVE TO AID TURKS, IS BELIEF

MIGHT TAKE SUEZ CANAL

London, Aug. 30.—Further evidence of increasing Austrian activity on the southern front is furnished by an announcement of the reopening of telegraphic communication between the Austrian and Montenegrins. The latter claim a repulse of Austrian detachments in a short engagement near the mouth of the gulf of Cattaro.

There are many who profess to see in this renewal of the offensive by the Teutonic allies on the Balkan front the beginning of a stupendous drive south through the Balkan peninsula to Turkey, thence to Constantinople.

It is confidently claimed and the rumors from Sofia and Athens bear out the claim—that Bulgaria would assume the role of an open ally of Austria and Germany in such a move, while Greece, thanks to the queen, who is a sister of the kaiser, and who rules the throne would remain neutral This would leave Rumania and Serbia alone to oppose the drive—unless the allies made some other division of their forces, and the opposition of these two small countries would be no match for the seasoned armies of the Teutonic allies.

These are the reasons put forward to sustain the campaign.

Turkey is desperately short of shells Rumania has persistently refused to permit shells and munitions from Germany's huge shell factories to pass through her territory to the Turks.

A German drive then would open a direct route for munitions between Germany and Turkey.

Would Strengthen Turks.

It would enable the Turks, backed by strong German re-enforcements, to put up an even more stubborn resistance than the storming of the Dardanelles and perhaps even indefinitely block the allies' attempt to break through and release Russian wheat

Their collier traffic practically stopped by the operations of the Russian fleet in the Black Sea, the Turks also are short of coal The presence of a German drive would also relieve the condition by permitting the Turks to tap German mines.

Then, with Turkish territory in the open before them the German drive could easily be continued, to result in the seizure of the Suez canal, the highly important gateway to the East.

This would seriously hurt the allies by cutting off the direct transportation of wheat and cotton from India, and coal from the far East.

The moral effect of a German seizure of the Suez canal might result in an uprising of native troops in Egypt, a thing which German has tried to accomplish since the beginning of the war.

Germany's and Austria's concentration of troops on the Balkan front for attacks on Serbian positions which indicate the opening of new campaigns against the Serbs, and the present tense situation throughout the Balkan states indicates that the new German drive may start at any moment now

May Be a Bribe.

The German drive would of necessity be through either Serbia, Rumania or both and then down through Bulgaria.

Thus the news of Turkey's surrender to Bulgaria of a stretch of territory and a vitally important frontier railroad line reaching to the very gates of Adrianople has serious import for the allies.

Is it a bribe for which Bulgaria will open her country to the German "steamroller?"

The allies fear the worst, for Bulgaria has emphatically stated that only upon one condition that Serbia cede Macedonian territory to her will she join with the allies.

This Serbia has determinedly refused to do.

Had Serbia agreed and Bulgaria gone over to the allies it would have opened the back door to Constantinople and the Dardanelles would have been opened in short order.

But if Bulgaria, won over by Turkey, aids the threatened German drive by warring on Serbia, the Germans will have but little difficulty in connecting with the Turks.

BELIEVE WAR WILL GO ON THREE YEARS

Dr. Frederick Sefton Thinks Both Sides Now Aim at Constantinople.

Auburn, N. Y., Aug. 30.—"Those in the army and navy offices who are in a position to know declare that hostilities will continue for three years more," said Dr. Frederick Sefton, who returned from London today. He has been the guest of Ambassador and Mrs. Walter Hines Page, and while in London met and discussed the war situation with many influential persons. He continued:

"England expects to lose 1,000,000 men and to expend, outside of the loans she is making and sustaining £1,000,000,000. The most strategic point at which both sides now aims is Constantinople. It is the opinion of leading military experts in London that Germany's next move will be to the south toward Constantinople. Last week there were evidences in London that the British were sending recruits to the Dardanelles rather than to France."

HELD FOR CLEARANCE.

Newport News, Va., Aug. 28.—Clearance papers were held today from the British steamer, Waimana, which arrived Thursday with a 4.7-inch gun mounted on her deck. The state department has not decided whether the Waimana is considered an armed vessel and clearance will not be given until decision is given. The Waimana wishes to continue on the voyage from Marseilles to Buenos Ayres.

MERCY! GERMAN KISSES MR. BRYAN

Chautauquan Had No Way To Escape Fond Embrace Of Teuton.

Wichita, Kan Aug 30.—John Graber a husky German farmer, yesterday kissed W J Bryan at the conclusion of the colonel's chautauqua address at Kingman The impact came so suddenly that Bryan did not have an opportunity to sidestep

Bryan blushed like a girl, but he came to his senses immediately when the throng of 3,000 started cheering. He had touched on the war during his lecture and his eloquence had stirred Graber's heart

"Mr Bryan I have read your paper for years and always admired you I made up my mind that if ever I got a chance to see you I would kiss you When I saw you were coming here I knew that my wish would be fulfilled, and it has been," said Graber

HAITI EXPECTED TO ACCEPT OFFER

Washington Aug 28—It became known today that plans of the United States for putting Haiti in order contemplate calling upon the war department, if necessary to furnish officers for the island police from its corps of noncommissioned officers who have developed and commanded the Philippine constabulary Officers said the proposed protectorate treaty would provide not only for a complete financial protectorate and the supervision of customs houses but for a native police force officered by Americans.

Rear Admiral Caperton and his marines will remain on the island pending ratification of the treaty and setting up the machinery of the protectorate. Some opposition is expected by the rebellious elements of the northern part of the island, who do not look with favor upon the ending of revolutionary days but little real trouble is looked for President Favorable.

Prompt ratification of the protectorate treaty by the Haitien parliament was forecast today in dispatches to the state department from George Davis, at Port au Prince The charge said President d'Artiguenave, head of the new government, is committed to the convention and is believed to have assurances of sufficient support from senators and delegates to secure favorable action within a few days He presided over the senate for several years and is popular among his former colleagues.

It is said provision may be inserted in the treaty for an extension, if necessary, of the 10-year limit placed on the protectorate Doubt has been expressed as to whether foreign capitalists would be willing to make loans to the government or invest their money for development of the islands industries without some guarantee against the return of such conditions at the end of 10 years

NIGHT RIDERS SENT UP FOR LONG TERMS

Many Others Charged With Similar Offenses Await Trials

Hartford Ky Aug 30 Three men who pleaded guilty in Ohio county circuit court of being members of a band of night riders, who for months spread terror throughout this section of western Kentucky, today are serving sentences in the state prison. One other yesterday was acquitted by a jury, and 60 defendants are awaiting trial

Aphraim Reisinger, a coal miner, admitted he plied the lash when Reuben Howard, a merchant, and his wife were whipped at Horton the night of June 12. He sought to secure a three-year sentence, as Jerry Clark and Ernest Webster, who participated in the whipping, had done earlier in the week. Commonwealth's Attorney Ringo, however, refused to compromise and insisted that a five-year sentence be imposed. Howard testified he and Mrs. Howard were whipped until they pled. He said the reason given him for his beating was lack of industry Reisinger, Clark and Webster were taken to prison after Reisinger accepted the longer term.

DREYFUS FORCED TO DENY DISLOYALTY CHARGE

Paris, Aug 28—Louis Dreyfus a former member of the chamber of deputies and head of the firm of Louis Dreyfus & Co., bankers and grain merchants, issued today a denial of allegations contained in a parliamentary report published yesterday to the effect that his firm had sold to agents of Germany part of a grain cargo on the steamer Normandy at Antwerp in August, 1914, and subsequently sold the grain to France.

M. Dreyfus in his statement admits that the grain had been sold to Germans, but states that the sale was before the war began, and that at his suggestion the German interests had been sequestered by the French government.

PERMANENT MODEL CITY PLANNED FOR PLYMOUTH

Boston, Aug. 28.—Plans for a permanent model city to shelter a population of 100,000 to be erected at Plymouth, in connection with the celebration in 1920 of the 300th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, are being considered by municipal experts, it was announced today. The idea of those interested in the celebration was to eliminate the waste of money usual in the construction of temporary exposition buildings. They propose to build a permanent city, one that will be fire proof and smoke proof and with zones for factories and industries

C A Douglas, counsel for General Carranza in Washington today received the following telegram from Gen Pablo Gonzales, general in chief in command at Mexico City, under date of August 26

I have the pleasure of informing you that the general situation is improving daily The hunger problem is almost solved and with reference to railroad traffic, so soon as this is resumed with the north, which will be accomplished in three or four days, the aspect of the country will have changed favorably"

FOOD TRAIN DELAYED BY WRECKED BRIDGE

Washington, Aug. 28—Destruction of the railroad bridge south of Allende, the American Red Cross reported today, compelled its agent, J C Weller, to return to Piedras Negras with a train loads of foodstuffs, with which he started on August 25 to supply thousands of destitute Mexican women and children in Monclova and Saltillo. Weller reported brisk fighting was in progress south of Piedras Negras.

PEOPLE CRITICIZE RUSSIAN MINISTRY

Business Men and Officials Declare Reorganization Is Badly Needed.

Moscow, (via London), Aug. 30.—After a series of conferences held by the business men and the representatives of the public bodies in Moscow, such as the Zemetvos, or provincial district councils and municipalities participating in the work of preparing war stores a resolution was adopted today declaring that the lack of coordination between the Russian cabinet ministers and the uncertain course of the government were hindering the efforts of the munition producers and that the ministry should be reorganized under the guidance of an energetic premier

The newspapers intimate that the appointment of M Krivoshein, the minister of agriculture to succeed Jean L. Goremykin, as prime minister, is imminent.

LARGE POWDER SHIPMENT LEAVES U. S. FOR RUSSIA

Philadelphia, Aug. 28.—One of the largest shipments of smokeless powder ever sent from the United States will be taken to Russia on the Russian steamship Voronej, which sails today from Wilmington, Del., for Archangel, via Glasgow.

This shipment consists of nearly 2,000,000 pounds of the highest grade of this type of powder, and is shipped in cases holding 200 pounds each.

Besides the explosives, the Voronej has on board 25 auto trucks, shipped at New York, which were stowed in the bottom of the vessel to give her stability.

Russian military officers superintended the loading of the vessel as well as the manufacture of the powder.

CHINA PLACES ORDER FOR 100 SUBMARINES, RUMOR

New York, Aug 28—Financial circles here were interested in a rumor that the Chinese commission of naval experts recently sent to this country were negotiating for the purchase of 100 submarines at a total cost of $75,000,000. While the representative of one New England submarine building company admitted that some of the Chinese had inspected his plant, he denied that any contract had as yet been signed

GERMAN RAID ON PARIS THWARTED

Warplane Riddled By Bullets of French Aviators—Two Raiders Escape From Pursuers.

Paris Aug 30.—Four German military aeroplanes attempted to make a raid on Paris this morning. They were attacked by a French air flotilla and one of the German machines was shot to pieces in mid air.

The German machines crossed the French lines flying at a great height and driving toward the city of Paris. When over a point to the north of the capital, they sighted a French air flotilla which was waiting for them and three of the German aeroplanes wheeled about and headed for the German lines.

Two of the German machines escaped, but one was outdistanced by its pursuers and was riddled by bullets. It fell flaming into the forest of Halatte, where the burned bodies of two aviators were found.

The fourth machine dropped five bombs at Montmorency, a town 15 miles from Paris. No one was hurt. The batteries at Montmorency opened fire on the aeroplane, but it got away in the haze.

Travelers arriving in Paris by train from the north can see at almost any hour from 10 to 15 French warplanes in the air at the same time, protecting the capital from German air raids.

POLICE TO GUARD PEACE CONVENTION

Leaders Ask Protection While They Boost Move For Arms Embargo.

Chicago Aug 30.—One hundred "plain clothes" policemen have been asked for by J J Tobias, chairman of the local committee of the "Friends of Peace" to preserve order at the convention of the society which will be opened here on Sunday afternoon. Five thousand delegates are expected to be present. It is planned to present to the convention petitions signed by 500,000 persons calling for an embargo on the export of ammunitions.

Mr. Tobias, who is the head of the Chicago law school, said he had arranged for the delegates to be scattered throughout the audience with instructions to promptly suppress, or if necessary eject, any disturbers.

ALLEGED HEAD OF ARSON RING IS UNDER ARREST

Portland, Ore., Aug. 28.—Sanford Currier, alleged by the police to be the head of an arson ring operating in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland, was arrested here yesterday and held in jail for lack of $20,000 bail.

According to Fire Marshal Jay Stevens, the alleged arson ring is responsible for fire damage amounting to several hundred thousand dollars in Pacific coast cities. The plan of the gang, according to the marshal, was to rent, or even build a house and fill it with costly furniture, all of which would be insured. Then the furniture would be removed, the house destroyed by fire and the insurance collected on both house and furniture.

Grant Hawly, one of the alleged gang was arrested several days ago and Currier's divorced wife was arrested yesterday.

MONARCHIAL MOVE MADE IN PORTUGAL

Lisbon, (via Paris), Aug. 30.—The minister of interior, Dr. Silva, announced today in the national council that a monarchial movement had broken out in northern Portugal. The barracks of a regiment of infantry at Guimaraes, 12 miles southeast of Braga, had been attacked and many persons had been wounded.

Dr. Silva said the government had taken various precautions. Arms and bombs had been seized. The railway bridge at Trofa has been dynamited but trains are still able to cross.

The minister, in conclusion, said the situation in Portugal is now normal.

LLOYD-GEORGE TALKS WITH COAL MINERS

Paves Way For Conference of Mine Owners and Labor Leaders.

London, Aug. 30.—Although it had been announced that Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, who acted as arbitrator in the recent coal strike, would decline to see a deputation of miners, Mr. Runciman and David Lloyd-George, minister of munitions, conferred for half an hour today with the committee representing the men, who came to London from Cardiff yesterday. Little was accomplished today beyond an elucidation of views on both sides. A further conference will be held Monday with representatives of the mine owners participating.

Although dissatisfaction with Mr. Runciman's award to the miners is spreading, the men's leaders are standing firmly against another strike at this time. Nevertheless, reports from the coal fields today stated that 4,000 more men had quit work.

TWELVE BATTALIONS OF CANADIANS OFF TO WAR

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 28.—Twelve Canadian battalions of infantry are to be placed in England for final training, according to an announcement made here today by the military authorities. The troops will be regarded as reinforcements to be called for service in France or Flanders as required.

The 12 battalions have been selected from all parts of Canada and are the best trained corps in the division. They contain about 15,000 foot soldiers. This draft will bring the number of men Canada has sent to England to 100,000.

JEWISH NEGROES TO LEARN HEBREW TONGUE

New York, Aug. 26.—Dr. Jacques Faitlovitch, who sails for Naples today on the steamer Duca Degli Abruzzi, will carry $6,000 which he has collected in this country to aid in teaching the Hebrew language to the Black Jews, of Abyssinia.

The American Jewish committee contributed $5,000 of this sum and private subscription made up the remainder. Dr. Faitlovitch says there are 50,000 negroes in Abyssinia, who are true Hebrews, but no longer speak the Jewish tongue.

BRITISH CRUISERS ARE SIGHTED OFF SANDY HOOK

New York, Aug. 28.—A three-funneled British cruiser appeared at the Sandy Hook lightship today. At the same time a British cruiser of four funnels was sighted 15 miles southeast of the lightship. This is the first appearance of regular British cruisers off the New York coast in the past three weeks. During this period, however, an auxiliary cruiser, formerly a Cunard liner, has been patrolling the coast. The auxiliary disappeared several hours before the regular cruisers arrived.

GERMANY MAY PAY LUSITANIA LOSSES WHEN SHE SETTLES

Arabic Episode May Bring Restitution For Americans Who Lost Through Previous Disaster.

WILSON IS STILL WAITING

No Expression From Administration May Be Expected Until All Facts Are Submitted.

Washington, Aug. 30.—Further developments in the situation with Germany now await the Berlin government's official report on the sinking of the Arabic. The state department expects to receive this from Ambassador Gerard as soon as the German admiralty can secure it and meanwhile negotiations are at a standstill.

Negotiations covering the general subject of submarine warfare, which it is understood, Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, has been instructed by his government to open with a disavowal of Germany's intentions to cause loss of life to Americans when the Lusitania was sunk, will be begun when the state department announces its readiness. These exchanges which are to be a continuation of the diplomatic correspondence, will not be encouraged by the United States until the case of the Arabic has been satisfactorily disposed of.

Must Prove Sincerity.

The American government believes that Germany's sincerity in her announcement that under sea warfare against passenger ships has ended, must be established before the Lusitania discussion can continue.

Reiterations, by American officials, that rights of neutrals will be insisted upon in all quarters, is taken by German officials to mean that when it is established that Germany has modified her submarine policy England will be asked to relax the blockade against foodstuffs for Germany. German officials believe the change of their policy will permit an acceptance by the United States of the concessions which Germany will make when negotiations are reopened.

The state department now regards its case on the Arabic as made up as far as British and American sources of information are concerned. There now remains only the German presentation to afford the department a basis for final decision.

The was no further conference today between Secretary Lansing and Count Von Bernstorff and it is understood the latter probably will not again call at the state department until his government is ready to submit the statement it has promised in regard to the Arabic incident.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 28.—Germany's intention to offer full satisfaction to the United States for the sinking of the White Star liner, Arabic, with the loss of two American lives, formally was communicated to the state department yesterday by Count von Bernstorff, German ambassador, acting on instructions from the foreign office of the imperial German government.

The memorandum read to Robert Lansing, secretary of state, by Count von Bernstorff outlined the position of the German government in the Arabic case and promised that in the event it is found that the Arabic was attacked without warning, the imperial German government not only would disavow the act but would give the United States "full satisfaction."

This, it is well known, would have to include reparation for the Americans lost and assurances that such tragedies would not be repeated.

No further developments in the situation are expected now until the submarine commander who sank the Arabic has reported to Berlin.

President Waits.

Meantime President Wilson and Secretary Lansing, though visibly encouraged and relieved by Count von Bernstorff's assurances and reports from Ambassador Gerard on his conferences with Foreign Minister Jagow, are in a waiting attitude. Before the American government can speak there must be forthcoming the German disavowal and explanation of what all evidence received has seemed to prove was an "unfriendly act."

It became known last night that the state department has been informed that Germany is ready to renew discussion of the Lusitania incident and to offer reparation for the American lives lost when that vessel was sent to the bottom without warning by a German submarine. There has been no response to the last American note on the subject and it is known that the United States will not listen to reparation proposals with the situation created by the sinking of the Arabic still pending With the attack on the Arabic disavowed, however, and guarantees given against repetition, a German communication explaining that the Lusitania was torpedoed, as a reprisal against Great Britain under misapprehension that she was armed and that killing of Americans was regretted and not intended, and offering reparations, probably would pave the way for an amicable settlement.

GERMANY MAKES ONLY EXCUSES, SAYS FIGARO

Paris, Aug. 28.—The Figaro, in an editorial today on the situation growing out of the sinking of the Arabic, says:

"Germany is a universal distributor of excuses. She handed them to Denmark and Holland and would like to hand them to the United States. The point is will the American government be satisfied with such base coin. For German excuses imply neither repentence nor intention not to relapse. Wilhelmstrasse expects that she will be quiet for a platitude. But the German pitcher has gone to the American well too often; it is too badly cracked for further use; a new one is wanted. President Wilson and Secretary Lansing will no longer be satisfied with empty words. Berlin is well aware of it and is doing everything to gain at least a few days."

BAR LIQUOR ADS.

New York, Aug. 28.—Representatives of 35 college newspapers of this country and Canada, with a total circulation of more than 100,000, at a meeting held here for the purpose of consolidating the business interests, decided to bar liquor advertising of all kinds from their columns

Elbert Bede Says:

No one loves a knocker.

Engagement rings cause a tinkling in a girl's heart.

The common people are uncommonly popular along election time.

We don't thing we are so very bad as long as there are a lot more just as bad.

The man who swears over the wire at the telephone operator would smile and smirk upon her if he met her face to face.

The person who wants to borrow trouble never has any trouble in getting accommodated at a low rate of interest.

Between watching both the flag and the pennant in these strenuous war and base ball times, the average male citizen is kept pretty busy.

The park board of a big city has ordered all benches and seats specially illuminated. The light will be wasted, for there'll be no one there.

The good bread makers didn't think much of the patent bread mixers until they found that their neighbors were using them and getting their hubbies to turn the crank.

The first time a young woman is taken to a fashionable restaurant by her sweetheart is a great event in her life which she will remember and talk about for years.

A woman who is happy always has a pretty face, It all lies with hubby as to whether or not he has a pretty wife.

It's not so much what you say as how people listen to you.

When misfortune overtakes them some folks think it hasn't paid them to be good. These same people, if they had been bad, would have said the misfortune was a punishment for misdeeds.

Probably most married men would like to try being bachelors again for a short while—just to see how much they would miss their wives. The chances are that if their wives caught them in that condition they would make it permanent.

We may be old-fashioned but it gets on our nerves to see a man dressed so nearly like a fashion plate that you would think he might have been the model. Probably that is because the face in the fashion plate is so expressionless, and the position assumed by the men so plainly selfconscious, while the clothes are worn in a way that not one man in a thousand would wear them.

RUTH SENDS WORD

"Can I get Ruth by long distance telephone?" asked a friend of hers one day when she was calling upon Ruth's mother.

"Why yes," the latter replied, "it will only cost you 10c to talk with her for five minutes." "Well, it's worth it," the friend said, "and I'll just use your 'phone if I may. You see I want to ask her how to renew the gilding on my tarnished mirror frame."

And when she had connected with Ruth and had made known her wants, Ruth gave her this information:

"To clean and renew your gilt frames dust them carefully with a soft cloth first, and then wash them with a fluid composed of one ounce of soda deaten up with the whites of three eggs. If there should be any scratched places, they should be touched up with gilt paint."

"If that girl should ever move entirely away I don't know what the community would do," commented the visitor as she hung up the 'phone.

The population of Tunis is now about 2,000,000, of whom 200,000 are foriegners, chiefly Italians, French and Maltesa.

Petroleum and corn to the value of three millions sterling have been sent by Roumania to the United Kingdom in a year.

Papier Mache or paper pulp was first used in Persia, Cashmere and Japan. The present method of manufacture dates back to the eighteenth century and consists of submitting the required number of sheets of paper to heat and immense pressure and treating with an oil and tar mixture. Papier mache has been successfully used in the manufacture of doors, waterpails, and even car wheels.

WHY NOT SMILE?

Are you angry? Is your lip cracked? Are you afraid of wrinkles? Are you suffering from an ingrowing grouch? None of them? Then why don't you smile? History tells us of men who trained themselves not to smile, because they wanted a stern expression of countenance. The savages also prided themselves on not showing any sort of emotion. Have you noticed in the photographs that the mothers of the war heroes of Europe are not smiling? Neither are the generals who are doing the killing. Only the heroes themselves are smiling A hard and stern expression does not indicate a good heart nor a clear conscience. A thief seldom smiles. The woman of the streets smiles with her lips, but her eyes are hard and cold. The poverty stricken man on the streets who begs for a dime, sends his plea direct to your heart if his appeal is accompanied by a smile. Only the failures of life never smile. A smile is the cry of the soul—"All's Well!"

MAKE A SEED CORN CART

It is generally recognized that seed corn gathered in the field from the standing stalks is the best kind of seed. To go through the field and pick the ears into a sack or basket is a tedious job. A low cart can be made which is narrow enough to go between the rows and which will hold four or five bushels of seed. With such a cart it is an easy matter to get out 15 or 20 bushels of good seed in a day. The farm crops department of the experiment station at Ames will furnish specifications for making a substantial and convenient seed corn cart.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

If, as the critics say, the finest literature of the world is spoken literature, then some of the most beautiful gems and striking comparisons and rich illustrations of all literature are in the speeches of Hon. Granville Jones.

Ash Davis—Something About the Man.

Ash Davis, cartoonist entertainer, who is to appear here in the near future was born near West Union, Ia., on a farm. His talent for art was soon discovered by his teachers in school much to his sorrow, for in those days drawing was discouraged by the use of a stick. But it took more than a stick to sidetrack Davis. He studied art in Chicago, Philadelphia and New York. He did cartoon work for newspapers and magazines and painted portraits until he saw Frank Beard give a chalk talk at the Beatrice (Neb.) Chautauqua. It was the only thing he remembered and could talk about. That happened twenty years ago, and he is still talking. His entertainment has gone through many changes since then. It has had college training and private tutoring and many years of experience. Today he is recognized as one of the standard professional Lyceum family.

BILL BONE, POET-ENTERTAINER

Bill Bones' evening programs are not entire evenings of tiresome verse. While he gives many quaint dialect poems that will bring the tear or the hearty laugh—they are so beautifully interwoven into a humorous, philosophical, common sense lecture that you never tire.

He takes a theme or subject and sticks to it, fitting his humor, pathos and poetry in and around it, in a way no other entertainer does, thus giving that most desired variety that ever keeps his audience expectant, watching and pleasantly contemplating—what next?

His programs are entirely original, hence no decayed jokes—at all times giving a clean, wholesome, logical, as well as highly entertaining lecture-entertainment. And he makes good on return dates. Possessing as he does a sympathetic heart, optimistic spirit, winsome manner and a homely philosophy with a strong sense of humor, he will make you laugh, make you cry, make you think—send you away with greater faith in humanity, in God and in future generation.

Them Meistersingers.

Hiram Brown in a fictitious name, but he voices the feeling of many patrons of the lecture course when he felt moved to produce the verses given below. The Meistersingers deserve all the fair things said of them, and the opportunity to hear them should not be overlooked by any one.

(Dedicated to them by "Hiram Brown.")

I've hearn them Meistersingers sing
One night at our op'ra house.
They ra'sed the roof, they did, by jing
One night at our op'ra house!
I hitched the boys to the old turnout
After the mornin' and chorin' about,
And then with plenty of laughter and shout
We druv to the op'ra house.

The house was jammed, I dew declare!
Chuck full wuz thet op'ra house
The tarnationist lot of folks wuz there—
There in thet op'ra house.
Then them fellers come on to sing
A-drest in clothes—the quaintest thing
I ever did see—all in a string
On the stage of thet op'ra house.

And then come some music, I dunno where,
Right in thet op'ra house.
Seemed jest a floatin' in the air
Right in thet op'ra house
Seemed like an organ jest broke loose
With the purtiest sound it could perduce
'Twas just them fellers op'nin' their sluice
Down in our op'ra house.

They sung up one side and down t'other
On the stage of thet op'ra house;
Then they'd break out all together,
Wakin' up thet op'ra house.
They made you think they'd break the winders,
Then back up and kind a-hinders
Things a spell, then smash to flinders
Things in thet op'ra house.

'Twas the greatest singin' I ever heard
In thet old op'ra house,
So plain and distinct thet ev'ry word
Wuz clear in thet op'ra house.
And the funny things! I laughed till sore;
Felt just like rollin' on the floor.
I'd never hearn the like before
In thet old opera house.

I've hearn the quartet from the county seat
In thet old op'ra house,
And the bell ringers, they say was never beat
In thet old op'ra house.
But them Meistersingers! I want to tell!
If I go to heaven and they're—not there,
I'd change my abode to hear 'em a spell
Like 'twas in our op'ra house."

THE long, low streamline body is unmarred by angles or projections. From the round edge of the radiator to the full curved back, there is not a break in the lines. The hood slopes gently upward and blends into the beautiful curved cowl. The doors are flush, with hinges concealed and handles insides. The fenders are long and sweeping in their curves, with gracefully rounded surfaces. The running boards are clean and free from obstructions, the storage battery concealed, the tire-carriers placed at the rear. The windshield is built-in, and conforms to the curve of the cowl—a part of the car itself, not an apparent afterthought.

The car is superbly finished in a rich, deep Brewster green, delicately striped with pure ivory white, and set off in pleasing contrast by black enameled radiator, fenders and running board shield.

Model 83 touring car is a beautiful car. It asks no odds of any car at any price—it is at home in any company.

BEST EDUCATED MEN ARE MADE OFFICERS

London, (by mail),—It has been the general practice of the British army in the present war to get its supply of subalterns from the best territorial regiments, which correspond to the crack state guard regiments of America. These regiments receive as recruits only young men of a certain standard of education and social position. The Honorable Artillery company, which consists now of many companies and which sprang from the same historic organization as the Honorable Artillery company of Boston, Mass., is perhaps the best known of these regiments in the United States. But no regiment contributes more young officers to the new and regular armies than the Artists' Rifles, which has won commissions for nearly 2,000 of its former privates.

The Artists' Rifles is composed of young professional men of various callings. Its versatility is illustrated by an incident that happened in the early days of the war, when six electrical engineers restored electric lights to a French town, where the lights had failed with serious consequences. It was the Artists who converted a disused stable at Bailleul into a bath house for the men returning from the trenches.

Soon after going to France the regiment was turned into a training school for officers, on the ground that its material was too valuable to waste in the ordinary way.

A man who enlists as a private in the Artists and afterwards obtains a commission from the training school in France secures his seniority in the regular establishment, if he desires a permanent career in the army, from the date of his first commission. This training is remarkably thorough, as the men get all the life and the practical experience of privates with the technical training of officers.

THE END OF FASCINATION.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Oh, the years we waste and the tears we waste,
And the work of our heart and hand
Belong to the woman who did not know
(And now we know that she never could know)
And did not understand."

It is the nature of young women to be lighthearted, sunny tempered and genial. But she who is known to pride herself in the arts of fascination deserves the name of being heartless, which is often tacked on to her.

Even a girl of this kind might be disposed to think seriously of a nice young man who had been devoted to half a dozen girls whom she knew and yet his head was turned admiringly in her direction. She was almost sure that he did not express his sentiments as tenderly to others and clasp their hands as responsively as hers when at her home, and her mother's head was turned away.

Love making is not a new story to her. Courting each season has possessed such a fascination for her that she counts her conquests on her fingers, shrugs her shoulders and laughingly declares she was only whiling away the time. She is perfectly indifferent to the heartaches which she has caused, pooh-poohs at the chidings and predictions. It is the jolliest part of a girl's pastime she boasts thinking there will be no end to her fascinations nor to the many followers in her train.

Instead of realizing what the heartaches of the men she has encouraged and dismissed might be, her only regret is that there will be many a weary evening during which she may have to sit by the window alone until another falls under her spell. Whether she will fascinate a better companion is to her pure luck—a win or lose experience. She loves music, dancing and all that is gay and mirthful. This is the attraction in her nature. Many a nice young man crosses her path at these places, and is easily led into adoration of the fascinating young woman. First she aroused his interest.

Every type of man may have sweethearts but his love will go out to just one woman—his ideal. Those who think they know him should never be parted easily with the impression that this man or that one will never marry. No man is proof against woman's love when the right one comes along. Those who angle for him will seldom if ever catch him. There is just one person who can hold the affections of any particular man—that one is all that that man or woman desires. She must be in true sympathy with his ideas, have kind sincere consideration and be not wholly a creature of moods and fascinations.

That which attracts two different kinds of men and women together is an indescribable appeal. Most men will only want a woman who is simple and natural. Those go ahead of all others in touching the right chord in his heart. No girl would accept a man with the foolish fear that she might not get another offer of marriage and expect to learn to love him after they are wed. Some one is not sure that she will be able to hold his love for all time if she gives by giving him only half a heart. The hearts sold on marry those whom their first love. Each forms a pretty good idea of the life partner with whom it is best to settle for lasting love and happiness.

Unnecessary Risks.

From Collier's

Various lately heads have disparaged the motives of the men fighting in Europe against the kaiser and the Turk and one more thinker has called this war of nationalism against he would be world conqueror a "needless war." This same gentleman has cautioned his fellow countrymen against taking "unnecessary risks." Now, it is hard for us to be patient when we read such rubbish in the press. Without "unnecessary risks" history would be the record of life among the invertebrates. Without "unnecessary risks" there would be no Leonidas in history, no Curtius, no Decius, no Champlain, no Wolfe, no Nelson, no Emmet, no Washington, no Lafayette, no American republic. Without the taking of "unnecessary risks" there would have been no Lincoln. When the men who followed Garibaldi from Rome asked him what their reward should be they were answered, "Hunger and thirst, forward marches, battles and death." Garibaldi and his Thousand took unnecessary risks—and freed Italy. When Ibsen's Brand had led his men halfway to the heights they halted—but this was Brand's speech to them:

How long the war will last?
As long as life!
What will you gain? A will that's whole,
A soaring faith, a single soul,
The willingness to lose, that gave
Self rejoicing to the grave,
A crown of thorns on every brow;
That is the wage you're earning now!

Which is better, the patriotism of Garibaldi, the devotion of a passionate and devoted France, the idealism of a defeated Brand—or the soft counsels of these moderns who set comfort above country, saving themselves above spending themselves? This country does not want war, but if we thought it incapable of war zeal once war again became our national necessity, we should pray to God that He make us, in our next incarnation, Belgians, Serbs, or Frenchmen.

ROCKEFELLER TO START GREAT WORK IN CHINA

Peking, (by mail).—The "China Medical Board," instituted by the Rockefeller foundation, will be established in China at a very opportune moment, according to Dr. J. G. Cormack, the principal of the Union Medical college in Peking. Most of the staff of doctors who have been working at this mission college are British subjects, and the staff has been seriously affected by several of the most important men going home to England to volunteer for medical work with the army. Dr. Cormack states, also, that "while the war lasts we cannot expect much further help from England."

He made these statements at the annual graduation of Chinese students, at which there were 16 who received their diplomas this year—bringing the total number of graduates from this college up to 20. Dr Cormack added: "Truly this is a very small number when we think of the great need there is in China for trained doctors. Fortunately there is a likelihood of a large increase of our staff in the near future because the Rockefeller foundation has instituted the China Medical board which proposes to spend a large sum of money on medical education in China. This board has decided that they will first thoroughly equip this college in every department, and make it possible for every Chinese student to obtain a medical education of the very highest standard. The facilities that will be offered to the young men of China to become trained physicians and surgeons will be made equal to anything in Europe or America.

"We are very glad, too, that the character of the college as a Christian institution is still to be maintained. The missionary societies which founded this college have from the beginning desired that the moral character of the students should conform to the Christian ideal, and every effort has been made to show the students that knowledge without virtue is not only undesirable but may even be dangerous. China needs not only the science and knowledge of western lands, but much more does she need that moral regeneration which can alone make a nation truly great."

President Wilson and Business.

From Everybody's Magazine.

A lot of eastern bigwig business men with nothing much but the wig above their collar buttons are going around saying that Wilson has "disturbed" business. How? Income tax? Every modern country, almost, that's civilized, has taxes like that. Federal trade commission? The National Chamber of Commerce took a referendum on that. It showed that the business bodies of the United States were crushingly in favor of a commission. Clayton bill? Ten times as many business men wrote to Washington in favor of it as against it. Federal reserve board? Not one bankers' organization in the United States is asking to have it repealed—or thinking of asking. And all this legislation had numerous republican votes. Fact is—now hold your breaths, all you radicals—Wilson has been much more considerate of business sentiment than Taft. Wilson's department of justice has been actually sluggish and feeble in its prosecutions of "trusts." That may be right or wrong, as you look at it. But it has been in harmony with the business sentiment of the times. Yet Wilson, the business man, is unpopular with business. Irony! Why? Hard times! Hard times in the United States and in Japan and in Paraguay and elsewhere. Can't punish Wilson and Wilson's tariff in Paraguay. Natural query: "Why not punish 'em in the United States?" We predict no votes for Wilson, the business man, in the convention of 1916.

Farm Cooperation.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Farm co-operation—especially for credit purposes—is pretty much a German invention but the conditions under which it evolved in Germany are very different from those in the United States. In this country only 800,000 farms—or roughly one farm out of eight—are less than 20 acres in extent. The typical American farm is from 20 to 175 acres, about three-quarters of all our farms falling in that class. In Germany, on the other hand, more than 4,000,000 farms, or about three-quarters of all farms, are less than 13 acres in extent. These small farmers usually live in villages from which they go out to their tiny fields in the morning, returning at night, so they are constantly in contact with one another. Meeting to talk over affairs of common interest is a matter of daily occurrence. And when the co-operative movement sprang up they were in far worse plight than the majority of American farmers are. Few of them could obtain credit on any tolerable terms. Only by standing together could they survive at all.

Co-operation is more difficult here, both because farmers live much farther apart and because they can make a better shift at standing alone than the German farmers. It is significant that rural co-operation has been most successful in this country among fruit and vegetable growers, where the holdings are usually small and co-operation is the only alternative to complete failure.

Nowadays the rural telephone and the automobile go a good way toward canceling distance, and American farmers, with these inventions, might be about as neighborly as German farmers are if they wished, in spite of their much larger holdings. The fact that a man can exist independently is not a good reason for rejecting co-operation when he could exist better by combining with his neighbors.

Ends the Debate Over Munitions.

From the Chicago Herald.

Secretary Lansing's note to Austria-Hungary may be taken as the final announcement of American policy with regard to the shipment of war munitions to Europe.

It places the position of this government on the unassailable grounds of international law, anti-militarism, Austro-Hungarian precedent, and, what is most important of all, plain national necessity.

We are opposed to militarism. Therefore we will not sanction a policy which puts a premium on armed and prepared aggressiveness, which will compel every nation to establish and maintain great munition plants and keep immense stores of war material constantly on hand.

We demand national safety. Therefore we will do nothing that might shut the world's markets against us in that day when we, too, have war and are compelled to look elsewhere for supplies. It has never been our policy to produce in great quantities at home.

We stand for the principles of international law. Therefore we will continue to adhere to the plain principles governing the export of munitions, principles as fully understood abroad as here and most consistently adhere to in the past.

There will no doubt be further discussion of the question. But there is no possibility of successful attack on the established American policy. Discussion will henceforth be academic and futile.

The question of exporting war munitions is decided. Let us pass to the next thing in the order of business.

How Did He Know.

From the National Monthly.

The new curate had preached a very fine sermon that morning on "Married Life." Two old Irishmen who had been fast friends for years were discussing the address as they walked home together.

"It was a fine sermon his riverence was after givin' us this morning, Tim," commented one.

"It was that," quickly assented the other, then with a dissenting frown he continued, "an' I wish I knew as little about the matter as he does."

Carroll, Ia., has the distinction of having the only woman director in the Northwestern Saengerbund. She is Miss Beatrice Stephany, and in being director of the Carroll Maennerchor, which is composed entirely of men, she is a singer of some note, having taken the medal last year at Chicago because of her rendition of a difficult aria.

MICHIGAN UNION, CENTER OF U. OF M. STUDENT LIFE, TO HAVE $1,000,000 HOME

New home of Michigan Union and President Emeritus James B. Angell of Michigan University.

A "Melting Pot" of college democracy costing $1,000,000 is to be built and endowed by the alumni of the University of Michigan. The new building will be the home of the Michigan Union, the centerpiece of student life at Ann Arbor. President Emeritus James B. Angell of the U. of M. has played an important part in the growth and development of the Union.

U. S. CONSUL REPORTS BELGIAN CONDITIONS

Consul General Ethelbert Watts, stationed in Brussels, sends to Commerce Reports a letter on present conditions in Belgium. After reciting the events of the early months of 1914, Mr. Watts says:

"Altogether, business was in good shape until war was declared; this brought the linen trade to a complete standstill. However, in order to make provision for the working classes, most of the mills and factories have gone on with the work as best they could. . . . Fruits and vegetables are bought in quantities at the market by intermediaries and sent to Germany. There has been no other export business done in these products, it having been prohibited by the German authorities. The production of grapes will be the same as usual for the qualities usually sold in Belgium. Special qualities produced for export to America in past years will not be cultivated, the exportation also being prohibited. . . . Mills work only a few hours a day. Most of the horses were requisitioned, first by the Belgian army and then by the German authorities. Trade is entirely discontinued. In the coal district about 105,000 miners have been at work since the war broke out, as compared with 147,000 usually employed. . . . All production and stocks were put under the control of the German central bureau at Antwerp. This bureau has power to sell to manufacturers, owners of works, dealers, etc., at prices fixed by itself. The proceeds of the sales are handed to the mine owners after the deduction of a commission to cover expenses incurred by the bureau.

"All contracts made before the war or since the occupation are void, and mine owners can not be considered liable to damage for nonexecution of such contracts. In special cases contracts may be executed with the authorization of the central bureau. This bureau regulates production, sales and prices over all the occupied parts of Belgium. Coal is in very little demand, except for domestic consumption, as most of the mills, iron works, etc., are not in active operation. . . . By various ordinances of the German governor general the moratorium was extended from time to time for the occupied territory. By an ordinance dated May 22, 1915, the moratorium was extended to June 30, 1915. No special moratorium has been decreed for ordinary debts such as for goods sold and delivered, etc., but the courts may grant respite to debtors at discretion. . . . In order to secure administrative uniformity in the economic field the governor general recently established a trade commission consisting of representatives of the civil administration, the political division, the banking division, the war commission for raw materials, the railway board, the general government, and the army commissariat. This new trade commission is a consultative body. The commission is to consider questions affecting the economic life of Belgium, such as those of imports and exports, the tariff, labor, traffic and markets, and to recommend practical measures to cope with the problems. The votes and resolutions of the commission are of an advisory nature only and have no binding force, the decision resting in the hands of the governor general. The commission may call on Belgian or German experts or business men for advice."

Packing Lesson Not Yet Learned.

So much has been written on the subject of packing that it would seem unnecessary to again refer to it, but the following letter, addressed to the American consul general at Shanghai and written by one of the best posted men in the Far East, is so pertinent that it is inserted in order to emphasize the necessity of paying attention to proper packing.

"I gave . . . of San Francisco, a large order last year and the packing was execrable. They shipped bottled jams and extracts as they might perhaps have done for Oakland, and when the stuff arrived here in fragments I could get no satisfaction out of them. Naturally I am not repeating the order.

"When I have been on furlough in America and manufacturers or wholesalers have asked me what openings there might be in China for their goods I have always replied bluntly: 'Not any, unless you are prepared to consider the requirements of the market and pack for long-distance transportation, as European dealers do.'

"Last winter I placed two orders of the same value for rose plants, one with a nurseryman in Ohio and another in England. The American plants were simply tossed into a flimsy pasteboard box with a little loose moss, so that the box arrived all crushed and the roses as dry and dead as the bones of an early Christian martyr. The English roots were tightly wrapped in moss, then in cotton, and finally in a gunny bag. It took them longer to reach me, but all were alive.

An English View of Mr. Bryan.

Sydney Brooks, in the London Mail

I do not wonder at his immense popularity. Put Gladstone's or O'Connell's tongue into the head of the average Sunday school teacher and you not only get Mr. Bryan but you get a mixture that always and everywhere appeals to the taste of the masses. Mr. Bryan has stirred up many questions, but he has never yet found the right answer to any of them. He has proved himself an effective voice of protest against social and economic inequalities and injustices. But he has proved himself nothing more. If his intellectual equipment were as great as his sincerity and his sensitiveness he would be a statesman. As it is he has been hampered by a flat inability to rise above the most elementary level of reflection, insight and comprehension. He would have cut a most imposing figure in the French revolution, when rhetoric, shallow metaphysics and a readiness to make a new heaven and a new earth every other week were supposed to qualify a man for the business of government. But in such a land as the United States and at such a time as the present, supreme power is forever barred to him. At the bottom of their minds the American people distrust his capacities.

PLAYING ON BEACH INJURIOUS TO HAIR

While you are reveling in sea bathing and games on the beach for the purpose of drying your hair do not imagine you are choosing the best way for the good of your bright tresses.

Our poets have sung of the hair that shimmers in the sunlight. But that same hair, if continually exposed to the rays of the hot sun, will soon become dry, dull and void of color and luster.

The sun burns and bleaches. By this process it removes the gloss and life from the hair.

Like Bleaching Linen.

When you are drying your hair in the summer sun, do you not feel the heat from the sun's rays? When the hair is wet you do not realize the intensity of it. But when it begins to dry you are obliged to shake the hair to allow the air to blow through it in order that it may not scorch you.

If you will stop to think you will remember that the process of bleaching linen is the same you use every morning in the summer for your hair. The linens are wet and left to the heat of the sun's rays to bleach. Each wetting and drying in the sun bleaches more and more.

Do you not see that your hair, by being wet every day and dried in the sun, must naturally—like the linen—become lighter each day? The serious difference is, however, that the linen is a fabric, while your hair is alive, and very much alive. Because it can be cut without pain the supposition may be entertained that it is entirely lifeless. The fact that it grows is evidence that it is sufficiently animated to be entirely liable to injury.

Hair Will Burn.

The sun kissed tresses are burned and scorched until they have the quality of straw if they are blonde. Dark hair burns red or white.

We all know that salt water is injurious to the hair. It must be rinsed out with fresh water.

Continual wetting of the hair removes the natural oils from the scalp, the oils which are so necessary to its growth and brilliancy.

Hair demands more attention during the hot months than in winter. Women spend a larger percentage of their time in the open and are more liable to abandon their hats than during any other season.

There is certainly a temptation to throw aside a bothersome hat that is continually tumbling about during an exciting game, but that head covering is quite necessary to protect the hair as well as the complexion.

Moderate exposure to the sun will not prove detrimental to the hair. In fact, it will strengthen and benefit, if it is not wet but, by the persistence with which girls submit wet hair to the hot rays of the sun, it is not much wonder they find it fading and parched.

Changes In Warfare.

From the Indianapolis News.

The recent changes in warfare are probably as great as any that have occurred since the discovery of gunpowder. The greatest change is perhaps in the rifle which the soldier of the line uses. It is already the theory of professors in the great German military school that the rifle is doomed. They say that as the muzzle-loading gun was replaced for the breech-loader, so the automatic rifle will be replaced by the individual machine gun. Germany, says an English military writer, instead of seeking to adapt new circumstances to old theories, changes theories to meet new circumstances. So Germany is manufacturing individual machine guns by the thousand. They have been guns that required two men to handle them. Now they are made so as to be handled by one man. The soldiers who won and lost at Waterloo carried weapons heavier and clumsier than the present new individual machine gun.

A Maxim, after all, is merely an improved automatic rifle with a water jacket, and it can be carried and fired with less effort than could the old smooth bore of 1815. The morale, too, of the man behind the machine gun is higher. Already it is said that the German army has 50,000 of these guns in use and is manufacturing them daily in great quantities. They are cheap, the parts are easily duplicated, and they take little more room than a rifle. The best soldiers of the army are placed in charge of them. The soldier can sit at ease and pour death into the opposing ranks as easily as water is squirted through a hose.

A member of the French foreign legion writing in the New York Sun, says the rifle will be displaced by the hand grenade. The grenadiers have done great damage so far. Before a battle now the artillery shells the trenches for hours and when damage is almost complete, the advance is made, with the grenade men first to throw their bombs in the trenches to complete the confusion.

How She Managed.

From the National Monthly.

She had tried in vain to get the telephone, but the other parties were using the line. The last time she heard one woman say:

"I have just put on a pan of beans for dinner."

She tried later, but the women were still talking. Exasperated, she broke in crisply:

"Madam, I smell your beans burning."

A horrified scream greeted this remark and then she was able to put in her call.

WAR TAKES HEAVY TOLL OF ATHLETES

From the New York Evening Post.

The effect of the stupendous struggle on athletics and sports will make itself felt for years to come. There is hardly a branch of sport that has escaped without losing one or more of its noted exponents.

The havoc wrought by death among famous runners has unquestionably been the most startling. The names of some of these, known the world over for their prowess, follow:

Lieut. W. W. Halswelle, the Olympic champion in several events held in 1908; Anderson, of Oxford, who competed in the Olympic at Stockholm; James Duffy, the Canadian distance runner, winner of the Yonkers and Boston marathons; Jean Bouin, the great French runner, whom experts considered the greatest distancer in the world; R. Rau, the champion Teuton sprinter and record holder; Hans Braun, the wonderful middle distance runner, Max Hoffman, who might have been the former's successor; Heinz Hegemann and Herman Lerow, German relay runners, and Karl Schoenberg, cross country runner.

In the death of Anthony F. Wilding, killed in action at the Dardanelles, the tennis world loses a player, who had been universally considered as the most skilled wielder of the racquet in the history of the sport. Kenneth Powell is another famous English tennis player to meet Wilding's fate. Germany's leading lawn tennis promoter, Dr. Otto Nirnheim, died in the hospital in Louvain, having been wounded by a bursting shell. Edward Kraeusel, of Breslau, winner of German tennis tournaments, was killed in east Prussia. Chelli, a player of exceptional ability, and Du Bousquet are the French tennis players of note who have fallen.

Of noted golfers, one of the world's greatest amateurs, Capt. John Graham, lost his life during a charge at Ypres. Lord Annesley, formerly amateur champion of Ireland, was killed in attempting a flight across the channel on an air raid. Capt. C. F. Barber, of Chester, went down in the Dardanelles on the battleship Goliath. Norman Hunter is reported among the "wounded and missing." Capt. W. A. Henderson, who defeated Jerome Travers some years ago, was killed last fall. Lieut. H. N. Atkinson, erstwhile Welsh title holder, is another to lose his life. Julian Martin-Smith died of wounds received in battle. Miss Neill Fraser, a noted Scotch woman player died with fever after serving as a field nurse.

The Other Side of the Question.

From the Springfield Republican.

The British army recognized its weakness, and for years had preached reorganization upon the Prussian system. The present government must face the fact that it did not even stand neutral in this contest, but led the opposition to the reform.—London war correspondence.

Are there anywhere professional military men who do not preach 'reorganization?' General Bernhardi was clamoring for it before the war, deploring the weakness which allowed 100,000 young men every year to slip through the net of militarism because the standing army had not kept pace with the population. It is not to the discredit of the British liberal government that it has worked consistently against militarism and for peace, and its record has gone far to put the onus of blame upon Germany. If a jingo government had been a power since 1906 Britain and its allies would not have had so much sympathy among neutrals. Sympathy may not help on the battlefield against a perfectly equipped adversary, but it is worth a good deal in a prolonged war of exhaustion.

Well Named.

From the National Monthly.

"What's that you call your mule?"

"I call him 'Corporation,'" answered the old negro.

"How did you come to give him such a name?"

From "The Wage Slaves."

From forge and farm and mine and bench,
Deck, altar, outpost lone—
Mill, school, battalion, counter, trench,
Rail, senate, sheepfold, throne—
Creation's cry goes up on high
From age to cheated age:
"Send us the men who do the work
For which they draw the wage."

• • • • • • • • •

When through the Gates of Stress and Strain
Comes forth the vast Event—
Tho simple, sheer, sufficing, sane
Result of labor spent—
They that have wrought the end unthought
Be neither saint nor sage,
But men who merely did the work
For which they draw the wage.

• • • • • • • • •

Wherefore to these the Fates shall bend
(And all old idle things—)
Wherefore on these shall Power attend.
Beyond the grasp of kings.
Each in his place, by right, not grace,
Shall rule his heritage—
The men who simply do the work
For which they draw the wage.

Not such as scorn the loitering street,
Or waste, to earn its praise,
Their noontida's unreturning heat
About their morning ways;
But such as dower each mortgaged hour
Alike with clean courage—
Even the men who do the work
For which they draw the wage.

"Come, Eric, let us go back. Let us go far away from here. Why should we stay in Corinth? Why stay here by the sea? Think of the great, dry, peaceful west, where the mountains—"

"Listen," he broke in, his voice rising to a monotonous, sing-song pitch, "listen to me. The fishing off the Point used to be the best along the coast. They tell me there is no catch at all in these days, and hasn't been for half a dozen years. The great catches are no more. The fishermen say that the stretch from here to the Eddy Islands is hoodooed. They can't understand it. But I could tell them, Mary, I could tell them. There's something out there that scares them away that—"

"Why, Eric!" she cried. "You are losing your mind. What a silly thing to say. As if that could make any difference to a fish! Don't be ridiculous."

"Well, it's queer, isn't it?" he insisted. "You'll have to admit it." He stared out across the tumbling waters, white fear in his wide-spread eyes. She gave him a swift, furtive look and then fell to trembling all over. Was he going mad?

"Come away, Eric," she cried, tightening her grasp on his arm. "It's horrid here. Let us go back. It's tea time. See it will soon be dark."

"I wonder—I wonder if it could be possible for waves as big as these to wash an iron chest ashore. Maybe it's coming now, rolling over and over on the bottom of——"

She screamed aloud.

"Don't!"

He had drawn so close to the brink of the precipice, the better to search the foaming crannies far below with dreadful, eager eyes. After a moment he obeyed the frantic tugging of her hands and fell back to a less perilous footing, a short laugh cracking on his lips.

"No," he said, with a note of triumph in his voice, "it can't come ashore. It's out there to stay."

"Come, Eric," she pleaded.

He threw his arm around her. "What a beast I am to keep you up here in the wind and rain. Why, you're drenched. You're half frozen." Swiftly aroused to compassion and concern for her, he led her away from the wild brink to a less exposed spot in the lee of a jutting rock. Here they were sheltered from the wind and the freezing drizzle; but the gale shrieked about their ears, and the sea roared all the more loudly because they had slunk back from its fury. Great gulls careened past them, their screams no more than sharp, staccato barks, as of a dog in flight.

The terror in Mary's eyes was most distressing to him. She was trembling violently. Her wet hair had blown across her face. Her figure was limp, pathetic.

"We'll go back, dearie," he cried. "I'm sorry you came. You will be ill for all this. I should have come alone. That's what I wanted to do. I wanted to smash this fear and dread I've had for years. Well, I've done it. I'm no longer afraid of Stone Wall or the sea out yonder. I can laugh at them and at myself for having been afraid. I can laugh at——"

Suddenly he stopped as if petrified. Even as he uttered his hapless boast, there came floating up to him on the wings of the gale a harsh, never to be forgotten laugh, mocking, distant, unlocated, came floating up as a part of the gibbering turmoil, out of the wind racked Atlantic, out of nowhere!

"Good God!" he gasped, shrinking back against the rock with the glare of horror in his eyes.

She looked at him in utter amazement—and dread. The terror in his face was something she was never to forget.

"Eric," she whined. "What is it?"

His voice was hoarse. "Did—did you hear it?"

"There is some one out here besides ourselves, Eric," cried she, "so don't be afraid. We are not alone, dear. I heard some one——"

He turned upon her with a glad shout. "You—you did hear it, then? You heard the laugh?"

"Yes, of course. Tramps, I suppose, sheltered in the caves over——"

"Thank God! Thank God!" he shouted. "If you heard it, too, then it must have been real."

"Real? The laugh? Why—why, Eric, how queerly you act. What of it? Was it the laugh that—Ah! See! There they are—two of them."

She was pointing excitedly along the crest of the cliff toward the right.

In bold relief against the leaden sky, the figures of two men stood out clearly defined. Not more than 100 yards separated the two couples on this bleak, supposedly deserted stretch of Stone Wall.

In sheer amazement the Midthornes gazed at their fellow adventurers. Slowly into their intelligence stole the knowledge that these men were not strangers. They knew them well! Great, rain-coated men were they, wind blown and sturdy, and they looked not toward them, but out to sea.

Again the raucous laugh was wafted across the rocks.

"By heaven, Mary, it's Adam Carr!" cried Eric, passing his hand over his eyes, a great weakness assailing him.

"And John," she cried, amazed. "John Payson."

At that instant the two men turned, as if so ordered by some strange, compelling force, and looked squarely at the spot where the Midthornes stood.

CHAPTER XVII.

A BEGGAR COMES KNOCKING.

For many seconds they stared intently at each other. It was quite evident that John Payson had not been aware of this propinquity until the present moment. His surprise was apparent even at so great a distance. Not so Adam Carr. There could be no doubting the fact that he had known all along of the Midthorne's presence on Stone Wall. Either he had followed them to the wild, lonely spot, or he had exercised that amazing sense of clairvoyancy which he possessed, guessing correctly that Eric would venture first of all to the scene of his so called crime before going to his uncle with the confession.

At last Payson sent an eager cry across the rocks to Mary, calling out her name as he abruptly left his companion's side to make his way toward her. Adam Carr sprang after him, clutching his arm. The younger man came to a standstill, plainly amazed by the act of his companion. A moment later they were to be seen in earnest conversation, the older man apparently calm and obdurate, the younger expostulating vehemently. Thrice the latter sought to shake off the retaining hand.

Finally they gave over talking and turned to contemplate the couple in the lee of the rock. Two strong figures were they, silhouettes against the grey, unlovely sky, defying the wind that scoured the cliffs.

"Eric," said Mary, her lips close to his ear, "is there really a resemblance, or is my mind so full of Adam Carr that I can see no one else? Isn't it odd that I should—"

"It's not a fancy, Mary," said he gravely, without taking his eyes from the two men. "The likeness is there. It's real. Now, maybe you can begin to understand."

"But I don't understand," she cried in perplexity. Suddenly light burst upon her. "Oh, Eric, you—you can't mean that that he—"

"See for yourself, dear. It's odd you never noticed it before."

He was quick to comfort her. "Nothing is sure in this world, Mary darling, and this may be a coincidence, a freak of nature."

He glanced toward the men on the brow of the cliff. Adam Carr waved his hand in a friendly fashion, and an instant later John Payson did the same. Then with seeming reluctance, he turned to follow the older man. Side by side, they turned away from the edge of Stone Wall, urged to swifter strides by the wind at their backs. Not once did they look behind.

"They're going, Mary," said Eric.

She raised her eyes. Together they watched the two men until they were lost to sight among the rocks that lined the distant roadway.

"I am afraid of him, Eric," she moaned. "I am afraid of Jack now. There was something terrible about him, something I'd never seen before—never even dreamed of."

"If he isn't the son of Ad—"

"Stop!" she almost screamed. "I don't want you to say it. You may be wrong. God may have played a trick on us, on every one. I'm beginning to think that God isn't above small things like that. No, no! We must never speak of it. It hurts, Eric, oh, how it hurts."

"On my soul, Mary, I am sorry for him. He is a decent chap. I—"

"He is a man, Errie, and I love him. I love him! I shall love him till I die."

"But you can see how impossible it will be for you to—"

"Haven't I said I would give him up?" she cried, beating upon his breast with her clenched hands. "Don't ask me to say anything more."

"Maybe it's all right after all," he began, but she stopped him.

"If it's all right, why should he be out here today with that man? No! He stands with Adam Carr and he stands for Adam Carr. He is against you. There is a greater influence than my love at work with him."

"He tried to come to you."

"Then, what was it that held him back?" she demanded fiercely.

He held her off, looking straight into her eyes, and spoke steadily, even calmly.

"He had just been listening to Adam Carr's story of the thing that lies out there in the sea. That's why. He knows about me, Mary. That's what held him back."

"Eric," she said after a moment, "I think we'd better tell everything to Uncle Horace."

"Yes," said he, "I've made up my mind to do it."

"Wait till tomorrow, dear."

"Why put it off?"

"Please, Errie—just because I ask it of you."

A sharp exclamation fell from his lips. The next instant he was pointing in the direction of Bud's Rock. A man was hurrying toward them, a distant, wind fighting figure that came on swiftly, regardless of the rough, uneven going and the crevasses. He held his hand before his nose and mouth to breathe the better in the face of the gale.

"It's Jack!" she cried eagerly.

Her brother's arms dropped from her shoulders, and a muttered word of execration ground its way through his teeth. Then with no word of explanation, he advanced to meet the oncomer, holding her tightly by the arm.

Half way across the bleak plateau John Payson stopped, planting himself squarely in their path. There he waited until they came up. Eric would have passed him by with a hoarse command to Mary, but her lover shifted his position, obstructing the way.

"What do you want?" demanded Eric, coming to a standstill and regarding him with blazing eyes.

"I want Mary," said Jack Payson resolutely. "You're a beast, Eric, to bring her out here on a day like this. Do you understand? A beast!"

Mary swirled in front of Eric, throwing herself on his breast, and clinging to him. She did not utter a word, but the act was significant.

"You're right, Payson," he exclaimed miserably. "A selfish beast. Will you come along with us? Help me to get her back to the house."

Without a word, Payson sprang to her side, clasping one of her arms in his. Together they half carried her across the wild, open plateau, across the ill fated bridge and into the protected highway.

She was limp with fatigue and excitement, and the pain that was in her heart. In the shelter of the defile she begged them to stop until she could recover her breath and her lost composure.

"I couldn't stand it, Mary," Payson was saying, a world of anxiety in his voice. "I couldn't leave you out there. Adam tried to keep me from coming back, but I—"

"I am so glad you came, Jack," she cried. "I wondered why you went away without—"

"Here, here!" expostulated Eric. "Are you forgetting what you said back there?"

"No," she faltered; "but I can't help saying this, Errie. Oh, I don't know what I am to do." It was a wail that cut him like a sharp edged sword.

He turned upon Payson.

"What were you doing out there with Adam Carr?" he demanded.

"I'm not answerable to you," retorted Payson.

"Don't quarrel," pleaded Mary. "Please don't quarrel."

"What was Adam Carr saying to you?" went on Eric recklessly.

"See here, Midthorne," began the other hotly, "you've said some ugly things to me lately. Adam Carr is my friend. He's yours, too. You ought to be ashamed of yourself for——"

"What was he telling you?" repeated Eric.

Payson opened his lips to speak, then thought better of the impulse. He contented himself with a long, hard, even suspicious scrutiny of the questioner's face.

"Some other time, if you please," he said tartly. "It is our duty to get poor Mary home as quickly as possible. Come, dear."

But she clung to Eric, ignoring the outstretched hand. Payson fell away as if he had been slapped in the face. He kept pace with them all the way to the Verner cottage, but not a word fell from his lips in all that distance.

It was quite dark when they came to the gate; the sharp, chill mist was still blowing. Mary's teeth were chattering.

"Good night," said Jack Payson.

Eric hesitated. He had been thinking hard all the way up from the coast, but his thoughts were not hard. Somehow, the manliness, the self restraint, the very thoughtfulness of John Payson wrought a subtle change in his estimate of the man. He was wondering if he was not really grateful to him if he was not, after all, more than grateful. Years ago he had been sorry for him. Was he not sorry for him now?

"Won't you come in, Jack?" he asked abruptly, holding the gate open.

Payson stared, first at one, then the other. He began to stammer an apology for hurrying on.

"Come to the fire," said Mary, looking at him over Eric's shoulder.

The look in those dark, piteous eyes decided him.

"I want to be friendly with you, Eric," he said "and I want to speak with you about something that has just transpired. I will come in for a few minutes. First of all, Mary must get out of her wet clothes. And you, too. Something hot to drink."

"And bed for her," added Eric meaningly.

They entered the cottage. The room was quite dark except for the space directly in front of the dying embers in the fireplace. The trio, with their shadows, filled the corner of the room nearest the door, where they had paused at a word from Eric.

He glanced keenly about the room, then gave vent to a short, apologetic laugh.

"I half expected Adam Carr sitting here," he said.

"He took the 6 20 for New York," said Payson.

Eric started. "Are you sure?" uneasily.

"Certainly. At least, that was his intention. He had time to make it. We drove to Stone Wall, you see."

"Then you got there after we did?"

Payson smiled faintly, almost ironically. "Spies don't precede their victims as a general thing," he said. "I'll replenish the fire while you are changing."

Mary left the room without turning her bent head to look at her wouldbe protector. Eric followed her. He was back in a moment, however. Payson looked up from the pile of wood and kindling over which he stooped.

"Take off your wet shoes and stockings," he ordered sharply.

"Time enough for that," said Midthorne, coming up to stand over him. "What were you doing out there? Quick, before Mary comes back."

"I'll fix the fire first," said Payson deliberately.

Neither spoke for three or four minutes, while he laid the paper and kindling. When the fresh, blue flames began to dodge in and out among the logs he arose and faced Mary's brother, coolly brushing the wood dust from his hands.

"We were out there to look at the place where my father was lost. My father, mind you," he said with curious emphasis.

Eric's satirical smile was not lost on him.

"Would you mind taking off your sou'wester Payson?" he said irrelevantly. "It's dripping all over the rug."

"I'll stand on the hearth stone," said the other. They were sparring for time in a most deliberate manner.

Then, move over a bit; I'm also wet."

They stood side by side, with their backs to the blaze—two tall, tense figures that waited. Outside the wind shrieked and crooned by turns, the windows rattled in their frames; a soft, insistent beating on the panes, as of tiny insects hurtling, told of the rain that blew.

"I waited at old Jabe's cottage for Adam," said Payson abruptly, looking straight before him. "I'd been worrying over something you put into my head, Midthorne. I couldn't go to my mother about it. Adam was the only one who could explain. He did not hesitate. I had a buggy there. We drove out to Stone Wall. He showed me where my father's schooner was last seen afloat, and where the wreckage came in, and the dead bodies of the crew. At the mouth of the ravine. My father went down and never came ashore. The schooner is out there now, on the bottom, half way to Eddy's Islands, 100 fathoms down. And there, Eric, is where my father was buried 32 years ago."

"Is that all he said?"

"No, he said my mother was true to my father, as true as steel."

He was still staring at the opposite wall, his face set and white.

"Nothing about Chetwynd?" demanded Eric bluntly.

Execution of a Police Crook.

From the Chicago News.

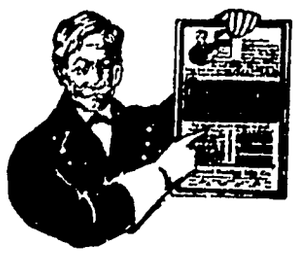
Efforts to save Charles Becker, the former police official of New York, from execution failed and he has died in the electric chair. Becker was convicted of responsibility for the death of a protected gambler who was about to confess to the district attorney of New York that Becker was his partner in the gambling house run by him. Aside from the natural revulsion against the taking of human life, even in fulfillment of the law, there will be general satisfaction at the fate of Becker.

Police graft in large American cities far too commonly goes unpunished. The fate of Becker is a sign that a new order is beginning. District Attorney Whitman, who procured the conviction of Becker, is now the governor of the state of New York. He was selected to that position because of his effectiveness in fighting this particular battle of the people against police corruption.

The struggle to eliminate police graft is a long and difficult struggle, but it is bound to succeed. The sending of Becker to the death chair in New York for a crime which he conceived and executed through the agency of criminals who should have been objects of prosecution instead of his tools should be an impressive warning to grafters in the police service of any American city.

The spectacle of Becker's execution has special significance for Chicago in view of recent revelations in the criminal court in connection with the trial of policemen accused of corrupt dealings with notorious swindlers. The parallel is striking, except that in this community what is said to have been an attempt to close the earthly career of a talkative witness did not result in murder. Bertsche and his allies in various bold swindling operations, even if they are not to be believed in full, have made disclosures that point to corruption in local police circles.

It is notorious that afforestation is one of the most urgent of China's needs, and it is therefore of interest to learn that a school of forestry is about to be established in the university of Nanking. The co-operation of the director of forestry at Manila has been obtained, and it is proposed to send two experts from Manila to aid in establishing the school.



The General Says:

Know-why and know-how are essential to any success. Every one of us has to acknowledge that the same sort of military preparedness that fits a nation for its defense is the most effective principle in making an industry of any kind serviceable and profitable both to manufacturer and consumer.

This Great Roofing Organization Is Trained Like an Army

Three enormous mills—officered and manned by the best trained force ever enlisted in an industrial army—three huge factories that are run like clockwork.

Military exactness in the securing and selection of raw material, and in every step from then on until the finished product is distributed and sold.

Constant readiness—being prepared every minute for the work to be done the next—Right there you have your finger on the great, essential reasons for the unfailing satisfaction every user finds in

Certain-teed

ROOFING

This roofing certainly has no superior. It is the best roofing that can possibly be made and it is manufactured in and guaranteed by the largest Roofing and Building Paper Mills in the World. 1-ply is guaranteed 5 years; 2-ply, 10 years, and 3-ply, 15 years, and this guarantee means the minimum life of the roofing. Thousands of Certain-teed Roofs all over the country are outliving the period of the guarantee.

When the General first entered the field the cost of roofing was two or three times more than it is today and the quality was not as high as Certain-teed is today. By reason of his enormous output the General has not only been able to bring down the cost and selling price of roofing, but he has also been able to raise the quality to its maximum. Today every fifth roll of roofing sold bears the Certain-teed label.

Slate Surfaced

SHINGLES

These shingles are made of the same high-grade materials as are used in Certain-teed Roofing. This process recognizes the principle that roofing materials don't wear out—they dry out. Therefore, Certain-teed Roofing is made with a soft center asphalt and coated with a harder blend of asphalts, which keeps the soft saturation within—the life of the roofing—from drying out quickly. This produces a flexible shingle, a true sign of thorough saturation in the slowest drying asphalt mixtures that can be made for roofing purposes. A thick, stiff or heavy-bodied asphalt shingle is by no means a proof of durability on the roof.

We use only genuine crushed slate in natural green or red colors for surfacing the Certain-teed Shingle. No painting is necessary. We don't try to use old brick, common rock, or crushed tile from old tile roofs. The slate also increases the fire-resisting qualities, thereby minimizing fire dangers and lowering insurance rates.

Certain-teed roofing, shingles, wall boards, felts, building papers, etc., bearing the General's name, are sold by your local lumber or hardware dealer at very reasonable prices. Don't send your money away for these goods. Patronize your home dealer.

SOME HINTS FOR BUILDERS

Great Care Should Be Taken in Selection of the Most Substantial Roofing Material.

If you were without preparation or plan, rudely placed in a wilderness, your first thought would be of food supply and your next of shelter, for these are the two most vital necessities of mankind. It is therefore natural that the best thought, and study are put upon these two essentials.

More forward steps have been taken in the building industry in the past fifteen years, as regards comfort, service and architectural beauty than in the fifty years previous.

Only in recent years has the handling of cement in building work been understood properly, and progress is still constantly being made with it. Modern hotels and office buildings are being equipped with sheet metal mouldings and steel veenered doors. Nearly every important change in building construction is away from the fire hazard of wood.

One of the most significant developments of recent years is the crushed slate surfaced asphalt shingle which is, on new construction and old, rapidly supplanting the wooden article. There are many reasons for this. The slate surfaced shingles add beauty to any building—in fact, there is really no comparison from an architectural standpoint. Crushed slate of pleasing tints of red or green, is employed as a surfacing. The shingles are uniformly eight inches wide and are exposed four inches to the weather. No painting is necessary as the red or green crushed slate is natural and therefore cannot fade.

The purchaser, however, should guard himself against buying a slate surfaced shingle that is not guaranteed by a reliable and responsible manufacturer. There are so many kinds of roofing and shingles on the market today each claiming to be the best that it becomes necessary for the buyer to get some satisfactory assurance that the roofing or shingles are represented honestly.

Garner, Ia.

Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Mitchell are enjoying a visit from his brother-inlaw, J. J. Bontley and family, and his cousin, C J. Stelman and family, of Monticello, Wisconsin. They arrived Wednesday by auto.

Now that a good share of our farmer friends have either threshed or are in the midst of it, we would greatly appreciate the fact if they would call in and pay up their accounts by September 15th. H Lau & Son.

Eight car load of stock were shipped from this point to Chicago, Saturday evening. J. G. Linden shipped four, 3 of cattle and 1 of hogs, Joe Johnson shipped 5 car of cattle and W. R. Bloom 1 of hogs. A. C. Lau & Son shipped a car of hogs, Monday evening

On Monday evening at about ten o'clock the large barn on the Steve Engstler place burned to the ground. Also the Silo which stood near and all of the contents of the barn. There were three horses and some calves in the barn at the time and they were all burned to death. It is reported the fire was caused by spontaneous combustion. We did not learn whether or not it was fully covered by insurance.—Garner Democrat.

A Kirkwood who is assisting C. E. Gibbs in exhibiting his pure bred stock at the various county fairs was down from Forest City, Friday, between trains. They are at Austin, Minnesota, this week.

Vernon Gross, who has been farming the old Rice farm in Plumb Creek this season, last week bought of Frank Dingley a 120-acre farm a half mile west of Hobart for $165 per acre and will make the place his home. The farm has fair improvements, but is cut in two by the railroad track. This farm belonged to the Dingley estate. It will be worth $200 per acre in a year or so, and Mr. Gross is wise in securing a place of his own.—Algona Republican. Mr. Gross is the husband of one of the George Bartholomew girls, who lived here for many years.

A large assortment of fall hats for the little folks.

Your call will be appreciated.

Mrs. C. F. Bier.

A Subdued Vocalist.

"Pa, you sing bass in the choir, don't you?" asked Bobby Smithers.

"Yes, my son," replied Mr. Smithers.

"And ma sings soprano?"

"That's right."

"Well, there's one thing I don't understand."

"What is it?"

"Mrs. Tompkins says you sing mighty big in public and mighty small at home."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Portugal.

Portugal obtained its name from porto, the haven or port where the Gauls landed their stores. This is Oporto, called by the Portuguese O Porto (the port). The town was given as a dowry to Teresa when she married Henry de Lorraine, who styled himself Earl of Portugal because the place was known as the portus Gallorum (the port of the Gauls). The name finally extended to the whole country.

Sons In China.

In China one can always borrow money on the strength of having a son, but nobody would advance a penny to the man if he had a dozen daughters. The sons are responsible for the debts of their fathers for three generations, while daughters are responsible only for the debts of their own husbands.

An Artist.

"Your son, sir, has a very effective touch."

"So's he's been borrowing from you too?"—Baltimore American.

Social Contract.

An up-to-date bride, when asked at her wedding if she would "love, honor and obey," murmured, "I will if he does financially what he has promised."

CREAMERY DAY, SEPTEMBER 10

For the third time in the history of our little city, we set aside a day, a festal day, in honor of our Creamery and in honor of the progressive farmers who milk the cows.

PROGRAM OF THE DAY:

10:30 a. m. At the Park. Special Instrumental Music. Address of Welcome—Mayor Yahnke. "Efficiency in Dairying"—R. K. Bliss.

Prof. Bliss is the head of the Extension Department at Ames, Ia., and makes his first appearance in Hancock County at this time. Don't fail to hear him while you have the chance.

12:00 m. Picnic Dinner at the Park.

Every business store in town will close during the noon hour. The town people as well as the patrons of the Creamery are all invited to bring their dinner baskets and gather in the Park for a big feed and a social good time. The band will give a regular concert at this hour from the band stand in the Park. Hot Coffee and Real Cream will be served free to all.

1:30 p. m. "Public and Home Sanitation"—Miss Bentley

Miss Bentley is the lady who taught "Home Economics" at our last winter's Short Course, and made numerous friends in Klemme and vicinity.

2:30 p. m. At the Park. Selection by the Band. "Producers' Influence on the Quality of Creamery Butter—F. L. Odell.

2:30 p. m. Free—Moving Pictures—Free

The women and children are invited to attend the Idle Hour Theatre and see the "movies" free, while the men are listening to Prof. Odell. These Reels were ordered especially for Creamery Day.

3:30 p. m. Visit the Creamery and See the Exhibit of Different Makes of Cream Separators.

7:00 p. m. Band Concert on Main Street.

8:15 p. m. At Opera House. Prof. R. K. Bliss will Give an Interesting and Instructive Lecture Entitled "Present Day Agricultural Problems."

This will be followed by an Illustrated Lecture by Dr. O. P. Thompson, State Milk Inspector, on Dairying.

REMEMBER ALWAYS:—You will never "go broke" if you stay by the cows and milk—the richest communities in the world are the "dairy sections."—Be wise and "pump the cows." September 10th is to be a day of education.

A REPLY

to the following notice which appeared in last week's TIMES:—

NOTICE!

We furnish as good a Coal and better ... car load lots at $4 10 per ton on board of car, Klemme, as Wellemeyer or Milligan and others are selling. Call and give your orders A. O. Lau & Son

I wish to state for the information of the Coal buying public that Soft Coal can be shipped in and sold at Klemme for $3 00 per ton, but it is a poor grade, containing much rock and other impurities, and would prove to be expensive fuel in the end Even the cheaper grades of Illinois Coals at $3 90 to $4 10 per ton are bad enough.

But if you want a good Coal for your money try our Majestic 6-inch lump at $4 75 It is a black shiny Coal remarkably free from slate, and burns down to a white ash, and those who are using it now for threshing and for cook stove use state that it is equal in fuel value to Coal which they usually purchased at $6 00 per ton.

In addition to several cars of Majestic we have other good Coals on the way, such as Powell's Run Dock Hocking at $5 50, and Cabin Creek Splint at $5 50 and Pittston Hard Coal, nut and stove size, at $9 50 to $9 75, making nine cars all told to date.

It seems to me that the author of the above notice from last week's TIMES is taking in too much territory when he offers to "furnish as good a Coal and better at $4 10 per ton than Wellemeyer" can he be offering Hard Coal and Splint and Hocking at $4 10?

I would suggest that in the future he desist from using my name in his notices and advertisements in such a careless manner, for I surely will answer back to every unfair mention of my name

A few years ago a farmer from Dows, Ia., came up and bought a car load of corn from several of our Klemme farmers, and they started to haul the corn to the station at Klemme, when lo and behold! they could not find a wagon scales on which they were allowed to weigh, and they actually had to haul their corn home and cancel the contract with the Dows farmer.

Last year a few farmers clubbed together and bought a car of Coal for threshing, they too could find no wagon scales on which they were allowed to weigh, and were obliged to weigh on a farmer's scales out in the country, which happened to be rather inconvenient, and when instances like the above happen too frequently it's time for somebody to start something, and something was started this summer when 68 of the farmers near town organized a Farmers Scales Co., and installed a Public Scales at Klemme, Iowa. They selected the best 5-ton wagon scales that money could buy, and it properly installed by a factory man, had it tested by the State Inspector of Weights and Measures, and also secured a State License permitting them to do public weighing, the fee for which is 10c per load, and the undersigned was duly appointed manager and has charge of the scales.

An accurate scales for public weighing is a good thing for any community. It gives true weights to both buyer and seller.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with this, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

"HOGGING DOWN" PAYS WELL

Experience and Experiments Both Prove It Effective Method

It is both practical and profitable to harvest a part of the corn crop on every Iowa farm by "hogging" it down Some hundreds of farmers have reported to the agricultural experiment station at Ames that this practice pays and tests at the station bear out that experience. "Hogging down" makes possible more rapid production of pork and at lower cost than where corn is fed by hand, and no corn need be wasted in the field if rightly managed. A saving of 6.99 cents on every bushel "hogged down" is estimated by 158 farmers The pork made by a bushel of corn "hogged down" is given by them as 12 02 lbs At the experiment station somewhat better results were secured when a good supplement was used

In "hogging down" it is important that young pigs be used for best results, preferably spring shoats farrowed in March, April or May. It is also essential that the pigs get some sort of supplemental feed while in the corn field This may be some crop grown in the field, as rape, rye, pumpkins or the like, or some concentrate such as meat meal, buttermilk or middlings. In tests at Ames the cost of producing pork by "hogging down" without a supplement was $3 14 a hundred, while with the use of meat meal the cost was only $2.43.

A thorough presentation of facts about "hogging down" born in Iowa will be found in Bulletin No. 143 of the Iowa agricultural experiment station, and it will be sent on request.

STORES WILL CLOSE AT 6 P. M.

Beginning Monday, September 27, the Local Merchants of Klemme Will Close Every Evening Except Wednesday and Saturday

A few years ago, before we had the Creamery, the farmers used to drive to town in the cool of the evening and bring in the cream. The stores used to take in cream almost all night, and often during the summer months they would do as much or more business after supper than they did during the entire day. It was fun to run a store at night in those days; time goes fast when you are busy. But with the coming of the Creamery things began to change, and now the stores have their rush in the morning, because the Creamery, in order to make the very best butter, must have the cream brought in the morning; in fact some Creameries are so strict that they refuse all cream brought to them later than noon of each day; and the stores complain that business is very straggling after supper, and scarcely enough trade to pay for the lights, except two nights, which usually are band concert night and Saturday night. So you see that as times change the stores must change their methods too, and if the people choose to do their trading in the morning, then the store people must be there to wait on them, and if there is nothing doing in the evening they might as well close part of the time at least.

WINS PRIZES AT EVERY FAIR

C. E. Gibbs Returned Saturday From Successful Tour of Various Fairs

C. E. Gibbs returned Saturday from his tour of the various county fairs in this section, where he had been exhibiting his Pure Bred Short Horn Cattle, Mule Foot Hogs and Shetland Ponies. He is very well pleased with the result of his trip, and has made many new friends and prospective customers for his stock. He won a large number of premiums at every fair where he exhibited them, and the amount of money received will more than take care of the expenses of the trip. He made the following fairs in the order named: Mason City, Forest City, Austin, Minn., and Algona. We hoped to have a full report of the premiums he won, but he has been too busy arranging for his annual sale, which will take place soon.

The Missouri is the muddiest river in the Mississippi valley; it carries more silt than any other large river in the United States except, possibly, the Rio Grande and the Colorado. For every square mile of country drained it carries down stream 381 tons of dissolved and suspended matter, each year In other words, the river gathers annually from the country that it drains more than 123,000,000 tons of silt and soluble matter, some of which it distributes over the flood plains below to form productive agricultural lands, but most of which finds its way at last to the Gulf of Mexico.

A note by Professor Wolf, of the Konigstuhl observatory, describes the rather unusual case of a star which has been carried, by its proper motion, directly over another, as seen from the earth, within the last few years. The eclipsing star is of the 13th magnitude, and has the somewhat rapid proper motion of more than a second of arc per annum. The eclipsed star, of 15th magnitude, was formerly southeast of the other, but is now on the opposite side of it.

He had served in the war as a major of artillery in the Belgian army, and took part in the retreat from Antwerp.

It has been found that the ash of the seaweed collected on the shore of Manila bay, in Tondo, yields 15 per cent of potash. This discovery is hailed with considerable interest, owing to the war time scarcity of potash. No data is yet available to show just the amount of seaweed there is, but it is known in a general way that it is abundant. Explorations and further experimentation will be conducted by the government.

SIX BUILDINGS AND AUTO DESTROYED IN FIRE NEAR SCHALLER

Jacob Neubauer, Farmer, Is Heavy Loser—Owner Has Narrow Escape.

Schaller, Ia., Sept. 11.—At an early hour this morning fire destroyed all the buildings, except the corn crib, on the Jacob Neubauer farm, about five miles southeast of this place. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The barn and house were both burning when neighbors arrived Mr. Neubauer was asleep in the house at the time and was nearly overcome with smoke. The burned buildings included the barn, house, hog house, chicken house and garage. A new automobile was included in the loss.

PROMINENT MEN SEEK ELECTION AS LAY DELEGATES

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 11.—The laymen's conference at the Dubuque meeting of the Upper Iowa Methodist Episcopal conference, is going to be an interesting one when it comes to the selection of lay delegates to the general conference which meets at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., next May. This election will occur on Friday, September 17. Circulars received here announce the candidacy of at least nine candidates, and several more are known to have an itching for the position and hope they may come in as a dark horse. Senator T J. B. Robinson, of Hampton; Senator Willar Stuckslager, of Lisbon; W. J. Elliott, of Cedar Rapids; Judge S. M. Weaver, of Iowa Falls; W. F. Muse, of Mason City; S. W. Mercer, of Iowa City; A. B. Rathburn, of Clinton; Prof. C. P. Colgrove, of Cedar Falls, and John Lister, of Conrad, all have excellent backing in their candidacy. Only six are to be chosen. While there are six districts this has figured but little in the selection of delegates. It is quite usual to pick two delegates from the same district.

DES MOINES CONFERENCE TO FINANCE RESCUE WORK

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 11.—The Des Moines conference of the Methodist Episcopal church will finance a home in Des Moines for dependent and delinquent girls whose ages are too far advanced to give the juvenile court jurisdiction over them.

This fact was made known yesterday at the luncheon at the Bidwell Deaconess home, given by the executive board of the Woman's Home Missionary society, for the women delegates to the conference at the First Methodist church.

The home was established, unknown to the public, six months ago. The location of the home has been withheld by the officers. There are now five girls living in the home. Mrs. William Wilson, of Des Moines, president of the district society, is general superintendent.

FORMER DAKOTA STUDENT IN REX BEACH CHARACTER

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 11.—One day in 1905, John W. McCord, a Drake student, working his way through college, felt a desire to rough it on the frontier. He sought his fortunes in the west and north and finally landed on the bleak shore of Alaska with $10, his entire wealth, in his pocket.

Yesterday John W. McCord, prosperous and noted, was reminiscing luxuriously in the lobby of a local hotel. McCord is not known most widely by his own name, however. Thousands of fiction readers who are acquainted with "The Iron Trail," by Rex Beach, know him as Dan Appleton.

The greater part of McCord's prosperity has been realized in the last six months. "The whole trick turned for me this summer, but it took eight years to get things going," he told a reporter yesterday McCord now is president of the Tolovana Lumber company, a trustee in the township of Brooks, stockholder in the Tolovana Ditch company and a heavily interested claimholder in the Tolovana district

Mr. McCord recently disposed of a small part of his interests for $30,000 and came back to his old home to visit his mother, Mrs. Harriet McCord, who lives at 1121 Twenty-fifth street.

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 11.—Orville Snow, one of the five men who broke jail at Charles City, was on a freight wrecked at Portland yesterday morning and was badly hurt. He is still at large He told two tramps that some of "the boys" were killed in a coal car and were under the wrecked coal.

Four cars of coal are piled up and it will be two days before the debris can be removed.

COURT GRANTS HEALY BIG FEE CLAIM IN FULL

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 11.—M. F. Healy, the Ft. Dodge attorney, was in the city today attending to the contest he has on with Mart Walch and John Malch, relative to the value of his services in the recent Colby deal. Mr. Healy rendered a bill for $15,000, and yesterday Judge Kelly authorized the payment of the bill in full. It is the largest fee ever paid in Cerro Gordo county for legal services, is the report. Mr. Healy returned to Ft. Dodge tonight with a big increase in bank deposits.

MASON CITY—Although his attorney has not made public the announcement, it is stated that Nick Lewchuk will enter a plea of guilty to the murder of Alex. Koslofsky, which occurred on Sunday morning, April 15. Lewchuk made a written confession of his guilt. While it was a cold blooded murder, he being a foreigner and unacquainted with American customs and laws, court officials would not recommend the death penalty. It is altogether probable that Judge Kelly will sentence him to life imprisonment. Lewchuk has made a model prisoner since his incarceration in the county jail.

DENISON—The divorce suit of Mr. and Mrs. Clark T. Marshall, of Charter Oak is taking many days of the regular term of court, although Judge Hutchinson began the case a week in advance in special session Mrs. Marshall is asking for a divorce and $60,000 of property, and her husband is making vigorous defense. Two and three auto loads of witnesses are coming here from Charter Oak every day

FORT DODGE—F. G. Warden, proprietor of the Kirkwood and Chamberlain hotels in Des Moines and a string of 11 hotels, yesterday bought the Wahkonsa hotel in this city from Arthur J. Morton for $100,000 cash. Mr. Morton, it is said, cleared $100,000 in 21 months' ownership.

CHEROKEE CITIZENS ENTHUSED ON PLANS TO BUILD HOSPITAL

Committees Seeking to Secure Fund of $50,000—Banquet Launches Project.

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 11.—At a largely attended public banquet here last evening formal action was taken to raise a fund of $50,000 to construct a modern hospital building in Cherokee. Pledges for $9,000 to start the fund were made at the banquet and general confidence is expressed that the provisional plans will be carried out with enthusiasm.

Dr. M. N. Voldeng, former superintendent of the local state hospital, now in charge of the epileptic colony project at Woodward, and Judge William Hutchinson were the principal speakers at the banquet. This function was preceded by a parade, which included more than 100 decorated automobiles.

About six months ago a committee of doctors joined with the Cherokee Commercial club to push the hospital project and an executive committee was named, consisting of: James Weart, president; Nestor Stiles, secretary; W. A. Sanford, treasurer; Dr. F. Hornibrook, Dr. J. H. Johnson and Dr. Howard. This committee enlisted the services of a special campaigner who had successfully carried through a similar affair at Bellevue, Ohio.

Women of the city have been enlisted to conduct a soliciting campaign for eight days, with the expectation that the amount needed for the hospital will be pledged within that period.

RINGLINGS STARTED ON CIRCUS CAREER IN IOWA

McGregor, Ia., Sept. 11.—When the special train took aboard a crowd of people at McGregor, bound for Ringling's circus at Postville, there were among the number those who had seen the Ringlings give their first show 40 years ago. Though it is generally supposed that the Ringling circus started at Baraboo, Wis., where the company now makes its winter headquarters, McGregor was in reality the early home of the Ringlings and their first show was given there. It was about the smallest show that ever exhibited under canvas.

The elder Ringling in early days was in the harness business in McGregor. As his boys grew up they helped their father in the shop. The old residents remember them as quiet young fellows whom no one expected would ever do anything big in the world. As boys, though, they were in the habit of giving circuses in their back yard Saturday afternoons.

INJURED PARENTS DO NOT KNOW BABY WAS KILLED

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 11.—A beautiful 2½-year-old boy lies dead at an undertakers, the victim of an automobile accident, and his parents are so badly injured that they cannot be told of his fate.

"My baby! How is my baby," the mother has asked in her lucid moments, but his condition was withheld from her.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Lansing, the parents, are at the St. Francis hospital, in a serious condition, but both will probably recover.

Walter Lansing, the little boy, called "Buster," was instantly killed when thrown out of the car. It had become unmanageable, coming down a steep grade.

It is probable the babe will have to be buried before the parents are able to attend the funeral.

MUCH DAMAGE CAUSED BY CLOUDBURST AT IOWA CITY

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 11.—There was a cloudburst in this section Wednesday night, accompanied by a heavy electrical disturbance, inflicting heavy losses on property in Johnson and surrounding counties. By 8 o'clock all the streams were out of their banks and numerous bridges were carried away.

In the lowlands, along rivers and creeks, the high water washed down hundreds of acres of corn.

Two horses were killed by lightning when a barn owned by Newman Harding here was destroyed.

Several houses in the city were badly damaged by lightning.

THREE OTHER PROSPECTS FOR IOWA GUBERNATORIAL RACE

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 11—Republican "dopesters" here regard the entrance into the gubernatorial race of Carl Kuehnle as a blow to the Harding candidacy. They figure that Kuehnle will draw from Harding's strength, but will not seriously affect the following of Cosson or Allen, except that it makes a four-cornered fight and further splits up the vote. It is further observed that all candidates so far announced are from northwestern and western Iowa and the rumors are that Nate Kendall, of Albia; B. W. Garrett, of Leon, and Charles Rawson, of Des Moines, will be active candidates within a few weeks.

WESTERN IOWA EDITORS BY MASON CITY OFFICERS

Woodbine, Ia., Sept. 11.—With C. W. Bays, editor of the Woodbine Twiner, as grand master of ceremonies, the summer meeting of the Western Iowa Editorial association will be held here Friday, September 10. The editors and their wives are to be the guests of the Woodbine Commercial club, the ladies of the Civic Improvement society attending as honary hostesses. The sessions will be at the library building and at the auditorium. The program includes a trip to the D. W. Lotspiech orchard, near town; banquets, toasts, and newspaper talk.

FIVE PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM CHARLES CITY JAIL

Charles City, Ia., Sept. 9.—By sawing through a supposed burglar proof cell, then opening a hole through a brick wall, Orville Snow, George West, Arthur Hayes, Don Seymour and Nick Kladis, all held on grand jury charges, broke jail here last night and are still at large. Waterloo bloodhounds are on the way and will be used in trailing the escaped prisoners.

FIFTH AUTO RECOVERED BY MASON CITY OFFICERS

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 9.—The Reo car stolen from B. B. Van Steenburg at Spirit Lake, July 29, has been located near Fountaine, Minn. It was stolen by Kehr and Hunt, who are under arrest here, and sold to Holets & Olson, at Wycoff. The thieves confess to having sold six cars to this firm.

IDA GROVE—Mrs. Henry H. Tourgee died at her home here, the last member of her family, her youngest brother having died just two days before in Ohio. Mrs. Tourgee was born 71 years ago in Ohio, and had lived in Ida county 38 years.

POLK COUNTY PLANS GRAVEL FOR ENTIRE COUNTY ROAD GROUP

Estimated Work Will Cost $1,000 Per Mile, Total of $190,000 For Whole System.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 10.—A movement to gravel every mile of Polk county's 190-mile highway system at an approximate cost of $190,000, putting the entire system in a condition unparalleled by any system perhaps in the middle west, has been started by Harry Barquist, chairman of the Polk county board of supervisors, it was announced from that office yesterday.

Mr. Barquist declares the county roads can be put in condition, graveled and sloped at a cost of about $1,000 per mile.

The chairman will take the matter up with the state highway commission, the Des Moines chamber of commerce and the Greater Des Moines committee at once He declares that the county will not be forced to pay the entire cost of the proposition once it is started

IOWA SUFFRAGE MEETING SCHEDULED FOR OCTOBER 20-21

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 10.—The Iowa Equal Suffrage association will hold its annual convention in Des Moines on October 20-21. The Savery hotel will be headquarters for the gathering and all sessions will be held there. Coming at the opening of what the suffragists hope will be their last great campaign before "votes for women" becomes a reality, this convention takes on added importance. It is expected that the attendance will be large, the convention being the forum where matters of keenest importance to the suffrage campaign will be discussed freely.

The president of the Iowa Equal Suffrage association and the leaders in the suffrage cause have not indorsed, nor will they endorse, any of the candidates in the field for the various state offices, nor will they solicit the indorsement of voters in behalf of any of the candidates.

"Neutrality at any price" is the motto to which the Iowa suffragists will cling tenaciously until the culmination of the campaign at the June primaries next year. The suffragists feel the keenest interest in those candidates who have co-operated in making the suffrage movment a succss, but they cannot afford to jeopardize the future of the suffrage cause by lending their influence and support to any one candidate to the exclusion of others.

AGED IOWA POET TAKING "AUTOMOBILE MECHANICS"

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 10.—One of the new students at the opening college convocation at Highland Park college is Maj. S. H M Byers, poet laureate of Iowa, friend of General Sherman, diplomatic representative to Switzerland, and author of many books, who has enrolled in the Highland Park college of engineering for a course in automobile mechanics. Major Byers purchased an automobile recently and wishes to learn all about it and be able to repair anything that goes wrong while on the road.

At the convocation Major Byers told of the kind of college he attended in his youth, a little frame school house built in the middle of a broad Iowa prairie, amid the deer, quail and prairie chickens. He said that all the literature he could procure was the New York Tribune and one religious paper, which he almost learned by heart each week, and that Greeley's editorials did much toward shaping his later life.

DR. HUTCHINSON SAYS EUGENICS IS DELUSION

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 10.—Dr. Woods Hutchinson, famous physician and writer, does not put much stock in the eugenics theory. He says that healthy, sound children can be developed without any special regard to the mating of parents, and that you don't have to begin with the parents or grandparents to have a healthy child. "You can feed and train and condition a child out of almost anything and into almost anything," he said. "We have been working on eugenics and after we have worked over this carefully we have learned that healthy, sound children can be developed without any special regard to the mating of their parents." Dr. Hutchinson said that strange as it may seem city children are more healthy than country children or small town youngsters. These facts have been developed in the scoring in the baby health contests. This is attributed to the time which the city mother gives to the care and study of her child and to the meetings she attends, where other mothers are present and expert advice is learned. He is an advocate of fresh air.

CORN INJURY 10 PER CENT IN NORTHWESTERN SECTION

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 10.—Following is the regular bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service for the week ending September 6

Ideal weather prevailed during the week. The days were practically cloudless, and the nights were moderately warm, which made the best conditions possible for maturing the corn crop, threshing and finishing haying The frost on August 30 and 31 seriously injured corn on low ground in the north central and northeastern counties. Probably 10 per cent of the corn in the northeastern counties was badly damaged. Shock threshing is nearly completed

A summary of reports received on September 1 shows the average condition of crops to be as follows Corn, 66 per cent; potatoes, 94 per cent, pastures, 107 per cent; apples, 101 per cent of the 1913 crop, which indicates 2,700,000 bushels of apples to be harvested. With favorable weather 24 per cent of the corn will be safe from frost September 20, 47 per cent on September 30, and 75 per cent on October 15. Preliminary reports indicate average yield of winter wheat to be 23 bushels; spring wheat, 18 bushels, oats, 42 bushels; barley 33 bushels, rye, 19 bushels, timothy seed, 3 7 bushels per acre.

LEMARS—The business men of LeMars have subscribed several hundred dollars towards a fall festival, to be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. A large number of attractions have been secured, and everything will be free except baseball games. A baseball tournament will be held on the same dates.

MISSOURI VALLEY—Directors of the Harrison county fair and citizens of Missouri Valley, are planning great things for the "Home Coming" and county fair to be held here September 13 to 18. Aeroplane flights, racing, street parades, balloon ascensions, electric displays, band concerts and extensive agricultural exhibits are among the attractions assured. T M Gilmore is chairman of the general committee, L. R. Pike, secretary; R. C. Lathman, treasurer.

LEMARS—The members of the First Baptist church in this city have extended a call to Rev. George R. Lewis, of Rochester, N. Y., to become pastor of the local church, and it is understood he will accept.

OFFICERS GET TRACE OF STOLEN AUTOS IN SOUTHERN MINNESOTA

Evidence Points to Organized Gang of Bandits Working Profitable Line.

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 9.—According to reports reaching here, Fillmore county, Minnesota, and reaching down into Winneshiek and Allamakee counties, in Iowa, is an area well "peppered" with stolen automobiles. The distributing points seem to have been Wycoff and Preston. Sheriff Marsh, of this county, has just recovered four automobiles in that locality, two of them stolen last October and two of them the last week of August. Two men implicated in some of these transactions are in the Cerro Gordo county jail, and tomorrow will enter a plea of guilty to a county attorney's indictment and receive sentence by Judge Kelley.

It is not thought that these two men—F. W. Kehr and Clarence Hunt—are alone implicated. Doubtless other thieves have been running machines into that locality. Of the five cars stolen in and around Mason City during the last year, all have been recovered with the exception of one Haynes car, the property of Mr. Hubbard.

A garage firm at Wycoff, Holetz & Olson, has been the purchaser of the four automobiles so far recovered. In a statement they made to Sheriff Marsh they said that they purchased the cars from F. W. Kehr. They stated that they were a little suspicious and asked him how he got so many cars to sell. Kehr told them that he represented a Mason City land company and they took automobiles in exchange for some of the land sold and he represented the concern in disposing of these automobiles.

For a Jeffrey car that had only been out of the shop six weeks Kehr got $400 in cash and a new Metz car. Holetz & Olson had sold all the cars they had bought of Kehr and Sheriff Marsh had their assistance in locating them. They had been mostly sold to retired farmers and had not been injured in the least.

An Overland car had been stolen from R. L. Potter; a Jeffries from J. F. Kuppinger; a Reo from Earnest Watts and a Cadillac from John Claus. R. L. Potter had his car insured and several months ago the company carrying the insurance paid him $700. The car is now the property of the insurance company.

IOWA PROFESSORS PATENT READING DEVICE FOR BLIND

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 9.—A "mechanical eye," which enables the totally blind to read an ordinary magazine or newspaper with greater facility than is possible with the raised letter code, has just been patented by professors in the physics department of the State University of Iowa. The invention, the outgrowth of over three years of experiment, is called the crystal optiphone, and is based on the transferral of variations in illumination into variations in sound, thus turning the print of a page into sound for the blind reader. Professor Brown, its inventor, has called it the crystal optiphone because it is only through the use of the recently discovered crystals of selenium that the light impressions from the printed page are transformed into sound impressions for the blind reader.

The high sensibility of these isolated crystals to light is the key to the success of the invention. By the transmission of light along the crystal, the sensibility is increased much in the same way as a nervous impulse is transmitted along a nerve, yet farther increased by meeting the crystal under pressure.

A small boxlike structure, containing the selenium eye, is placed on the printed page and passed along a line of reading matter. The variations in the forms of the letters causes variations in the intensity of the light, reflected to the crystals from the printed page, with a resultant varying in the current running through the crystals to the part of the apparatus which transfers these current changes into sound.

WOMAN AND CHILDREN STRUCK BY STREET CAR

Colfax, Ia., Sept. 9.—Mrs. J. R. Compton, of Valley Junction, and her three children were struck by a street car and injured here this afternoon.

They were walking across a trestle a quarter of a mile west of here on the car line which runs from the city to the Hotel Colfax, when they were struck. The car was descending a rather steep grade; the brakes are said to have refused to work and the car crashed into them.

The most seriously hurt are Ruth Compton, whose right shoulder and left hip are dislocated; Lena, who received three bad wounds in the head and whose left arm was badly crushed, and Ellwood, whose head was cut and right hand broken in several places. Mrs. Compton received a bad muscle wound in the left arm.

L. L. TREAT, AGED PIONEER, DIES AT WEBSTER CITY

Webster City, Ia., Sept. 9.—L. L. Treat, a resident of this city since 1860, aged 93 years, and one of the founders of the town, died last night of paralysis. He was allied with banking interests and had been a partner of Kendall Young, an early pioneer, who left his entire estate of $350,000 to Webster City for a library and endowment.

SERIOUS AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR COUNCIL BLUFFS

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept. 9.—G. C. Plumer was killed, his wife and William Lewis were injured, severely, while other members of an automobile party were slightly hurt in an accident six and one-half miles south of Council Bluffs. There were eight in the car. They were Mr. and Mrs. Plumer and three daughters; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis and one child, and Miss Edith Putnam. The Plumer and Lewis families reside in what is known as the Plumer settlement, five miles south of here, and Miss Putnam lives in this city. The party was near the Plumer home when the fatal accident occurred.

COUNCIL BLUFFS GIRL KILLS SELF WITH GAS

Council Bluffs, Sept. 7.—Miss Hulda Sorensen, aged 19, committed suicide at the home of her sister, Mrs. Henry Thramm, of this city, and nearly caused the death of her sister's baby. Miss Sorensen closed openings in one of the rooms and turned on the gas which caused her death, and penetrating an upper room where the baby was sleeping, rendered it unconscious. The family returned just in time to save the child. The cause of the girl's suicide has not been disclosed.

Washington Still Hopeful That Vienna Government Will Not Force This Nation to Take Initiative, Though No Word Has Come From There to Indicate How Request Will Be Received—Dumba Said to Anticipate That He Will Be Upheld, In Which Case Break Inevitably Would Result.

ARABIC NOTE REOPENS SUBMARINE QUESTION

Certain Circles Express Belief That Von Bernstorff's Assurances Were Part of Plot to Trick Uncle Sam, Thereby Shifting Issue to New Basis—Lansing Admits Decision Has Been Reached, But Refuses to Intimate What Course Will Be Pursued—Archibald Innocent, He Says.

Washington, Sept. 13.—In the tangled skein of American diplomatic relations with Germany and Austria optimism is based chiefly upon hope. President Wilson, about whom centers the intricate webs of diplomacy has said no word nor given any intimation to indicate his state of mind.

No word has come from Austria to indicate how the demand for the recall of Ambassador Dumba has been received. The belief is growing here that Austria will not permit a break over the Dumba incident On the other hand Austro-Hungarian diplomatic circles express the belief that the Vienna government will stand pat, forcing the United States to take the initiative. Ambassador Dumba is said to expect his government to back him up.

Dumba Expects Backing.

Dumba is said to anticipate that in event his government upholds his conduct, American Ambassador Frederick C. Penfield will be handed his passports. In that event Germany, it is said, probably would follow the example of her ally and expel American Ambassador Gerard.

The failure of Germany to give full measure of satisfaction for the sinking of the liner Arabic with the loss of American lives, has renewed the strain in the German-American relations. Some suspect von Bernstorff's assurances were part of a scheme to trick the United States; others are urging that the difference in facts should be submitted to The Hague for arbitration.

Silent About Policy.

Secretary Lansing expressed the view that the United States was now facing the question of whether it is willing to let a court of arbitration decide if the submarine commander was justified in his action. The court, it is understood, would not be expected to touch the general subject of the legality of submarine warfare.

Mr. Lansing refused to comment on the attitude of the United States or its possible future action in regard to the offer. It was admitted today, however, that after sifting the evidence submitted in the affidavits by passengers and officers of the Arabic, a conclusion had been reached, but is not being disclosed. Secretary Lansing said there was no evidence before him to indicate that anyone on board the Arabic had seen a submarine before the sinking of the ship.

Two Envoys Must Go.

If the American government cancels the exequator of Consul von Nuber, that will raise no diplomatic issue as he has no diplomatic status.

Should Captain von Papen, German military attache, be found to have made insulting remarks in a letter about American officials in addition to conspiring with Dumba, he may be handed his passports without ceremony. This would be more drastic than asking his recall.

Government Is Hopeful.

The administration emphatically insists that its action in requesting the recall of Dr. Dumba does not and cannot furnish a reason to Austria-Hungary for precipitating unfriendly relations, much less war.

It closes its note to the Vienna government with the assurance that this government "sincerely desires to continue the cordial and friendly relations which exist between the United States and Austria-Hungary."

In the face of the strong action taken in the case of Dr. Dumba, Germany is expected to be brought to a realization of the fact that the United States means business in its demands that the torpedoing of passenger liners and cargo boats, except in accordance with the principles of humanity and international law, must cease.

Notice to All Envoys.

A precedent has been established, which means but one thing—that is, that every foreign envoy must confine himself strictly to his recognized duties, else he will be declared persona non grata.

As one official said today. "All other ambassadors are now upon notice that this government will not tolerate attempts to interfere with industries held by the United States to be legitimate."

Some of the president's advisers wished to avoid a controversy. Until the last moment they had believed they had convinced Mr. Wilson as to the desirability of merely requesting Vienna to recall Dr. Dumba, without giving any reason therefor.

But the president felt that that would not be sufficient, that in this matter he was dealing not only with Dr. Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador, but with the ambassadors of other nations.

Wilson Ignored Pacifists.

He wanted them to understand that swift punishment would follow the discovery of any attempt by them to shut down American industries. In this connection attention is called to the language used in stating one of the two reasons given for requesting the recall of Dr Dumba, as follows:

That it was his purpose and intent to conspire to cripple "legitimate industries of the people of the United States and to interrupt their legitimate trade."

Dumba Sharply Criticised.

The second reason set forth was the following:

That he flagrantly violated diplomatic propriety in employing an American citizen protecteed by an American passport as a secret bearer of official dispatches through the lines of the enemy of Austria-Hungary.

There is another aspect of the request for the recall of Dr. Dumba which will not escape the attention of Germany and Austria-Hungary.

Those two countries must realize now, if they have not relalized it before, that Presirent Wilson is irrevocably committed to the historic principle that American citizens can lawfully manufacture and sell munitions of war to the belligerents.

Blow at Arms Propaganda.

If this action in the case of Dr. Dumba does not spell the death knell of the propaganda on this subject in the United States the administration believes that it will at least deprive it of effectiveness.

It had been expected that the German-Americans would endeavor to force congress to pass a bill imposing an embargo on munitions of war.

It now is certain that even if they should be successful President Wilson will veto such a measure.

MEXICANS LEAVE HOMES IN TEXAS

About 2,000 Have Fled Across Border, Leaving Crops and Property—Lives Are Not Safe.

Brownsville, Tex., Sept. 13.—About 2,000 Mexicans have left this section for Mexico, according to figures obtained here today. At one ranch near Sebastian, Tex., all four Mexican tenant families have left, leaving their crops unharvested Other Mexicans, who own land have abandoned everything except household goods in their haste to get back into Mexico. A large portion of these are what is termed here as "good Mexicans." In some cases American owners of land they had worked are arranging to give the Mexicans a share of the crops which would have been due had the tenants remained, but even making these arrangements is difficult because the Mexicans refuse to cross the river even for an hour's business interview.

The Mexicans who have fled to Mexico have not gone alone on account of the rigid cleanup of bad characters made by American peace officers, but also in fear of bad men and revolutionists among their own people on the American side.

LAUDS PRESIDENT FOR DUMBA STAND

British Press Also Anticipates Break In German-American Relations Over Arabic Affair.

London, Sept. 13.—The request for the recall of Dr Dumba, the Austrian ambassador to the United States, and Germany's note to the American government, concerning the sinking of the White Star line steamer, Arabic, are the principal topics of comment in the London morning newspapers.

President Wilson's decision with regard to Dr Dumba is approved by the newspapers as a "much needed lesson in behavior."

The Daily Graphic states that no power has been more rigid in dealing with the ambassadors of other countries than Austria.

The Daily Chronicle, in an editorial, says.

"President Wilson has been very patient, but, when he strikes, he strikes hard America would have been the laughing stock of the nations if she had tolerated the continued presence of Dr. Dumba. His dismissal may modify the exuberant activities of Count Von Bernstorff."

The Standard expresses the belief that President Wilson's prompt action "will show the Germans that he is not to be trifled with, however long suffering he may be.

"Had the Germans waited two days longer," says the Standard, "we suspect the Arabic note, with its patent mendacity, would have been couched in less arrogant terms."

BELLIGERENT TROOPS MENACE SWITZERLAND

Government Considers Problem of Calling Out More Men to Defend Border.

Basel, Switzerland, Sept. 11, (via Paris, Sept. 11 Delayed in transmission).—There has been a further concentration of belligerent troops near the Swiss boundaries. The government is considering the advisability of calling additional troops to the colors to safeguard the northwestern frontier.

New York Police Warn Wealthy Against Employment of Unknown Servants

New York, Sept 13 In murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Nichols last Wednesday night, by three robbers, who secured an unfaithful house servant into admitting them to her home has been taken by Inspector Faurot of the New York detective force as a text for a warning to the wealthy against lack of care in selecting their household retainers.

"There are any number of vagabonds at this minute employed in the homes of the high" the inspector said I want to take this opportunity to warn people of wealth particularly women never to permit their servants to see the jewels they own."

The police today virtually admitted that they had lost the trail of the three men wanted for the Nichols crime

WEST TERRORIZED BY INDUSTRIALISTS

I. W. W. Behind Incendiary Plots to Force Release of Two Members, Says Governor Johnson.

Sacramento, Cal., Sept 13—Gov Hiram M Johnson announced in a formal statement here today that Industrial Workers of the World and other persons had threatened wholesale devastation of the industries of California "and even worse," unless Richard Ford and Hermann Suhr, two members of the organization serving life sentence for murder, were pardoned by a certain date, which has passed

Admitting that a survey of the entire case might justify a mitigation of the sentence imposed, the governor declares.

"So long, in behalf of these men, the threats of injury and sabotage continue, so long as the preachment extinue, so long as the preachment extinue, so long as incendiarism is attempted, I will neither listen to appeals for executive clemency, in behalf of Ford and Suhr, nor in any fashion consider the shortening of their terms of imprisonment."

The statement came upon the heels of reports from the Sacramento, San Joaquin and Sonoma valleys in California, and from the hop fields of Oregon of widespread incendiarism and other mischief indicating, according to the authorities ,the existence of formulated plans.

Ford and Suhr were convicted of second degree murder for the killing of Robert I Manwell, district attorney of Yuba county, California, in August, 1913, in the course of rioting at hop fields near Wheatland which started over the demands for more adequate and sanitary conditions, better pay, and altered conditions of work When an automobile load of peace officers approached the fields, Ford urged the crowd not to permit him to be taken and a constable and the sheriff were beaten insensible and the district attorney, whose only remark had been of a pacific character, was shot dead The sheriff died a year or so later, never having recovered, it was stated, from his beating. Two hop pickers were killed and two were wounded.

GETS PRISON TERM.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 11—Charles A. Elder, former president of the Los Angeles Investment company, convicted July 30 last of having used the mails to defraud investors in stock, was sentenced today in the United States district court to 15 months in San Quentin prison and to pay a fine of $5,000. W. D. Deeble and George M Rorby, associates of Elder, were sentenced to pay fines of $5,000 and serve 13 months each in San Quentin

BAN ON GERMAN GOODS.

Melbourne, Australia, Sept 11, (via London).—The entire membership of the house of representatives of the federal parliament, the legislative body of the commonwealth of Australia, has pledged itself "never again to purchase German goods."

DUMBA DEMAND IS HELD UNFRIENDLY

Berlin Newspapers Defend Austrian Envoy—Say America Shows Lack of Good Will.

Berlin Sept 13 (via London)—The report that the United States had requested the recall of Ambassador Dumba was received too late for general comment in Saturday morning's Berlin newspapers only the Morgenpost and the Vossische Zeitung referring editorially to the report The former says

"As long as only a dispatch from British sources is at hand, we will reserve our judgment Should America really demand the recall of the ambassador only because he in the course of doing his duty warned his countrymen against treason to the Fatherland, it would afford new proof of the attitude which may hardly be considered as benevolent, that America has taken towards us from the beginning."

The Vossische Zeitung says

"It does not seem to point to pronounced good will on the part of the American government. The ambassador only did his duty when he called the attention of subjects of the monarchy employed in munitions factories working for the allies to the criminal act of their conduct under the laws of their fatherland

"We learn," the Vossische Zeitung adds "That printed sheets, demanding the destruction of American munitions factories have occasionally been inserted secretly in German newspapers sent to America Propaganda of this sort is as criminal as it is silly It cannot be described otherwise than as grave misconduct"

CONVICTED RUSTLER NOW SEEKS REVENGE

Attacked Chief Witness, After Finishing Term, and Has Designs on Judge.

Bonesteel, S. D. Sept 13—"I'll get you all after by term expires," exclaimed J A Gregory, convicted in circuit court here three years ago of horse stealing. He was released from prison a few weeks ago and in keeping with his threat, returned to this county He appeared at Gregory and made inquiries for Frank Flannagan, a liveryman, who was the principal witness against him Flannagan happened to be at Iona, in Lyman county, that day attending a ball game. Gregory had come from Mitchell in an auto, driven by Tom Berry

Without delay he ordered Berry to drive him to Iona, where he found Flannagan, whom he at once approached in a threatening manner. Flannagan "ducked" through the crowd, jumped into a waiting auto and made a run for safety. Gregory made a move as though to draw a gun but was restrained by the crowd from following

Having lost Flannagan Gregory instructed Berry to drive him to Oacoma, where it is supposed he intended to attack Judge Williamson A telephone message apprised the judge of the situation and preparations were made to give him a warm reception. It is thought he suspected word had gone ahead and so changed his plans.

Gregory has not been heard of since then, but fears are entertained that he will later attempt to carry out his threat of vengeance against the judge, jurors and witnesses. Gregory has a bad record, having served terms in both Nebraska and Iowa.

Suspect German Plot To Trick Uncle Sam on U-Boat Question

The suspicion is somewhat freely voiced that its is the intention of the German navy to have the submarine commander "suspect" he is to be attacked in every case where he finds an opportunity to place a torpedo against the ribs of a British liner. In other words, the more bellicose opinion here accuses the Germans of intent to "double cross" the United States on the submarine issue.

Whether President Wilson holds this opinion is not to be learned at this time. The only statement which has been made bearing anything like the stamp of first hand origin at the White House is to the effect that when the president has made up his mind as to the case he will act with decision and without delay.

Regard Excuse as Poor.

Intense indignation is manifested in administration circles at Germany's excuse for torpedoing the Arabic.

To claim that the liner was preparing to attack the submarine when the torpedo hit the ship at right angles and from 90 to 100 feet from the stern is to claim, the administration holds, what what is obviously false.

If the torpedo had hit the Arabic in the bow or anywhere forward, there might have been some shadow of plausibility for the German statement. It is evident, according to the administration that the Arabic did not seek to ram the submarine by backing.

On September 1, Count Von Bernstorff, in the name of his government, inferentially disavowed the sinking of the Arabic by asserting that the instructions not to sink liners "without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance," were decided on before the Arabic incident occurred.

The German Answer.

Germany now not only does not disavow the destruction of the Arabic, but defends it on the ground that the vessel sought to ram the submarine, the latter thus acting in accordance with the "new" policy.

The note regrets the loss of American life, refers to the instructions issued for the protection of liners and proposes that the questions of reparation and compensation for the Americans sacrificed be referred to The Hague.

The administration is in something of a quandary over the matter. It notified Germany that the destruction of another liner would constitute a "deliberately unfriendly act."

The torpedoing of the Arabic was the German answer to this declaration.

The German government was permitted to explain and now to defend the destruction of that vessel.

Overnight consideration of the note on the Arabic indicates a softening of views among one set of officials who are inclined to further negotiations with Germany. Their views cannot be stated as being President Wilson's, but their views will be urged on the president before he makes up his mind what to do.

Pacifists Would Arbitrate.

While they agree that Germany's reply is disappointing and unsatisfactory, they urge that the Arabic case has come down to questions of indemnity and of fact. The explanations offered by Germany for the sinking of the White Star liner differ materially from the statements in the hands of President Wilson and Secretary Lansing. Those officials who favor further negotiation contend that a proper way to determine which set of facts is correct is to let the case go to The Hague, where the question of indemnity could be arbitrated without endangering the principles for which the United States has contended as governing submarine warfare.

There were indications in official quarters today that the United States had received more unofficial intimations that the German government had actually finally accepted the principle that unarmed merchantment should not be attacked without warning unless they attempted to escape or resisted capture.

The new note the United States will send to Berlin will be delayed until the second note from Germany now on its way has been received. It probably will point out for one thing that the mere assumption by a submarine commander that his ship is about to be attacked cannot be accepted as justification for torpedoing an unresisting merchantman.

Such a stand by the United States is not expected to lead to complication. Officials consider that the future depends on Berlin.

RUTH SENDS WORD

"I do wish Ruth had left her face lotion at home, or that I knew how to prepare it," Ruth's sister was saying to her friend.

"Why! Does she make it herself?" the friend asked, much surprised.

"She certainly does, and I'm going to write her this very minute and ask her how she does it."

In two days Ruth's answer came, reading: "Let a little oatmeal, say a couple of tablespoonfuls, boil in water for several hours. When cool, pour off the liquid and add the juice of one lemon; also a tablespoonful of pure alcohol.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

Saffron is obtained from the dried flowers of the saffron crocus It is used as a coloring matter for some articles of food and medicine. The earlier Romans and Greeks used it both as a dye for cloth and a perfume. In the time of the Cæsars there was a Roman law which made it a crime punishable by death to adulterate saffron. The plant is now cultivated in Persia, Afghanistan, southern Europe and England.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing," and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just bottle it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork, brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains; for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

PUT FROSTED CORN INTO SILO

Most Feed Value Is Thus Procured From Corn Injured by the Frost

Hundreds of farmers are facing the problem of the best method of handling corn which has been injured by the frost. Many inquiries have been received the past week asking just this question.

"Put it in the silo," says Prof W H. Pew of the animal husbandry department.

In cases where corn has been seriously injured by frost at the present stage of maturity, it will necessarily be soft. No doubt some of the corn which has been injured is hardly in the dough stage. If the leaves are all dried by the frost, it may be necessary to add water through the blower or run it into the silo through a hose.

If there is no silo on the farm, this corn could be fee to good advantage now to cattle that are to be marketed this fall. This method is to be preferred to cutting and shocking and feeding out during the winter.

In most cases, even yet, it would pay to put up a silo to get the most feed value out of the corn.

Hogs should be turned into the corn field to clean up all ears broken off. In this way loss will be brought to a minimum.

ANCIENT TEMPLES

Mighty Structures of Old Dwarfed by Modern Skyscrapers.

TOWER OF BABEL A MIDGET.

It Would Not Reach Two-thirds of the Way Up to the Top of the Eiffel Tower, That Sways 984 Feet In the Air. Big Buildings and the Pyramids.

It has long been the popular impression that the modern effort to pierce the clouds with skyscrapers is but a feeble imitation of the work of those ancient sons of Noah whose memory is perpetuated in the Bible. Reading in the eleventh chapter of Genesis, where it tells of the people attempting to erect the Tower of Babel, "whose top may reach unto heaven," it strikes one that they must have gone farther toward realizing their ambition than we of today may ever hope to do.

But as a matter of fact when the Lord halted building operations by confounding the workers' language and scattering them broadcast over the earth the summit of the tower was but one stade, or 606 feet 9 inches, from the level of the plain.

The Ziggurrat, or temple tower of Babylon, is described by Herodotus as having eight stages, each somewhat narrower than the one directly beneath it. The top was reached by a gradually rising spiral ascent, and on the topmost tier was a shrine wherein the god Marduk was supposed to dwell. Diodorus says this shrine contained three colossal golden images—one of Bel, one of Beltis and the third of Rhea or Ishtar—together with two golden lions, two enormous silver serpents and a golden table forty feet long and fifteen feet wide.

The tower, as the Bible sets forth, was built of brick, with slime for mortar. This slime, it is believed, was natural asphaltum obtained from nearby springs. Ages after the building operations had been interrupted by the Maker's wrath Nebuchadnezzar undertook, with indifferent success, to restore the ruins to their former state.

The modern ruins of Babel were supposed to be represented by the great pile of Birs Nimroud, which stood in Borsippa, eight miles from the ancient city of Babylon. Its sides were from 375 to 643 feet long, and the edifice still rises to a height of 153 feet.

The next structures in point of antiquity are the pyramids of Egypt. These are the oldest and most mysterious of man's works still existing. But they are not really so tall, considered in the light of present day achievements. The greatest, known as the Great Pyramid of Cheops or Khufu, was originally 481 feet 4 inches high and 755 feet square at the base. The second—that of Chephren or Khafra—was 472 feet high and 706 feet wide. The third—that of Mycerinus or Menkaura—was never completed, but it stood, nevertheless, 215 feet high and 346 feet square at the base.

In all nearly seventy of these pyramids have been located, and, inasmuch as they all appear to have been royal sepulchers, it is the belief that the dynasties of the builders covered a period of at least a thousand years. The area of the Great Pyramid is more than thirteen acres—above twice as great as that of St. Peter's at Rome. The passages leading to the chambers containing the royal mummies defied detection for thousands of years, only to be torn open at last and their contents ruthlessly made away with.

Of modern edifices the tallest by far is the great Eiffel tower of Paris, whose steel webbed structure pierces the blue to a height of 984 feet. Then comes the Woolworth building in New York, the loftiest office building in the world, its fifty-five stories rising 750 feet into the air. The height of others is: Metropolitan Life building, New York, fifty stories, 700 feet 3 inches; Singer building, New York, forty-one stories, 612 feet 1 inch; Washington monument, Washington, 555 feet; Cologne cathedral spire, Cologne, Germany, 517 feet; Rouen cathedral spire, Rouen, France, 492 feet; cupola of St. Peter's, Rome, 469 feet; St. Paul's, London, 364 feet.

The loftiest obelisks ever constructed are those mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, which rose 158 feet and were eleven feet thick at the base and seven feet thick at the top. One of the world's largest domes is that of the Roman Pantheon, 142 feet in diameter and 143 feet high.

The ancient peoples were great for their methods of embalming, for their art, their literature, their general culture. But when it comes to building skyscrapers they will have to give way to the builders of the Eiffel tower and the Woolworth building, who have pierced the clouds without their language being confounded in the slightest.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Death by the Bowstring.

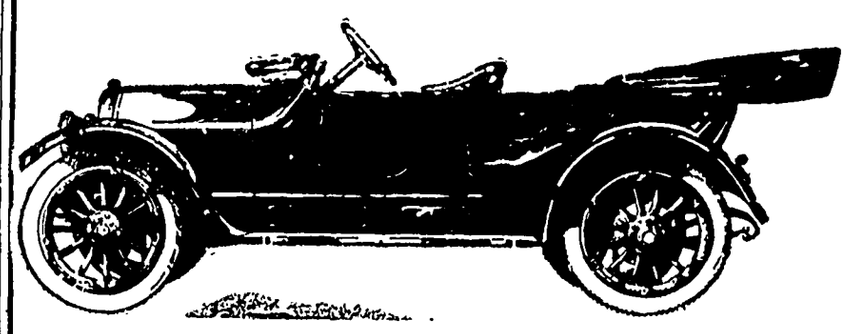
THE OVERLAND LEADS



Five-Passenger Touring Car--Model 83
$750. f.o.b. Toledo

Advantages—For Your Wife

Many a car that looks good from a superficial examination is often found to be very incomplete and lacking in many conveniences, after it has been purchased.

Nowadays all cars run but some run with considerable less bother than others.

In this respect the Overland has many desirable advantages---advantages that will appeal particularly to your wife.

All electric control buttons are located on the steering column---within natural reach. The operation of these buttons start, stop and light the car. Nothing could be simpler.

The clutch and brake pedals are adjustable to any angle. Another convenience.

Also, they "give" with practically no effort. One does not have to strain in order to apply the brake or disengage the clutch.

The steering wheel is large and turns very easily. Strength is not a bit necessary. A young girl can handle it.

The shifting levers are handy and shift readily. They are placed so that they in no way interfere with either the driver or other occupant of the front seat.

All storm curtains can be put on in a few minutes, without getting out of the car, They are arranged so that they almost fall in place.

These few things are indicative of Overland comforts and conveniences. Your wife will appreciate them.

Compared with other popular priced cars, the Overland has many decided advantages.

And so they waited until the warmth was in them all, until the heart beats were strong and free.

At last Mr. Blagden spoke. His voice was low and full of gentleness.

"Of course, I can't think of asking you to leave a cheery, delightful nest like this for that cold, barren place I call home" he said wistfully "It's not to be thought of. We—your aunt and I—were selfish as to hope you might come back if I were eloquent enough to— But, of course, we couldn't have known how nicely you are situated here. This little room is more eloquent than I could ever hope to be. It is an argument that I cannot meet." His bony fingers suddenly gripped the arms of the chair. "But, God help me! I can't begin to tell you how bleak and cold and dead our rooms are—how great the contrast. Ah, my children, you have all the light. We have none. Your Aunt Rena is—" Again he stopped short, visibly moved.

They instinctively felt that their aunt was in even greater anguish than the ambassador, who found it so difficult to state his mission in plain terms.

"Is Aunt Rena ill?" asked Eric, with the desire to make it easy for him to go on.

"If she is ill—if she wants us, Uncle Horace, we will go to her at once," added Mary, after a quick look into her brother's eyes.

Horace's face brightened. "You will?" he cried eagerly. "It is very good of you—very. I can't tell you how much good it will do her to—to see you again. Of course—" he hesitated once more—"of course, her heart is set on having you back there to—to stay."

Another protracted period of silence. Horace appeared to be reading their thoughts, for it was he who broke the silence.

"She is ill," he broke out despairingly. "Not physically ill, but mentally. Her soul is sick. She—she seems worse tonight than ever before. A dream—a horrid dream this afternoon has upset her terribly. She refuses to go to bed tonight, fearing a repetition. I am unnerved. I couldn't endure it any longer. Your hearts would be touched if you could see her tonight. All evening long she has been wondering if you will ever come back. She knows that Chetwynd is dead. You see, she—"

Eric started. "She knows? Then—"

"It came to her in the dream. And it was so very real as she describes it," Horace arose stiffly. "I do not feel it is right for me to ask you to come with me now, but—but—"

"We'll go, Uncle Horace," said Mary resolutely. She knew that the decision rested with her.

Five minutes later, the three of them went forth into the night, huddled close together to fight the wind with Mary in the center. The clock in the courthouse struck the hour of 10.

"I will tell you of the dream when we reach the house," Mr. Blagden had said as they left the porch of the Verner cottage.

CHAPTER XVIII

AFTER THE SERMON

There was a vague, almost shadowy light in the parlor windows. A reflected glow from the dim old porch lamp that hung above the front steps of the "giant's castle" threw the curtained windows into dull relief.

As the hurrying trio came up the gravel walk their gaze was centered on one of these windows, held by a common anxiety. Not one, but all of them knew that a long used chair stood close beside this particular window.

They were nearing the steps when one of the rigid curtains moved ever so slightly, and yet distinctly. It parted from its mate an inch or two and then became motionless once more. The effect was weird, uncanny, almost ghostly. Someone sat behind this curtain watching their approach, an unseen hand held the curtains apart, a pair of wistful eyes peered out of the loneliness that lay in the room behind.

Horace Blagden sighed audibly.

Once inside the door, he checked his companions with a whispered word and the raising of a finger to his lips. They stood there for a moment, listening.

"Go into the library" said he, in a lowered voice. "I think your aunt is in the parlor."

He crossed the hall and softly opened the door, pausing an instant before entering. As the door closed behind him, Eric and Mary turned toward the library, where a light gleamed through the transom.

"You will not tell them tonight?" whispered Mary, clutching his arm.

"No," he replied without hesitation, "I haven't the heart. Why, he seems happy—actually happy."

They waited in the old, familiar room, curiously awed by its Blagdenesque primness after their own rather unconventional disorder. Mary removed her hat and laid it on the table with her gossamer and gloves. It was an inspired act on her part, as subsequent events proved.

Mr. Blagden came in a few minutes later, holding open the door that his wife might pass before him. There was a contented smile on his thin lips.

"There, my dear," he said gently, waving his hand in the direction of the two Midthornes. "I am sure you can't call those fine flesh and blood creatures dream fancies. They are very real, and won't disappear before morning, as you say." To Eric and Mary: "Your aunt is positive she is only dreaming you are here."

The young people sprang forward, each grasping a slim white hand. Mary impulsively threw an arm about her aunt's shoulders and drew the thin, shrinking figure close to her strong, eager body. Then she kissed the tremulous lips of the woman who had done nothing in her life but hurt her.

"She's come to stay, Aunt Rena," said Eric.

Mrs. Blagden withdrew her hand from Eric's and slowly, gently passed it over the cheek of the girl. Her eyes were soft and imploring.

"Oh, my dear, dear Mary," she murmured, "are you quite sure that you meant to kiss me like that? Do you really mean to——"

Mary kissed her again. "I do mean it, Aunt Rena, I do mean it."

"I have been very unkind, very unjust to you," said Mrs. Blagden, still searching the girl's face with wondering eyes.

"I can't forget, Aunt Rena," said Mary, quite simply. She did not commit the error of trying to appear definitely reconciled.

"I am sorry for all that I may have done, my dear," said her aunt humbly. "I can say no more. But—but I do love you! I do want you!"

It was a wail from the very bottom of a hungry, unhappy soul—a soul that still belonged to the blithe, untrammelled Rena Van Dykeman of another day, and that now said goodby forever to its Corinth environment.

"And you, too, Eric," she went on, more calmly. She eyed him fondly, and patted his arm. "You are my son now. I want a son. I need a son. Your uncle needs you."

"I do, indeed," spoke up Mr. Blagden, unsteadily. "Now, my dear, don't you think you'd better retire? You are very tired. It has been a hard day for you."

"It was very thoughtful of you, Mary, to take off your hat before I came in," said Mrs. Blagden irrelevantly, even as she laid her hand on her husband's arm. "It made it so easy for me. You will forgive me if I say good night now. Good night, Eric. You will find your rooms just as you left them. Martha has put out your things—some that you forgot to take away with you. I've kept them in my bureau since—Yes, yes, Horace, I am coming. Good night, Mary. I am so glad you have come back to us. Martha will call you as usual in the morning."

In the doorway, Horace turned to speak to the deeply moved young man and woman.

"Will you be good enough to wait here for a little while? I am coming down to close up the house." There was something significant in the way he put it. They were wet and uncomfortable, yet they would not have thought of going upstairs before their uncle laid bare the conditions which had sent him out into the night so bravely.

The change in Horace's nature was most strikingly illustrated by the next remark that fell from his lips.

"Oh, dear me, I almost forgot that you are wet and cold. Come upstairs to your rooms. Martha will get out dry stockings and slippers for you. And she shall make mustard baths for your feet before you go to bed. And hot lemonades."

When the Midthornes came downstairs later on, after changing a part of their apparel, they were amazed to find Horace Blagden on his knees before the fireplace, clumsily starting a fire in the grate. His lack of experience was evident, his embarrassment undisguised. Eric went to his assistance.

Presently they were seated before the snapping coals.

"Your aunt's dream," said Mr. Blagden, "was a most distressing one. It was so real that she can't get it out of her mind that we are to hear bad news of Chetwynd. You see, I mention his name once more. I do so because I am confident that he is not in the land of the living, Adam Carr to the contrary. Not a day passes that I do not expect to hear through that excellent bloodhound that my son has come to his death in some far off land and that the chase has ended."

"But Aunt Rena's dream, please," said Mary, with a quick glance at Eric's twitching face.

Horace moistened his dry lips with his tongue. "She was taking her nap this afternoon, as usual. A vision came to her. It was more than a dream. In this vision there appeared a series of vast cliffs and precipices, reaching so high in the sky that all the world seemed to lie below them. Far below, at the base of these dreadful cliffs, was the sea—miles and miles below, she declares. The breakers came rushing up in the shape of gigantic hands and arms, all of them reaching upward in the effort to clamber to the top of the sheer walls of stone that touched the sky.

"She came out upon the loftiest of all these cliffs and sat down to rest, with her tired feet hanging over the ledge. The great arms and writhing fingers redoubled their efforts. They climber higher and higher, but they could not reach her feet. A huge, black-lipped mouth opened and closed, showing its teeth, in the sea below—a vast maw that craved her as with an appetite that knew no pity. As she sat there, looking wearily about, almost at the gates of heaven, another figure appeared on the cliff not far away. It was Chetwynd. He approached to the very edge, and stood looking out over space, his hands on a flimsy railing she had not noticed before. She cried out to him and would have risen to go to him but for that strange paralysis that one experiences in dreams."

He paused to clear his throat. Eric drew a long, deep breath and relaxed his grip on the arm of the chair.

"Then she tried to call out to him, but no sound above a whisper could she force from her lips. Another figure came creeping up from behind, the figure of a man whose face she could not see. This man stole upon Chetwynd and struck him a violent blow, sending him through the rail and over the—"

Eric leaped to his feet, a cry of horror on his lips. Then, to the utter amazement of his uncle, he rushed from the room.

Mr. Blagden turned to Mary in great distress.

"Dear me," he said; "dear me! What have I said? I—where are you going, Mary?"

"To Eric," she cried in great agitation. A moment later, Horace Blakden sat alone in his library, staring at the door, vastly perplexed, and with a great apprehension growing up in his heart.

He heard the rush of swift footsteps in the hall upstairs, the slamming of a door, and then no other sound save the merry crackle of the coals.

Two days went slowly by. They brought forth an early apology from Eric for his rude behavior in the library, but no explanation. He had decided to wait for the last word from Adam Carr. Not that he lacked the courage or the will to deliver his secret, but that newly made conditions raised obstacles that could not be surmounted. First of all, the pathetic devotion of his uncle and aunt. They called him their son. Then, the innate gentleness of his own nature, which shrank from the desire to rob them of their new estate—a strange wealth of contentment and resignation. To tell them now would be to destroy the only joy left in life for them. Again the curious sense of loyalty to Adam Carr.

He lost no time in looking up John Payson, to whom an explanation was due, and a plea for Mary's sake. Payson heard him through—a nervous disconnected statement it was—and considerately assured him that he not only understood the situation, but that he would not have had Mary do otherwise than she had done.

"Tell her, Eric," he said, "that I love her more than ever. I can wait until she is ready to send for me. Brace up, old fellow, I understand."

But, though he said it fairly enough, he did not understand. He was sorely puzzled.

No word came from Adam Carr. Sunday was at hand. The Saturday Courier had announced the program for the services at the First Congregational church. There was to be a solo in the morning by the popular Miss Smith, with flute and 'cello obligato. More wonderful still, a 'cello solo during the "collection" by the famous Professor Parker, of Boston. In the evening a song service, with a short sermon by the minister, the Rev. Mr. King.

And all this in the First Congregational church of Corinth. Horace Blagden's church!

At 10:30 o'clock Mr. Blagdon put on his tall hat, took up his gold headed cane and announced to the two Midthornes that it was time to be off to church. Mrs. Blagden was not up to it, so they were leaving her behind.

"The bell hasn't rung yet, Uncle Horace," observed Eric, who had been waiting for the resounding peals of that well known summoner of the faithful.

"Mr. King's orders, my dear boy," said Horace as calmly as if the silencing of that venerable and never failing bell was the most trivial thing in the world. He pondered a moment and then added, with a queer little shake of his head. "Mr. King is really a human sort of a Christian. A sensible one, I might say. Come along, please. We can't afford to be late after what he said at the board meeting last week."

He seemed nervous and quite anxious to be off.

"You see, my dears, there's a very sick child across the street from the church. Abscesses in the ears, I understand. They've got tan bark along the entire block. Last week I attended to having the heavy teaming stopped on that part of the street. The child's mother informed Mr. King that the frightful clanging of the church bell almost set the little girl wild with pain. So"—here he took a long breath—"Mr. King promised her that—er, ahem—it should not ring until the little sufferer was quite fully recovered. Most unusual. Most extraordinary. The bell hasn't missed a service, morning or night, in 60 years."

"Good for Mr. King," cried Mary. "He is the right kind of a Christian. I don't see why the foolish old thing has to ring, anyway."

Mr. Blagden looked hurt. "Really, Mary, that isn't just the proper—" He caught himself up with one of his rare smiles, albeit was rather a shame faced effort. "Mr. King did not put it in just that way, my dear, but he was quite convincing and—er, ahem—very positive. He said that if the members of the First Congregational church did not know the hours for service it was high time they were learning them. It isn't necessary to ring a bell in order to get the people to the theater on time, said he, so why bring them to church in that way. Really, he was quite emphatic about it. Somehow, we agreed with him. I believe it is his intention to make note of the tardy ones today, for—er, ahem—missionary purposes, as he put it to the board."

Mr. Blagden looked at his watch, and accelerated his speed quite noticeably. Eric and Mary could scarcely credit their senses. Truly, a wonderful thing had happened in Corinth. A new gospel had supplanted the old. A rock-bound, half-dead spirituality had been shaken into life by a process of enlightenment that was positively bewildering. An up to date minister, with an up to date gospel had completely upset the religious calculations of 150 years, and Corinth was surviving the shock!

Eric could not help wondering how long it would be before one of the great, progressive and covetous metropolitan congregations would extend a call to this amazing Mr. King—and get him at a vastly increased salary, with perhaps a pension for his wife when he became too old to preach, or it got tired of him and wanted a change.

The new Congregationalism had at last forced its way into Corinth. It had taken many years. I venture the opinion that the First Congregational church did more toward proving the blindness of faith when it called Mr. King than anything that has been done in the name or the history of religion. A congregation so settled and steadfast in its ways could not have accomplished a transition so complete as this except by accident. Mr. King was truly an accident, quite as much of an accident as the stroke of lightning which never strikes twice in the same place. If anyone had told the trustees in advance that he was going to tweak tradition's nose until it slipped entirely out of joint, those excellent gentlemen, Horace Blagden included, would have preserved the tenets of the church so rigorously that the name of Mr. Percival King would never have been heard in Corinth. But they took him on faith, and they had been taking him on faith ever since, without a murmur of dissent.

He was the modern Congregationalist (God bless him!), and as strong as Samson when it came to shattering pillars. The old church fell down about their heads, without hurting anyone, and a new one went up in its place so swiftly that before the congregation knew what it was about it was reformed, rejuvenated, humanized. He was giving it something to think about, something to enjoy, something to grasp.

Concerning Cotton.

From the Chicago Journal.

Word comes from Europe that there is likely to be a decided rise in the price of long-fibered cotton. It is used for making wings of aeroplanes and the tires of automobiles—articles which are being built and worn out at quite unprecedented rate.

The best cotton for these purposes is said to be the American sea island variety, but the supply of this is small. Both in length and strength of fiber it stands at the head, but the available supply is small. Next comes the Egyptian cotton, but the demand for that in peaceful industry is very great, and the crop is said to be unsatisfactory. The only source of supply remaining is a variety of upland American cotton grown in the well watered bends of the Mississippi river, and known locally as "benders."

It looks as though our southern planters had better take stock of the cotton situation. They have had a practical monopoly of the world's main clothing and fiber material for more than a century, but there are many signs that the "sure thing" period of cotton planting is about over. It is nigh time to see if the quality as well as yield of the American crop cannot be improved before other lands or other materials drive us from our present position of supremacy.

A Wedding Washed Off.

From Tid Bits.

A short time ago a servant living in Yorkshire gave notice to leave her situation, informing her mistress that she was about to be married.

As the time drew near for leaving, she addressed her mistress thus:

"Please, mum, have you got a girl yet?"

"No, Bridget. Why do you ask?"

"Because, if you haven't, I should like to stay."

"Why, I thought you were going to marry the sweep!"

"Oh, yes, mum," replied Bridget, hesitatingly. "But when I saw him after 'is face was washed I felt I could not love 'im."

Queen Mary of England prefers China tea and nearly always drinks it when she can obtain it.

CRACK INFANTRY OF ITALIAN ARMY FIGHTING IN THE CAR

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

Photo shows a detachment of Bersaglieri, the crack infantry of the Italian army, battling at the outsi of a forest in the Carso region. They had been hiding in the thickets seen at the left of the picture and upon approach of the Austrians came out to meet them. The men are prepared with their bayonets in case of charge by the enemy.

THE ECONOMY OF RULES.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It is economical to have rules, and it is economy to obey them.

A tremendous number of accidents result from the breaking of rules. Sometimes the rules are not laws, laid down in black and white and enforced by law, but they are rules, just the same. Many motor accidents come because of speeding, driving on the wrong side of the road, disobeying traffic regulations in the city streets. Many accidents to pedestrians occur because they don't stay on the sidewalks, and when they must cross the streets they don't do so at the crossings. Many fires start because inflammables are kept in dangerous places—gasoline is stored in the linen closet, when we know it should not, according to the terms of our lease, be bought in large quantities, or kerosene is used carelessly about a fire, in spite of cautions from the fire department.

So it goes. Many of the ills of mankind result from a disobeying of rules.

This attitude in adults is much like disobedience in children—and the results are much the same, for punishment in some form is very likely to come.

Now in every household there are certain rules, more or less well formulated. And they should be a help to contented family life. Unfortunately, for the housekeeper, punishment for the breaking of these rules does not always fall on those who break them. Too often it is the housekeeper or the servants who get the punishment.

Nevertheless, it is possible to formulate a set of household rules, and to drill one's family to obey them. Perhaps without actual punishment they can be made to believe that the most comfortable way of living is to observe the rules set down by the housekeeper. And to the housekeeper these rules can be made a means of saving time and energy and nerve force.

Think over every rule you announce before you speak of it. For a foolish rule, like a foolish law, breeds disrespect on the part of those who are asked to observe it.

There can be just rules about promptness at meals, about individual duties for each member of the household, about opening windows, about closing screen doors, about caring for the clothes and many other things. And each of these rules can be so worded that it will seem reasonable, and at the same time so thought out that it will bring relief to the one on whom the burden of housekeeping falls.

Planmaessig and Ausgeschlossen.

Hendrik Van Loon in the Century.

During the first four months of the war, two words dominated the German mind. The first was planmaessig, and the second was ausgeschlossen. Let me show you their meaning by a concrete example. You might say to your best German friend, "What a pity that you crossed through Belgium. You have the whole world against you. You lost two weeks of good time in your march against France. Why did you do it?" The answer would be the inevitable planmaessig or "according to program." The Germans would have liked to go any other way, but for 40 years the German general staff has decided upon this particular route. According to program, therefore, the Germans must violate the territory of their Belgian neighbors. It is regrettable, most regrettable, that the Belgians defended themselves and lost so terribly in men and cities, but it was all planmaessig, and that is an end to further discussion.

When you heard of this "according to program" conquest of the world, you might say: "My dear friend, remember that seven or eight nations are against you. Germany might lose, you know." In such case would come the invariable answer, "Ausgeschlossen," followed by a long dissertation upon German statistics of imports, wealth, banking resources, army reserves, gun superiority, and ending with the emphatic statement that a German defeat was absolutely impossible, and that any person who was half way intelligent and one third fair minded must see it. Therefore, please keep planmaessig and ausgeschlossen in your mind; they will prove the key to much that is otherwise difficult to understand.

Enjoyable Vacation.

In the Woman's Home Companion appears a page devoted to suggestions as to how to have a real vacation for little money. One woman tells as follows how she and her husband managed to have a vacation for themselves and six children on a very small sum of money:

"Father rigged out the long stout market wagon with a small cupboard on the back for food and cooking utensils, two mattresses with blankets and pillows in the bottom, tied a small tent, pails, etc., underneath, put hooks on the braces for raincoats and outside garments.

"We decided upon mountain air, and jogged leisurely along from village to village, buying supplies for man and beast as needed, camping at night in some obliging farmer's pasture lot. The younger babies and I slept on the mattresses in the wagon, the others occupied the tent.

"On Sundays we stopped near some village, all hands attending church in clothes clean but identical with those worn every day. Housekeeping duties were few. At the end of three weeks we had traveled 250 miles, and had had no need of the medicine case."

RUSSIANS' GREAT NEED NOW IN SMALL ARMS

That the repeated successes of the German invading forces on the Russian front are rapidly depleting the Russian supply of small arms, is evidenced in a letter received by Tony Chepakanus, 308 Fowler avenue, Greenville, in a letter received from his brother, Vladimir, who was in the czar's forces at Brest-Litovsk.

"The little father," as the emperor of all the Russias is affectionately termed by his people, is calling every man to the standards, and great numbers are being trained as quickly as the military machine can accomplish it. But there are not enough spare small arms to complete training, according to the letter received by the Sioux Cityans.

"A regiment will receive three days' training with rifles, and then it will be inactive for six days while two more regiments are receiving their training. During the idle time, the troops are being taken on long forced marches, sometimes making 26 versts in a day," declares the letter.

Concluding, the writer declares that there is no shortage of food to speak of, except on the front, where it is difficult to get commissary trains through without their falling into the hands of Prussian marauders. The czar's greatest peril will be the shortage of small arms, but there is no thought of peace until the invader has been thrown back across the border.

Not the Matter, But the Manner.

From Life.

A writer for the New York Times has been interviewing the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania in order to get "the truth" about Professor Nearing's dismissal, just as if the truth were not already as plain as the sum of two and two.

The trustees refuse to be quoted by name, but they stoutly maintain that they are not opposed to free speech, and that it wasn't anything that Professor Nearing said, but the way he said it, that agitated their equanimity. To illustrate, here is a remark that Professor Nearing made after he had served a while on a petit jury:

"I saw foreigners come into court dazed and terrified, unrepresented by counsel, badly understood through inefficient interpreters, and sentenced to months or even years in prison. I saw political power and wealth, fur coats on arm, bowed respectfully in and out of court, and even in and out of the prisoners' dock, though the members of the jury were subjected to the petty insolence of the court officials. Property is a god in criminal jurisprudence."

Manifestly there could be nothing offensive to respectable magnates and politicians in such a statement as that, but it was the way Mr. Nearing did it. He wrote it in a letter to the newspaper of largest circulation in Philadelphia, thus enabling a great many people to see it. That was a mistake. When a man has such information to reveal he should go off by himself in the woods and whisper it to the birds.

Perhaps the most coveted of all orders for women is the Golden Rose, which is bestowed upon pious daughters of the Catholic church by the pope.

Miss Anna Robertson, head of the millinery department of a large New York firm, has just started on her 40th trip across the Atlantic.

MILLIONS FOR THOUSANDS.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

Most Americans have come to know at least some of the iniquities of pork barrel appropriations—the hundreds of millions of dollars spent for harbor and river improvements so-called, a large percentage of which has been unpardonable waste. The Missouri river dredging farce is probably as good as instance of this misappropriation of funds as could be found.

Here is a dull, sluggish stream in which the government is attempting to keep open a six-foot channel through the sediment. On this $6,000,000 has been expended and $14,000,000 more will be squandered if government plans are carried out. Yet despite the millions spent for years past to keep the stream open, the tonnage from Kansas City to St. Louis in 1913, amounted to only 7,000, with a total freight bill of a little more than $40,000. These cities have a water freight rate which is 80 per cent of the rail rate, so that $10,000 was saved on the freight movement for that year.

Why not permit the commerce commission to prescribe reasonable rail rates between these two points as elsewhere, instead of spending million after million to save $10,000 for a handful of shippers? With idly growing expenses in other departments, the government needs to economize. Stopping the harbor graft will help a little. The great cut made at the last session of congress may very well be repeated and even further sheared down.

WHERE DO YOU CLE

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure paper Syndicate.)

Is your house free from visible

Or is there dust, sometimes, seen on the polished surface of piano because you have been whitewashing the cellar.

The visible dust be it know seldom the dust that is injurious; the visible dust comes in contact sunshine and air and seldom st one place long enough to harbor disease germs. But the dust that culates in dark corners, the d damp cellars and warm attics, the dust that does harm. For in damp, and dark dirt—and dust —many disease germs are harbored they, of course, are capable of much harm.

So if you have only time to d of the work that every house de if it is to be kept in perfect ord to it that the cellar and attic, cup and closets, are kept clean. Don't piles of rubbish of any sort to acc late. Burn or give away newsp and magazines, unless, in the ca magazines, they are to be bound; pile them on clean closet shelves away from the dust. In the attic everything that must be kept and it into trunks and cupboards, neat the attic floor will be kept free of bish and so will the cellar floor.

Anything that is really of va should be burned in an incinerator lacking that, in the furnace.

Always see to it that there is an window in the attic. For the heat that rises from the bottom of the carries with it impurities, and can be carried out of the attic wi —if it is open.

It is equally important to s there are open windows in the for a current of air there keeps and other impurities in the air cl ing, so that they will doubtless b ried out of doors, where exposure sun will render them harmless. A rate it keeps them from settling to lodge in the cellar, where later will be carried with upward rising rents of air into the house.

There is a sort of paint that c put on a cement floor to keep th dust, that otherwise wears off ment every time it is swept ing. This is an economical fea So is a frequent coat of whitew the cellar walls, for this helps to the cellar in a sanitary condition.

Besides the cellar and the attic are all the closets in the house need careful attention. These s be aired as thoroughly as possibl occasionally the inside of every should be wiped down with strong monia or borax water. And the of all bureau drawers should be in the same way.

Then the kitchen should come much attention even if the piano be kept spotlessly clean, and the closet for food should be regularly thoroughly cared for.

The Thrift of Iowa.

From the Christian Science Mon

In the distribution of automobiles the United States, if the relative and miles of good roads be take consideration, Iowa lays claim largest share. Only five states larger number of cars, according first official compilation of reg made by the national department culture, and of these Pennsylva almost exactly the same number the only states really exceeding New York, Illinois, California and Even New York, with the largest of power cars, has only three to two. The thrift of the state is in the fact that only three states a larger revenue from the registra cars than does this one of the Mis valley, where it exceeds by $1,000,000 a year. KNEW WHERE IT BELONGED

Information Not Just What Botanist Was Looking For, But the Boy Meant Well.

The famous botanist was pacing slowly along the country road, his eyes, as usual, roaming from side to side for new plants to study

Suddenly an eager look spread across his features, and he leaned over the low fence inclosing a cottage garden. He had found a plant he did not know.

What could it be! If only he had a specimen of it to study!

At that moment a shock headed lad strolled along the road and stopped to gaze open-mouthed at him

"I say!" called the botanist urgently "See that plant there—that pale pink one in the corner? Do you know it?"

"Uh-huh!" said the country boy briefly.

"What's its name? Do you know what family it belongs to?"

The lad jerked a grubby thumb over his shoulder toward the little cottage as he spoke more briefly still Coffee a Sure and Powerful Bruiser.

"Let your coffee slave be denied his cup at its appointed time! Headache—sick stomach—fatigue I know it all in myself, and have seen it in others. Strange that thinking, reasoning beings will persist in its use," says a Topeka man.

He says further that he did not begin drinking coffee until he was twenty years old, and that slowly it began to poison him, and affect his hearing through his nervous system.

"Finally, I quit coffee and the conditions slowly disappeared, but one cold morning the smell of my wife's coffee was too much for me and I took a cup. Soon I was drinking my regular allowance, tearing down brain and nerves by the daily dose of the nefarious beverage.

"Later, I found my breath coming hard, had frequent fits of nausea, and then I was taken down with bilious fever.

"Common sense came to me, and I quit coffee for good and went back to Postum. I at once began to gain and have had no returns of my bilious symptoms, headache, dizziness or vertigo.

"I now have health, bright thoughts, and added weight, where before there was invalidism and the blues.

"My brother quit coffee because of its effect on his health and now uses Postum. He could not stand the nervous strain while using coffee, but keeps well on Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

THE FARMER IS IT IN THE UNITED STATES

From Collier's.

The government crop report came out as usual last month with its serried ranks of figures, hundreds and thousands of millions of bushels, and the statisticians are now busy sticking in dollar marks as their taste and fancy dictate The harvest is to be better than ever and the economic foundations of our country are solid.

While Wall street has been spinning its black-and-red wheel for war stocks, and the politicians have been penroseing up and down the land that prosperity depends on them and the lack of it on the other fellow, the plain men of the United States have gone out to the fields and plowed prosperity into existence It takes hard work, but it t the only way

The basis for the business of next year has been established on the bench lands of Montana, in the bottoms of Missouri and Illinois, on the tree-studded slopes of the older states and the irrigated flats of the new west The predicted results are overwhelmingly impressive in bushels and tons and bales but greater yet is the widespread intelligence, the faithfulness, a harnest work that made the results come As science gets further hold among us these same qualities will reap even greater triumphs.

Our cities have their place and pride, they do most of the advertising and make nearly all the noise, but when the crop returns come in we know on what the living strength of our country securely rests The farmer is it in the United States and the rest of us might as well acknowledge the fact He is in league with the everlasting procession of the seasons and his allies are the powers of the earth and the unchanging needs of men His daily work relies on that eternal promise of 4000 years ago "While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest, and cold and heat and summer and winter and day and night shall not cease." The year has seen it fulfilled once more.

YOUNG MEN WHO WOULD WED WEALTH.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"When the song has died out of your life,
That you thought would last till the end,
You can sing no other song
Not even a tremulous note,
Will falter forth on the empty air.
It dies away in your throat.
For the spirit of song is fled,
The nightingale sings no more to the rose,
When the beautiful flower is dead."

It is not always an easy matter for a girl to tell whether a man is in love with her for herself or has an eye to the possibility that she may be a good matrimonial prize, having every prospect of inheriting money.

It is not so much of a problem as is generally supposed Give a wouldbe wooer sufficient opportunities and the drift of his hopes will soon become manifest The man who is really in love doesn't care a rap if the object of his affection hasn't a second dress to her back He doesn't waste a thought concerning her genealogical tree. Whether her great grandfather was a belted earl or a hod carrier All he is thinking of is the girl herself

The theme he loves but to talk about when with her is how he can advance in his position, insuring a sufficient amount to provide comfortably for her if she will wed him His talks of making her happy, of his willingness to do for her old father and mother, her little brothers and sisters, even shouldering the support of her aged aunts, if it will but add to her peace of mind. He works hard night and day to show her that he is advancing, straining every nerve to make good his promises to her, proving his love

The fortune hunter is built on a different line He has a hearty disregard for work. He is always out of one position and into another He tells a good story of the great positions offered him, giving glib excuses as to why he passes them by to take on inferior ones His real interest in a girl begins only after he has been made aware of the fact that she has rich relatives whose money she must inherit. A family of elderly spinsters beyond the probability of wedlock who will be sure to leave their fortunes to their young brother's daughter or a grandmother as wealthy as she is penurious who must eventually leave her fortune to her only child's daughter

The fortune hunter's sole topic of conversation, no matter from what source it starts, will eventually lead up to the health and longevity of the grandmother and the aunts. To hear that the grandmother is contemplating adopting her physician agitates him greatly The rumor that one or all of the aunts contemplate being led to the altar fills him with poignant dismay. He will go to any length to frustrate the prospects of the doctor and break up the love matches of the aunts, if he has to move heaven and earth to accomplish it

There's no enticing him into the hymeneal yoke until he sees the girl and at least one or more of the fortunes As he puts the betrothal ring on her finger he is talking up the advisability of the husband controlling his wife's money and drawing from her then and there that it shall be as in their case after they are wed.

By all these tokens the average girl should recognize the fact that the man was by no means in love with her but with her prospective fortune. His declaration of affection does not ring true It is this type of a man who deserts his wife after he has succeeded in squandering the fortune which she has entrusted to his safe guarding

The right kind of a lover will introduce his sweetheart's aged aunt of means to the lonely aged widower equally endowed with this world's goods in the hope of seeing two lonely lives made happier He asks no odds of the grandmother nor brother about corralling her fortune. All he wants is his dearie for his very own, to work for and cherish and make fame and fortune for, if it be within his power.

The difference between pure gold and tinsel is easily detected if the proper tests are applied.

"HOME MAKING."

From the Pictorial Review.

In the beginning God gave to man and beast the homing instinct; all creatures made for themselves homes as places of refuge, took unto themselves mates, and established the family.

Primarily a refuge from physical dangers, home has gradually developed into a spiritual refuge, a haven of hearts, a place of joy, a solace in distress, an earthly foretaste of eternal life.

In its higher development, home is the spiritual contribution of two or more persons to a central point of activity, with harmony as a necessary element of its success. Within its walls may be found freedom without license, order without rigor, unselfishness without self immolation, consideration without subserviency, and always self government. Home in its ideal state is the perfect balance of spiritual and material comfort.

Materialism, as distinct from material comfort has little to do with home making, loving hearts are the home builders and are strong to adjust adverse conditions. The house where there is spiritual discord, however unexpressed, is not a home.

Home is the natural center of social life, in whose atmosphere is nuttured the true spirit of hospitality Public places of meeting—clubs, restaurants, hotels—can never impart to social gatherings the personal element which lies within the charmed circle of home.

How many sacred memories gather around the old home from which the sons and daughters go out to establish other homes, "to knit the generations each with each." In the first school days, the children's feet are set upon the long road. At first it is only a short trip from home, with little feet hastening back at midday. With each year the journey lengthens; college days succeed school days, and finally the long journey of life begins, leading ever farther and farther from the old home Happy the parents who can stay in their home nest and welcome back from time to time the children and grandchildren. Home is the fountain head of the great stream which feeds the nation. The nation that undervalues or deprecates the influence of the home is abandoned to restlessness and discontent. When the satisfaction of home life is crowded out by other interests, the individual affected is unstable, shallow, flighty, eternally dissatisfied.

At "journey's end"—no matter how beautiful, how perfect that journey—eagerly, hopefully, we hasten home, open familiar doors, gaze with renewed pleasure upon beloved pictures, turn the leaves of dear, familiar books, peep into closets and pantries and end the rapturous tour by inspecting the chicken yard and looking into the coal house. This is home coming.

From the old Norse tales comes the most beautiful name for home, "gladsheim." The house may be shut in by city blocks, it may be the humblest mountain cabin, but it is the heart's home, it is gladsheim—for, where the heart is, there is home.

High Cost of Dying.

From the Pictorial Review.

As an important factor in the high cost of living, we have all but overlooked the still higher cost of dying, which in these days is well-nigh prohibitive. In a small country town there lived a school teacher whose salary was $448 a year. He had a wife and one child. By the most grinding sort of economy he actually put by a few dollars, and after half a dozen years he had $85 saved. Then his little girl fell ill. Like her father and mother, she had never really had enough to eat, so that in her poorly-nourished condition not even the best of care could save her life. The child was buried simply and decently. When the father reckoned up the cost of this tragedy, he found himself facing the appalling indebtedness of $268.

The $85 of savings exactly balanced the burial costs, leaving the father penniless and burdened with debt of $183. Think of the years that followed —of the hard, pitiless struggle to save, penny by penny, the money to satisfy this terrible debt!

A porter in a New York linen house who earned $8 per week, almost much as the country school teacher received, lost his wife. The cost of this tragedy was $300. All the dead wife's insurance, all the husband's ready money and all the money he could borrow, went to pay the debt. He was left penniless, with his salary mortgaged for months to come. He could no longer pay rent, and his children went to exist with a grandmother, while the father bent himself to the almost hopeless task of paying his debts.

Far from being exceptional, these cases are typical. Not long ago the School of Philanthropy, in New York, made an extensive study of burial costs. The investigation covered funerals both among the poor and those in comfortable financial circumstances. In 27 cases, the family income varied from $6 to $19 a week, with an average of $12.50. This is only a little less than the average wage of American working people. The funeral bills averaged $118.50. In 23 other cases the incomes ranged $20 to $40 a week, or from $1,040 to $2,080 a year. The average was $25.36 a week, which is much above the average income. Here the funeral charges averaged $130.94.

American Citizen or German Subject?

Wayne MacVeagh in the North American Review

The simple truth is that there exists an impassable chasm between a citizen of the United States and a subject of the German emperor, and there is no possible political alchemy whereby the political standards of the one can be transmuted into the political standards of the other. No matter where a man is born or how he is reared, when he comes to manhood he instinctively prefers to be a citizen of a subject. Our fathers preferred, and we ourselves and our children all prefer, to be free citizens, but we do not for that reason deny to anybody else the privilege of preferring to be the obodient subject of a kaiser and a military caste. We only ask them in all fairness to themselves and to us to make their choice to be loyal either to the fundamental principle of our government or those of the government of the kaiser, and to believe that they cannot be half loyal to the one and half loyal to the other.

They must be wholly American, or wholly German, and if they really prefer the German system of government they should return thither and enjoy it; but if they propose to continue to live here, then they must be loyal to the American system, and there is no possibility for them of mistaking what the system is.

A Deserving Fund.

From the Kingston (Ontario) Whig.

The larger church bodies in the United States are organizing to raise pension funds which will aggregate $65,000,000. It is hoped they will succeed. If there is one thing that makes the heart of the average preacher sick it is to be thrown aside in old age like a squeezed lemon without a proper pension. It is time the church awoke to its duty. The preacher may be a man of simple tastes but he is entitled, on account of his sacrifices, to a comfortable living, and he has not always been getting it.

It is claimed that the women recruiting officers in England are more successful than men in securing enlistments.

Expression Used by Girl on Trial for Vagrancy May Have Had Some Influence on His Honor.

"Sure, Mike!" Clara Johnson, on trial for vagrancy in police court, said to Judge Allee when he asked her if she had not been arrested on the same charges a short time ago.

"My name isn't Mike," objected the court. "However, you are charged with being a rag."

"I didn't do it," the prisoner replied, smirking arrogantly.

"You're not right in the head," commented the court.

"I'm all right," she said.

"Wha. do you do?"

"Work at John S ith's."

"What do you do there?"

'Everything."

"Everything?"

"Sure, Mike!"

"Ten days," sighed the magistrate.

5 Women Avoid Operations

For years we have been stating in the newspapers of the country that a great many women have escaped serious operations by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it is true.

We are permitted to publish in this announcement extracts from the letters of five women. All have been recently received unsolicited. Could any evidence be more convincing?

1. HODGDON, ME.—"I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached and I was so nervous I could not sleep, and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation, but I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Hodgdon, Me.

2. SHELBYVILLE, KY.—"I suffered from a severe female trouble. My right side hurt me badly—it was finally decided that I must be operated upon. When my husband learned this he got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking it a few days I got better and continued to improve until I am now well."—Mrs. MOLLIE SMITH, R.F.D., Shelbyville, Ky.

3. HANOVER, PA.—"The doctor advised a severe operation, but my husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I experienced great relief in a short time. Now I feel like a new person and can do a hard day's work and not mind it."—Mrs. ADA WILT, 303 Walnut St., Hanover, Pa.

4. DECATUR, ILL.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. LAURA A. GRISWOLD, 2437 East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

5. CLEVELAND, OHIO.—"I was very irregular and for several years my side pained me so that I expected to have to undergo an operation. Doctors said they knew of nothing that would help me. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I became regular and free from pain. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. GRIFFITH, 1568 Constant St., Cleveland, O.

Best of Political Parties.
The political parties that I would call great, are those which cling more to principles than to consequences; to general, and not to special cases; to ideas, and not to men.—such parties are usually distinguished by a nobler character, more generous passions, more genuine convictions, and a more bold and open conduct than others.—De Tocqueville.

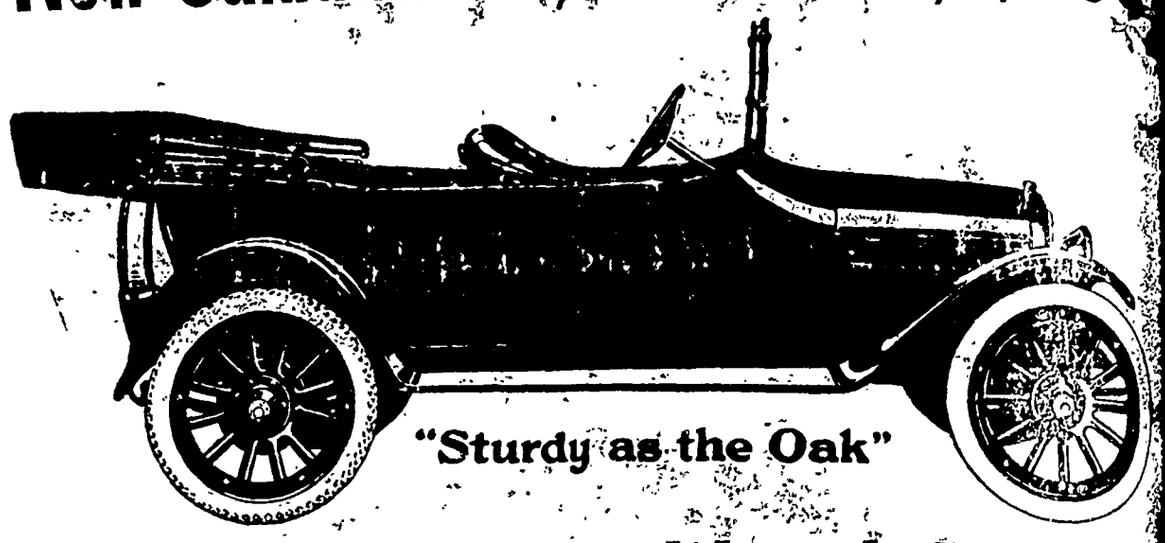
New Oakland Six, Model 32, $795



The New Oakland Six

¶ In designing this new Oakland Six, Model "32," our engineers have met the demand for a car devoid of every bit of excess weight which added nothing to the endurance of the car or the riding comfort of the passengers. They produced, in Model "32," a motor car with every advantageous mechahical and engineering feature found on high priced cars.

¶ And so well did they plan that the result is a new Oakland Six at $795---the first real, full-sized six-cylinder car to sell at less than $1000.

¶ Model "32" possesses all of the essentials of the most exacting mbtor car service There is power beyond all need. The car is roomy, with wide seats and plenty of leg room. Long, resilient springs and deep upholstery insure perfect riding comfort on any road.

¶ Co-operating with Oakland engineers is the largest and most complete motor car manufacturing organization in the world---an organization capable of giving the mnst complete expression to Oakland principles of design and refinements of construction; and with a buying power that makes sure a minimum cost of materials.

¶ Due to this same organization there is a unity of purpose which guarantees that into every Oakland motor car there is an in-built quality which makes the manufrcturer proud to have built tee car, and the user proud to own it.

¶ The working together of these forces, the driving of many men and minds toward the accomplishment of a single purpose, finds expression in a

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise

¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

OUR REPLY

We well answer the statements Mr. Wellemeyer made in this paper last week. He claims we refused weighing coal for farmers, which they shipped in themselves. We weighed a car load for them last fall, and weighed it cheaper than the Farmers Scale Co. does. Next he states the farmers asked us to weigh corn for them which they intended to ship. Both of these statements are absolutely untrue. A. C. Lau & Son have done lots of weighing for farmers and others and never charged them one cent, when the Farmers Scale Co. charge 10c a load.

We further state that we do not put our nose in other people's business like the above party we have mentioned. We have all we can do to attend to our own business, besides we can't afford to hire bobbies with standing collars on to go out and sell our goods, as the above party does. If we were in the peach business it might be different. We even can't sell coal to the Klemme school on a profit like the above party sold a piano to the school.

We further state that since A. C. Lau & Son have run a business in Klemme it has always been the highest market place west of the Mississippi. If any party can show different we would like to see it. If it had not been for your grain and livestock market where would your town be?

Then some smart Alecks try to interfere with the dealer's coal business just for spite to cut our few cents profit, when we are here with a large amount of money invested, and work in the dirt day and night, and could not hire any of these smart Alecks, which are in this gang, for the work is too dirty for them. We fail to see a standing collar on a grain and coal healer, because profits don't afford it. Besides they blow on the low grade of coal they handle. If we handled these grades of coal we could only sell one load to a party, and then the next load he would not buy from us. We can sell the same kind of coal they do by car load lots at from $4.50 to $5.50, including their Hocking and Sprint and from $9.20 to $9 45 per ton for hard coal in car load lots, f. o. b. Klemme. This means cash when coal is unloaded, the same as the above party is doing.

COULDN'T AFFORD TO ADVERTISE

Jud Shaw sold shoes and sealing wax,
And lamps, fishing poles, and glue,
Tobacco, candles, gum, and tacks,
Slickers and sardines, too;
Dry goods and hams were in his line;
He dealt in peas and beans;
He kept the geneeral store, in fine—
Sold overalls and jeans;
But Jud, somehow, he wasn't wise—
Couldd't afford to advertise.

Not that he barbored any grudge
Against his home town sheet;
He was, as anyone might judge,
A kindly man to meet;
His customers he treated fair,
And yet he prospered not;
His goods were honest, one would swear—
He simply was forgot;
For Jud, somehow, he wasn't wise—
Couldn't afford to advertise.

Mail order firms from out of town,
Much wiser than their day,
Paid liberally for their renown,
And gathered in the hay;
Their catalogues went everywhere;
They advertised for trade;
Their name went forth with trumpets blare,
And, oh! the coin they made;
Couldn't afford, they were so wise,
Couldn't afford NOT to advertise.

Now, Judd's stuff it was just as good;
His prices were the same;
The loss was ours;
He simply would not spread abroad his name;
Though townfolks might have much Preferred
In their own home mart to buy;
Of Jud Shaw they had never heard—
You know the reason why,
For Jud, somehow, he wasn't wise—
Just simply wouldn't advertise.

FIVE MILLION CATALOGUES

It would be well for you to stop right now, Mr. Business Man, and do some very serious thinking if you don't want to lose a lot of your customers this fall and winter. There is no time to be lost if you want to protect your interests.

One great mail order house alone, according to an article in a metropolitan newspaper, is now preparing to mail out 5,000,000 immense catalogues. That is the number being sent out by [illegible] and statisticians say there are 228 different mail order concerns in the United States.

Now if one house alone sends out the enormous number of 5,000,000 catalogs, how many do you suppose will be sent out by the whole 228 concerns combined? Isn't it fair to assume that almost every farm house, and many of the town houses, will receive one or more these catalogs? And isn't it also fair to assume that the people are going to look over those catalogs, and look at the attractive pictures of the thousands of articles and read of the "marvelously low prices" at which those goods are sold?

Furthermore, is it not fair to assume that a local paper would not be doing anything wrong if they should accept advertising from these mail order concerns, especially when the line they wish to advertise is one not now represented in the columns of the paper. Would you think the editor loyal or a fool who would turn down a contract that would run above the $100 mark for a few weeks advertising? We have about come to the conclusion that he is a fool, and you need not be surprised if you see the ad. of Monkey Ward or Sears-Sawbuck in this paper in the near future, unless some of the "dead" ones wake up soon.

It is great to be a booster and a good fellow, but it gets old and stale to continully do it on an empty stomach. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

RUTH IS HOME AGAIN

"On dear, these pies!" cried Ruth's mother, as she was baking ror company, shortly after Ruth returned frym her vacation trip, "the juice has run out all over the crust and made them soggy! And I was so anxious to have them look nice as well as tsste nice."

"Well, I'm sorry mother, that I cannot help you with these particular pies," sympathized Ruth, who had fallen into her old helpful ways, "but I can tell you how Aunt Mary prevents just this sort of thing. She takes two small pieces of maccaroni, and puts them through the top crust, and lets them run down through the filling. This allows the air to escape and keeps the juice in the pie, and also keeps the crust dry and flaky."

Progress in the exploitation of the steamship route to Siberia by way of the Arctic ocean has been reported from time to time. The American consul general at Moscow states that interruption of other trade routes by the war will stimulate the use of the Arctic route, and that extensive preparations are now being made by the Siberian Association for Shipping, Trade and Industry for the shipping season of 1915. Hides, flax, hemp and other raw materials to a value of $500,000 will probably be sent by water to England. The association is building a settlement on the lower Yenisei.

According to the bulletin of the American Geographical society, Ernest de K Leffingwell has completed the extensive explorations and surveys of the northern coast, on which he has been engaged for some years, and is now preparing his results for publication. He has mapped about 150 miles of the coast, including many islands, on a large scale, besides making soundings in the adjacent waters and mapping the broader geographical and geological features over an inland area of about 30 square miles

It has been commonly reported that arsenical spraying of trees in New England in order to eliminate the gipsy moth has proved fatal to many birds, but according to Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the United States bureau of entomology, investigations fail to show any such result The absence of birds from the regions where spraying has been practiced can be explained by the fact that the spraying causes a scarcity of insect food, and the birds are obliged to seek this elsewhere.

Canada is now giving much attention to the manufacture of explosive shells, some 200 factories being devoted to that purpose. Orders for $175,000,000 worth of the projectiles have been placed. Materials will be obtained from Sydney, Nova Scotia and Sault Ste Marie, where copper and zinc are being refined and where brass is being made. The United States has heretofore furnished most of the refined materials for Canadian made shells.

Sheep killing dogs are said to be the chief cause of the marked decrease in the number of sheep kept on farms in the United States, exclusive of the western division. During the period between 1900 and 1910 the total number of sheep in this region decreased by more than 3,900,000 head in spite of favorable market conditions.

MAN ABOUT TO MARRY IS ROUGHLY HANDLED BY UNKNOWN PERSONS

Wedding Postponed When He Did Not Appear—Later Found on Road, Unconscious.

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 18.—Seized by four unknown persons, loaded into an automobile and driven for a distance of 30 miles, then severely beaten and left by the road in an unconscious condition, was the experience of Corneal Kleppe, just a few hours before he was to have been married.

According to the story reaching here Mr. Kleppe had gone to Austin where he was to marry Miss Stella Feeley, a prominent young woman of that place. The wedding was to have occurred Wednesday morning. Mr. Kleppe arrived on Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday evening the wedding program was rehearsed. Mr. Kleppe retired to the Union house about 10 o'clock. Wednesday morning he arose early and stated that he was going to the church for the early wedding service. He never reached the church.

Miss Feeley, accompanied by her maids, relatives and friends, arrived at the church at 6 o'clock, expecting to be met by Mr. Kleppe. He did not appear. They waited for some time and then sent a man in search, but Mr Kleppe could not be found. The announcement was made that the wedding would be postponed. Friends knew that something was wrong. The father of the bride-to-be got an inkling that Mr. Kleppe was picked up by an automobile party of young men and had been taken away. He secured an automobile and went in search, finding Mr. Kleppe about half way between Waltham and Hayfield in an unconscious condition, drugged and bleeding from wounds. He was taken to the home of Mr. Feeley and cared for. Mr Kleppe has has not rallied sufficiently to tell his story. Feeling runs high

If it was done as a joke the joke was carried to almost the point of killing the young man. However, it is believed, that there was a motive that promoted these young men to do this and that as soon as Mr. Kleppe recovers he will be able to throw additional light on the trouble.

THEATER MANAGEMENT SUED BY CONTEST PARTICIPANT

Ida Grove, Ia., Sept. 18.—Through her attorney, Chas Macomber, Miss Effie Condon has brought suit against D. C Johnston, J A. Kramer, A E Heinrich, the firm of Heinrich, Sheen & Co., and the Princess theater, to recover $800 and costs. This sum represents the alleged value of the auto that was given away in the recent voting contest at the Princess Miss Condon was a contestant in the race and claims that she actually bought, sold and delivered more tickets than any one else She alleges that the defendants, managing the theater, entered into a conspiracy and on the last day of the contest sold nearly 1,000,000 votes to Eddie O'Brien or his brother Will and that none of these votes were delivered on orders for tickets, nor were in the box, nor were in circulation The result, she alleges, of this breach of rules was that 600,000 more votes were counted for O'Brien although she had sold a greater number of tickets under the rules of the contest

FORT DODGE WOMAN IS 102 YEARS OF AGE TODAY

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 18.—Grandma Jenkins, whose 100th birthday anniversary two years ago was celebrated with much ceremony in Fort Dodge, will today celebrate her 102nd birthday anniversary Two years ago the ceremonies were held in the old Methodist Episcopal church, which was later torn down to give place to a fine, modern structure. "Grandma" Jenkins on that occasion hoped to live to see the new edifice done Today a reception will be given her in the new church

The aged woman was born while the war of 1812 was in progress, in the year 1813, in New York state She recalls many incidents of historic interest that occurred during her childhood She is now in the best of health and is cheerful, alert and interested in all events of the time.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 17.—Mrs. W. H. Arney, wife of State Senator Arney, of Marshalltown, died in a Des Moines hospital last night after five weeks' illness. Bright's disease was the cause.

WASHINGTON HERALD THINKS IOWANS ARE DODGING INCOME TAX

Automobile Purchases and Big Property Valuation Belie Meager Payments.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 18.—The question whether Iowa people are paying their share of the income tax is raised in a lengthy editorial in the Washington Herald.

The basis for the article, which maintains that Iowa people are dodging income taxes, is a statement that Iowa is proving a paradise for the sale of automobiles, that 50,000 cars were sold there last year, and that Iowa people spent $50,000,000 for new autos and $10,000,000 more for gasoline and repairs.

It is pointed out that while Iowa people were spending enormous sums for new autos, yet the internal revenue figures showed Iowa paid only $264,315 income tax, whereas the little District of Columbia paid $378,673.

"At this rate," says the Herald, "the rich people of Iowa paid about 12 cents per capita and the poor people of the District paid $1.14 per capita as an individual income tax."

It points out that by census figures Iowa has nearly $8,000,000,000 of wealth, while the District has about $1,000,000,000.

PARDON SOUGHT FOR PARNITZKE, LIFE TERMER

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 18.—Application has been made to Governor Clarke for a pardon for Albert Parnitzke, serving a life sentence for the murder of James Warner, of Van Buren county. He has been in the Fort Madison penitentiary since December 21, 1891.

The case was yesterday referred to the state board of parole for investigation.

RIVAL CLAIMANTS FOR SMALL TOWN POSTOFFICE

Angusta, Ia, Sept. 18.—This little city, the oldest in Des Moines county, is in the midst of an interesting postoffice mixup. Though the office is one of the oldest in the state, it is not of much importance from a postal standpoint, the one time important place being in these later days only a neighboring trading post with two general stores. The proprietor of one of these stores, W. M. Resch, has been the postmaster for several years.

Owing to the fact that rural delivery serves most of the people who used to get their mail here, the office business is so light that a few months ago it was determined to discontinue it. This was not in accord with the views of a number of people of the burg, who for both practical and sentimental reasons thought it should be maintained, and they succeeded in having the discontinuance order rescinded. Frank Buck, proprietor of the other store, who had been active in the effort to have the office retained, made application for and was appointed postmaster, receiving his appointment papers some two or three months ago.

Following the usual method, according to instructions from the postal department, Buck last week made demand upon Resch to turn over the affairs of the office. This Resch refused to do, it is said, and still keeps in charge, while Buck, who has fitted up a part of his store room for postoffice purposes, with new fixtures, is waiting for "something to turn up."

COURSE IN JOURNALISM AT IOWA UNIVERSITY

Iowa City, Ia., Sept 18.—Journalism will be taught in the University of Iowa this year for the first time. Announcement was made yesterday of the details of the course which will be given by the department of English to train students in the practical side of newspaper work.

Talks on the development and place of the newspaper, newspaper organization, the nature of news, sources and methods of getting news, the writing of newspaper "stories," special articles and criticism, interpretation of news, the writing of editorials, and adaption of principles to the work of various types of newspapers will be included in the class room work.

In addition, the students will be organized into a newspaper staff sent out on assignments to get "stories" and instructed how to write them. The best of their results will be printed in The Daily Iowan, the newspaper operated by students.

ONLY SIX APPLICANTS FOR RHODES SCHOLARSHIP

Iowa City, Ia. Sept. 18.—Six men in Drake university, Cornell college, Grinnell college, and Upper Iowa university make up the list of applicants to date for permission to take the examinations for the Rhodes scholarship. They have indicated to Thomas H. Macbride, a resident of Iowa university who heads the committee on selection for Iowa, their intention to compete for the rare prize.

The examination will be held in the old capitol, University of Iowa, October 5-6 The successful candidate will begin residence at Oxford university a year later. He will receive $1,500 a year for three years from the Rhodes trust fund.

The test will be in Latin, Greek and mathematics; and only those candidates who may have passed in at least Latin and mathematics will be eligible for selection. To be a candidate one must be a citizen of the United States, unmarried; between 19 and 25 years old; and at least past his sophomore year in college.

REV. HERBERT CLEGG MAY SUCCEED DR. WHITFIELD

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 16.—If a petition, signed by a great many of the pastors of the northwest Iowa conference, has anything to do with it, Bishop Frank Bristol will appoint Rev Herbert Clegg, of Emmetsburg, successor to Dr. Whitfield, as presiding elder of the Algona district. The position is being filled temporarily by Dr. Gillies, of Sioux City, but he prefers to remain in active service as a preacher, and does not want the appointment.

IOWA BRIDAL COUPLE WEIGHS 736 POUNDS

Ames, Ia., Sept. 16.—Iowa's fattest man is to be married. He is George Nichols, 42, a resident of Ames, and weighs 508 pounds. Nichols is to marry Miss Viola Williams, aged 46, and weighs 230, of Washington. The wedding will be Tuesday night at Ames.

FORMER IOWAN NAMED TO PLACE IN OFFICE OF COUNSELOR POLK

Was Confidential Secretary to Mr. Polk When Latter Was In New York.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 17.—An Iowa man was established in an important post in the state department today. Ira Halsey Patchin, formerly of Des Moines, has been designated as confidential secretary to the counsellor of the department, Mr. Polk. Mr. Patchin held the same position under Mr Polk when the latter was corporation counsel of New York.

Mr. Patchin is a brother of Robert and Phillip Patchin, formerly of Des Moines, now prominent newspaper men of New York and London.

RAINS CHECK CORN FROM ADVANCING TO MATURITY

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 17.—Following is the regular bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service for the week ending September 13.

The week as a whole was warmer than the average, but frequent and, in many sections, heavy to excessive showers have further delayed threshing and other farm operations. While the rains were beneficial in softening the ground in cornfields, they have kept the crop growing and prevented any material advancement toward maturity. Only the very earliest planted fields are beginning to dent, probably not more than 20 per cent of the crop has passed the advanced roasting ear stage. However, with favorable weather in the future the improvement will be rapid, as soil conditions are now excellent. The rains have also put the ground in fine shape for plowing and considerable of that work was done during the week, and some wheat was sown Much trouble was experienced in curing the second cutting of clover. Reports of potatoes rotting in the ground are increasing and in some sections the crop has been damaged by blight

BLOW OF BATTED BALL KILLS CRESCENT YOUTH

Council Bluffs, Ia, Sept 17.—A surgical operation and eight hours of continuous artificial respiration failed to save the life of Earl Driver, 16-year-old son of Walton Driver, a farmer, living southwest of Crescent The boy was struck by a pitched ball in an amateur game at 5 o'clock Sunday evening. The ball struck him in the left temple and knocked him down, but he quickly arose and continued the game. At 6 o'clock, however, he became unconscious and a physician was called. His condition became so alarming that he was brought to Mercy hospital in the evening where several physicians cared for him during the night. Although the boy had ceased breathing his pulse continued strong, and there was some hope of reviving him with the use of a pulmotor. This effort proved futile.

BAN AGAIN IMPOSED ON LIVE STOCK FROM ILLINOIS

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 17.—The Iowa animal health commission has issued an order prohibiting, absolutely, the shipment into Iowa from Illinois of cattle, sheep, swin, goats, hay, straw, cholera serum, raw milk and cream. The move, as explained by commission members, is to protect Iowa live stock from the hoof and mouth disease, said to have broken out again in Illinois. All that is required for the order to become effective is concurrence by the state executive council, to which it will be submitted today. Movement of horses, mules and asses from Illinois into Iowa when loaded in disinfected cars is not prohibited. Dressed cattle from Illinois is barred, but the order does not interfere with the shipment of packing house products into Iowa.

LARRABEE ENTHUSED BY TRIP OVER PAVED ROAD

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 17.—Senator Frederic Larrabee, of Fort Dodge, was in the city Monday and was given a ride over the new cement highway between Mason City and Clear Lake. This is what the senator says. "I wish every member of the legislature could see this Cerro Gordo county road during this muddy time. While I have not advocated the wholesale paving of all the highways in Iowa all during one year, I have been an advocate of hard surfaced roads just as fast as communities can with justice to themselves finance the proposition The fact that such roads will advance the value of the land brings objections to some farmers, whose land is not for sale at any price. They do not want their land to increase in value merely to encourage higher taxation. I am very sure that the convenience which hard surface roads would bring would be worth more than the cost."

FARMERS ADVISED TO PUT FROSTED CORN INTO SILOS

Ames, Ia., Sept. 17.—Hundreds of farmers are facing the problem of the best method of handling corn which has been injured by the fost. Many inquiries have been received asking just this question.

"Put it in the silo," says Prof. W. H. Pew, of the animal husbandry department.

In cases where corn has been seriously injured by frost at the present stage of maturity, it will necessarily be soft. No doubt some of the corn which has been injured is hardly in the dough stage. If the leaves are all dried by the fost, it may be necessary to add water through the blower or run it into the silo through a hose pipe.

If there is no silo on the farm, this corn could be fed to good advantage now to cattle that are to be marketed this fall. This method is to be preferred to cutting and shocking and feeding out during the winter.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—Secretary Frank Pierce, of Marshalltown, at the League of Iowa Municipalities convention, sprung a new idea on the initial session. He recommended that district meetings be held of the league; to accommodate the smaller towns. The convention liked the idea and said so, appointing a committee to look into details of the plan and report later.

NINETEEN MATCHES AT NATIONAL GUARD SHOOT

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 15.—The teams of the Iowa National Guard gathered at the state rifle range north of Des Moines yesterday began work on the regular program of the state shoot. Monday was devoted to preliminary practice. At 7 o'clock yesterday the company team match was called. By noon the firing at 300 and 500-yard ranges had been completed. The match will be finished before evening.

All branches of the state militia are represented except Company F, Second regiment, Fort Dodge, and Battery A, of Clinton.

DES MOINES POLICE CHIEF OUSTS 14 MEN FOR ALLEGED LAXITY

"We Must Have Ginger in Department," Crawford Says—Some Old Timers Drop.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 16.—Chief Crawford exploded a bomb in the police department today by summarily "firing" 14 men for alleged laxity in enforcement of laws.

The discharges came when the men assembled for duty. They were presented with a letter addressed to the captain of police, announcing that the 14 men were "indefinitely suspended," pending the time when they can satisfactorily explain to the chief of police and superintendent of public safety why they have "utterly failed" to enforce the liquor laws and other laws, but more particularly the former.

"We must have ginger in the department," said the chief. Included among those who "get the ax" are some of the oldest men on the force.

FARMERS URGE TOWN TO IMPROVE STREETS

Gaza, Ia, Sept. 16.—A movement in on foot among the farmers' organizations of this county to conduct some booster tours to the towns of the county in the interests of good streets. The country roads are excellent and are thoroughly dragged after each rain, while the streets in the towns are never dragged.

YOUNG MAN'S SUICIDE DUE TO LOVE AFFAIR

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 16.—Despondency, brought on by the refusal of a young lady to accept his attentions, is said to be the cause of the suicide of Louis Witte. He was working on his brother's farm and was away during the afternoon, but returned before 6 o'clock, and did the chores. Nothing was noticed wrong with the young man. Mr. and Mrs Albert Witte drove into Rockwell to attend church. They didn't arrive home until about 10 o'clock and did not see Louis. Early yesterday morning they were awakened during the storm and Albert went to his brother's room to have him close the window. After rapping several times and receiving no reply, he entered the room and found Louis stretched across the bed, dead. The coroner was notified and, after an examination, decided that the young man had ended his life by drinking carbolic acid.

MANY KILLED IN IOWA HIGHWAY ACCIDENTS

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 16.—Eleven persons were killed and more than 150 were injured in highway accidents during the month ending August 4, 1915 according to the report of the state highway commission

Of the 11 deaths, six were due to automobile accidents. The list of dead follows:

Downing, of Des Moines, car upset; July 31, Mrs. Frank Barton and 3-year-old girl, of Bedford, bridge approach undermined; August 3, Charlotta Egan, of Keokuk, skidded off embankment.

MAN AND GIRL KILLED AT DES MOINES CROSSING

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 16.—Peter Swintek, 37 years old, a construction engineer, and Emil Reinholdt, 12 years old, both of 1221 Mulberry street, were instantly killed yesterday evening when a motorcycle on which they were riding collided with Chicago Great Western train No 54, at Thirty-first street and Section avenue.

From information received from persons who were near when the accident occurred, Swintek was traveling north on Thirty-first street at a fast rate of speed He apparently tried to cross the railroad tracks in advance of the train, which is said to have been going about 40 miles an hour The attempt was unsuccessful, and the motorcycle struck the engine The terrific impact threw both riders and the motorcycle 80 feet ahead to the side of the tracks.

CHANCE IS GIVEN MEXICAN LEADERS

Diplomats to Hear Pretensions Then Judge Which Is Best Qualified to Set Up Government.

New York Sept 20 Secretary Lansing and the Pan American diplomats continued their efforts to solve the Mexican problem at a conference here in the Hotel Biltmore

The diplomats had before them the latest official information relating to the relative supremacy of the contending factions in Mexico Their accepted policy was that eventually the party which can demonstrate its superior strength and its ability to enforce a stable government shall receive support and recognition

One point apparently already agreed upon was that General Carranza would be asked to send a representative to meet the conferees Similar invitations will be extended to the other leaders

The diplomats here to confer with Secretary Lansing are the ambassadors from Argentina Brazil and Chile the A. B. C. powers who figured in the conference at Niagara Falls and the ministers of Bolivia Uruguay and Guatemala

FRENCH TREASURY IS SWAMPED WITH WORK

Paris, Sept. 18—Asked by a representative of the Journal to outline the status of the negotiations for a loan in the United States, Finance Minister Rabot replied

"All I can say now is that both the British and French delegates speak in the highest terms of their reception in America and have high hopes of success"

M Ribot explained that a French loan would not be issued until the beginning of October as there is no pressing need for money and that the treasury was so swamped with work that it had been decided it would be necessary frist to create a special issuing department to relieve the cashier's department, which during the first year of the war handled receipts and payments amounting to 163,000,000,000 francs as compared with 38,000,000 000 francs in the average year

"It is not an easy moment," said Mr Churchill, "for a public man to open his mouth on any topic, for there are so many people who seem to have less to do than they ought to, who are engaged in trying to make difficulties, even more than already exist, and are seeking to make artificial divisions in regard to matters of great consequence which should be approached in a spirit of impartiality and good will"

Mr Churchill added that during the past four or five months the allies had not done as well as they might have hoped

A short time ago Mrs Porter and her daughter moved into the house where the shooting occurred They had a roomer who went by the name of Fuller This morning Vogt who also lived in town, appeared at the house, kicked Fuller out and pleaded with his wife to return to him and their children

Mrs Vogt refused and Mrs Porter ordered Vogt to leave and started out of the door to call the police Vogt shot his mother-in-law and then turned the weapon on his wife, producing a wound in the neck which caused her death He then shot himself through the head, dying instantly

Fuller has disappeared Mrs. Porter will recover

INVESTMENT BANKERS TO HOLD CONVENTION

Chicago, Sept 18—Two special trains, one originating in New York and the other in Chicago, left here today for Denver carrying delegates to the convention of the Investment Bankers' Association of America. A. B. Leach, of New York, president of the association, was one of the passengers on the train which came from the east. The delegates expected the most interesting convention of the organization because of the financial problems brought about by the European war

Banks Unwilling to Loan Money For Purchase of Munitions— Want Funds to Be Used In Buying Necessities.

New York, Sept. 20.—The two parties to the negotiations looking to the creation of a mammoth credit loan here to Great Britain and France met in secret again today in an effort to adjustice their differences over this question

"Shall the big credit—$1,000,000,000, or otherwise—provide funds for the payment of munitions of war, as well as wheat, cotton and other commodities, or shall a separate and distinct method be adopted in settling the bill for rifles shrapnel, war automobiles, aeroplanes and other items coming under the meaning of the word munitions?"

The Anglo-French commission, which is conducting negotiations on behalf of Great Britain and France is said to want the credit to take care of munitions

The American bankers—or what appears to be a majority of them—apparently do not In their camps, however, there is a marked division of opinion, while the commission is reported to be unanimous.

Upon the following things both parties are said to have reached an agreement

The life of the loan, which is said to be five years, 10 years, or from five to 10 years as may be deemed advisable later, the form of the bonds which are to be first lien (first mortgage) bonds on Great Britain and France jointly, and the collateral, it having been agreed that there shall be no collateral

On the other hand there is apparent disagreement on these features of the proposed credit:

The question of including munitions of war; the matter of Russia's participation and the interest rate. The last named, it is said, however, is practically settled as the commission has taken the positive stand that Great Britain and France will not pay more than a straight 5 per cent interest rate, bankers and investors to obtain the bonds on the same terms. If this be the case there will be no underwriting syndicate, no big fees for placing the loan and the subscription books will be open to all comers, pro-German or pro-ally

Plans have been made by the commission to spend Sunday out of town. They probably will leave late today, most of them being the week end guests of bankers with whom they have conferred here.

RUPTURE IMPROBABLE VON JAGOW DECLARES

German Foreign Minister Says Extra Precautions Are Being Taken By U-Boats

Berlin, (via London), Sept 18.—The German government will give its careful consideration to the evidence concerning the circumstances which attended the sinking of the steamer, Arabic, submitted by the American government through Ambassador Gerard. Gottlieb von Jagow, the foreign minister, made a statement to this effect in an interview last night with the Associated Press.

In his statement, the foreign minister, went fully into the present status of the submarine problem and the adventitous circumstances, which for a time, threatened to revive the tension between Germany and America. He expressed complete confidence that, in view of the instructions which had been given and the precautions now being taken, the possibility of further incidents in connection with the submarine campaign which could disturb the relations between the two countries had been virtually eliminated

Germany, Herr von Jagow said, would participate willingly in the negotiations now being taken up in Washington, and hopes for the most satisfactory results therefrom.

LINER SANT ANNA FIRED BY BLASTS

Vessel Set Ablaze By Explosions — Unexploded Fuses Found In Cargo—Blame Propagandists.

London, Sept. 20.—Lloyds' agent at St. Michaels, Azores, telegraphed today that the captain of the Fabre line steamer Sant Anna attributes the fire on his vessel to the work of propagandists of an enemy country. The report says there were many explosions on September 13 on the Sant Anna, which put in at the Azores on Thursday, after the fire had been extinguished. Subsequently a number of unexploded fuses were found. It is said that the ship surely would have been blown to pieces if there had been munitions of war on board. The vessel carried 1,600 Italian reservists.

ADMITS VOTE FRAUDS AND ACCUSES OTHERS

Man Indicted With Indianapolis Mayor Tells How Slate Candidates Won.

Indianapolis, Ind, Sept. 20.—Ernest Roeder, who recently pleaded guilty to the election conspiracy indictment on which Mayor Joseph E. Bell is being tried, today admitted in court that he gave Edward Lyons, Joseph Markey and other so-called slate candidates votes without counting the ballots, that he bought votes and voted persons illegally at the election

Roeder said he was the progressive primary clerk and was chosen at the suggestion of Dennis Bush, co-defendant and street commissioner, and James H Gibson, who has pleaded guilty.

"Bush told me to be at the precinct as there would be a vacancy on the board and I would be chosen," said Roeder "I was not a progressive. I was instructed to give the vote to Lyons."

The witness said he worked with Gibson on election day and bought a number of votes with money given him by Gibson.

Roeder said he brought three men to the polls who did not live in the precinct and voted them under the names of persons who lived in the precinct, but were out of the city on election day.

ERB CALMLY AWAITS DEATH OR RECOVERY

New York, Sept. 18.—Newman Erb, wealthy railroad organizer, was reported today to be in a comfortable and satisfactory condition, no change having taken place since he recovered from the first effects of the two bichloride tablets he swallowed by mistake four days ago. Mr. Erb, surrounded by his family, is calmly awaiting the crisis expected tomorrow or Monday Physicians express the opinion that Mr. Erb has a good chance for recovery.

NEW RECORD SET IN GREAT LAKE TRAFFIC

Sault Ste Marie, Mich, Sept. 18.—When the last of 118 vessels and small boats had passed through the American locks here yesterday all daily records since the opening of the locks had been broken. The number passing through the Canadian locks was not taken into consideration. The largest number previous to this was one day in 1895, when an even 100 craft of all kinds passed through the Weitzel lock.

COLORADO VALLEY OF TEXAS FACING FLOOD

Austin, Tex., Sept. 18.—Long swells of foam, presaging a rise, swept down the Colorado river into Lake Austin today and engineers at the Austin dam continued to keep close watch over the flood situation, despite a fall of six feet in the water behind the big concrete structure.

Thirteen more feet of water were reported sweeting down the Llano river into the Colorado. More rain was expected here today. Damage by the flood in the Colorado valley has not been extensive, owing to abundant warnings.

TO LIMIT EXCURSIONS.

Paris, Sept. 18.—So many excursionists frequently in personally conducted parties, have been journeying from Paris and other cities to the scene of the battle of the Marne that the military authorities today prohibited trips in groups. The prohibition does not apply however, to individual visits

GERMANY TO SEND ARMY TO RELIEVE TURKS SAYS CHIEF

Report Given Out In Berlin Substantiates Rumors That Big Military Program Has Been Set In Motion.

CITY OF VILNA DOOMED

Russians Continue to Lose Ground In Courland, But Claim Gains In Galicia— No Change In West.

Berlin, Sept. 20 (by wireless to Tuckerton, N J)—A message from Constantinople, as given out here today by the Overseas news agency, quotes Enver Pasha Turkish minister of war, as saying that a great German army was to go to Turkey

The news agency says

"A Constantinople telegram states that, at a review of troops held in honor of Duke Johann Albrecht, of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, commander in chief of the Turkish forces at the Dardanelles, Enver Pasha said the presence of the duke was the forerunner to the arrival of a great German army."

London, Sept. 18.—The city of Vilna is now virtually invested on three sides. The troops of Field Marshal von Mackensen have reached a point near Villeka, 37 miles southeast of the city. The fall of Vilna would place in possession of the Germans a considerable section of the railroad to Petrograd, a portion of which between Dvinsk and Vilna they already hold.

On the southern end of the battle line the Russians continue to gain successes, their latest achievements being the capture of 1,300 men along the Stripa. Little activity is reported from the center of the line, where a readjustment is expected following Field Marshal von Mackensen's capture of Pinsk.

Russian advanced positions have been taken in an attack on the Dvinska bridgehead, and the Russian front has been broken through to the south at several points between Vilna and the Niemen river, it was officially announced by German army headquarters today.

Reports that the Austrians and Germans have decided to initiate a new offensive campaign are multiplying, but there is little concrete evidence concerning the direction which it may be expected to take.

Cabling from Rotterdam, several correspondents assert they have reasons to believe the central powers have not only decided to strike a heavy blow but have already put under way the preliminary movements.

Objective Not Known.

The objective of the new campaign is generally believed to be either in Italy or Serbia. Apparently there has not been any great concentration of troops along the Danube and Save rivers. Considerable activity has been displayed along this front recently. Austrian attempts to cross the rivers have been checked and, according to official reports from Nish, Serbian artillery has destroyed fortified works on the banks of the river.

It is felt here that the Balkan problem has reached a critical stage. The Turco-Bulgarian agreement, coupled with the announcement of Premier Radoslavoff, of Bulgaria, that public opinion was opposed to any attack on Turkey, seems to have settled the attitude of the Bulgarians, at least so long as the Dardanelles remain closed to the entente powers.

There probably will be no further development in the conscription movement until parliament meets again next week.

Clearing Out of Vilna.

A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd says.

"The fate of Vilna hangs in the balance. The latest letters received from there state that cannonading is heard without interruption day and night. Bomb dropping aeroplanes are constant visitors. Three of them have been brought down

"The evacuation of government institutions has been completed and factories are being removed Thousands of workmen already have left. The supply of sugar has been exhausted and the price of various commodities has doubled. Newspapers have suspended publication"

SAY KAISER WILL ANNEX CONQUESTS

Lausanne Gazette Reports Action Will Be Taken to Facilitate Civil Government In Territory.

Geneva, Sept. 20, (via Paris).—The Lausanne Gazette says it has learned that the German government has decided to issue a declaration annexing to the German empire the occupied territories in France and Belgium.

The Gazette says this measure has been determined upon for the near future, because it now appears impossible that the war will be ended, as had been hoped, before winter. According to this newspaper, the German government intends to organize the conquered territory from a political and administrative standpoint, which is expected to strengthen Germany's moral position. Civil administration has been slowly replacing military rule in the occupied regions and, the Gazette continues, "this process will be extended methodically.

NOTED BISHOP DIES.

San Diego, Cal., Sept. 18.—Rev. Thomas J. Conaty, for many years bishop of the Catholic diocese of Los Angeles, and Monterey, died today in a cottage at Coronado, where he had been for the last week. Bishop Conaty's health had steadily declined since his arrival at Coronado, and his death was not unexpected.

Elbert Bede Says:

Humility is all right for the other fellow to have.

All cats imagine they can sing—and in that respect they are like men.

A girl's castle in the air is sometimes built of bricks of ice cream.

It is easy to fool a woman—if it wasn't, how would the men get married?

If you can't laugh at the story your friend has told, at least don't say, "Well, I heard it this way."

If brain fag was the only way of dying, we know a lot of people who would be classed with the immortals.

A woman may marry a man for his money and then find that she is getting less than the minimum wage.

Probably more than half the people in the world will be more diligently on the other fellow's row than on their own.

No matter how angelic a man may appear before marriage, after the wedding the wife will learn that a man's for all that.

When you attempt to throw dust in the other fellow's eyes, be sure that the wind is in the right direction, lest it blow back and blind you instead.

We are afraid that some of these suffragettes, if woman's suffrage becomes universal, will try to take the right of suffrage away from the men.

The young lad without a ticket to the circus who wouldn't crawl under the tent if he got a chance, is lacking in some of the fundamentals of a normal boy.

The married man knows there is not the slightest truth in the old saying about a woman not having birthday anniversaries after she passes 25. He knows that he has to buy a present for her every year just the same.

A tablet supposed to have been engraved a 1000 years before the writing of the book of Genesis, has been unearthed and translated. The translator claims (and few will dispute him) that the book says that it was Noah and not Eve who plucked the forbidden fruit. That's about the way it usually turns out when man tries to blame anything of this sort onto woman.

RUNNING THE PAPER

Everybody thinks they can run a newspaper better than the benighted souls who have been placed by Providence in that unenviable position. Maybe it is because the editor's faults are glaring ones—out in the open in black and white—or, possibly, it is just a queer quirk of human nature, and the job is so easy, anyway. Running the paper is sort of a side line with of people. They offer advice in their spare moments with the same spirit as they play golf or pinochle. One would have the editor a militant suffragist, another demands that he rail against women voting. The prohibitionists can't see how any decent person can be for the regulated saloons and accuse him of selling out to the liquor interests if he takes that side, while the "wets" say he is being intimidated by the churches and ruled by the "drys" if he is opposed to the saloons. The Democrats say the paper is a "party rag" if the editor is Republican in his sympathies, and the Republicans stop their subscriptions if he comes out for a Democrat. If the editor is for anything the antis condemn him, and vice versa. If he takes a stand he is trying to dictate to the community. If he doesn't take a stand he is a mollycoddle and a jellyfish. He is a crank, a reformer, a fanatic, a four-flusher, a crook, a disturber of the peace, or just a plain idiot, according as he meets with the desires of his subscribers or goes against them. And there you are. The average man never thinks of the hours of toil—down-right, soul-sweating toil it takes to get out a paper. He never thinks of the worries, the trials, the tribulations every editor must undergo. Some of them are so unappreciative of his efforts to boost their town and make money for them, that they will not even contribute the price of a subscription. Just remember this. The editor, apart from the perfectly laudable desire to make a decent living for himself and his family, has only the good of the community at heart. If he disagrees with you on any subject political, moral, or educational, you and not he may be wrong.

Give us that news item.

PULL THE CORK

When the editor approaches the average citizen in the quest of news he is invariably told that the citizen "donesn't know a thing" and that answer is about as near the truth as the nations of Europe are to effecting a prompt settlement of their differences. Everybody knows something, and most people know a lot of somethings that are worth telling and would make breezy and newsy stories, but they just build it up in the walls of their dome and forget that it is there. Sometimes the editor is able to pry it loose word for word until he gets the story, when it would be the easiest and simplest thing in the world to let it all out in a rush. Pull the cork brother, and let out the contents of your intellectual bottle and we will pass it on to others who are thirsty for news. You know a-plenty if you only know that you know it.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

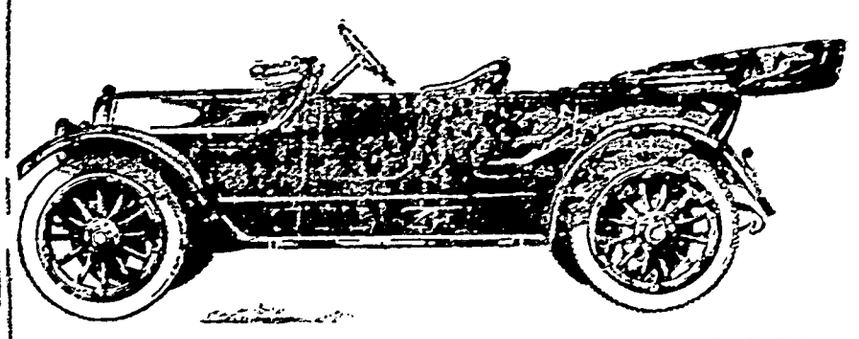
THE OVERLAND LEADS



Five-Passenger Touring Car--Model 83
$750. f.o.b. Toledo

Advantages—For Your Wife

Many a car that looks good from a superficial examination is often found to be very incomplete and lacking in many conveniences, after it has been purchased

Nowadays all cars run but some run with considerable less bother than others.

In this respect the Overland has many desirable advantages---advantages that will appeal particularly to your wife.

All electric control buttons are located on the steering column---within natural reach. The operation of these buttons start, stop and light the car. Nothing could be simpler.

The clutch and brake pedals are adjustable to any angle. Another convenience.

Also, they "give" with practically no effort. One does not have to strain in order to apply the brake or disengage the clutch.

The steering wheel is large and turns very easily. Strength is not a bit necessary. A young girl can handle it.

The shifting levers are handy and shift readily. They are placed so that they in no way interfere with either the driver or other occupant of the front seat.

All storm curtains can be put on in a few minutes, without getting out of the car, They are arranged so that they almost fall in place.

These few things are indicative of Overland comforts and conveniences. Your wife will appreciate them.

Compared with other popular priced cars, the Overland has many decided advantages.

REAPERS AT WORK ON LAST YEAR'S BATTLEFIELD FIND GRAVE

"ONLY AN ARTILLERY DUEL" IS INFERNAL

By Alexander Powell in Scribner's.

There are no words between the covers of the dictionary which can convey any adequate idea of what one of these great artillery actions is like. One has to see—and hear—it

Buildings of brick and stone collapse as though they were built of cards. Whole towns are razed to the ground as a city of tents would be leveled by a cyclone Trees are snapped off like carrots. Gaping holes as large as cottage cellars suddenly appear in the fields and in the stone-paved roads. Geysers of smoke and earth shoot high into the air The fields are strewn with the shocking remains of what had once been men; bodies without heads or arms or legs, legs and arms and heads without bodies. Dead horses, broken wagons, bent and shattered equipments are everywhere.

The noise is beyond all description—yes, beyond all conception. It is like a close-by clap of thunder which, instead of lasting for a fraction of a second, lasts for hours. There is no diminution to the hell of sound, not even a momentary cessation The ground heaves and shudders beneath your feet. You find it difficult to breathe Your head throbs until you think that it is about to burst. You feel as though your ear drums had been shattered The very atmosphere palpitates to the tremendous detonations. The howl of the shell storm passing overhead gives you the feeling that the skies are falling Compared with it, the roar of the cannon at Gettysburg must have sounded like the popping of firecrackers.

Inconceivably awe-inspiring and terrifying as is a modern artillery action, one eventually becomes accustomed to it. But I have yet to meet the person who could say with perfect truthfulness that he was indifferent to the fire of the German siege cannon. I have twice been under the fire of the German siege guns—in Antwerp last October and in Dunkirk in early May—and I hope with all my heart that I shall never have the experience again.

Peter's Capital an Outpost.

From Minneapolis Journal

Petrograd like Tipperary, is a long ways off It is on the Finnish border, on swamps taken from Sweden by Peter the Great who described it as a window opening on Europe

Should the Germans capture Petrograd, they would score a great political victory, but Russia they would not have touched The real national capital, the original seat of Russian power, is Moscow, 400 miles south And back of Moscow spreads the true Muscovy, while south of it stretch the fertile plains, leagues upon leagues of them, on which live the tens of millions of the subjects of the Great White Czar

Moscow has over 1,000,000 inhabitants and is the center of the manufacturing area which supplies the armies. The czars are crowned in Moscow To Moscow they go when they wish to appeal to the nation. But if Napoleon, taking Moscow, was nowhere near the conquest of Russia, assuredly Von Hindenburg, taking Petrograd, would be still far off from such a consummation

Western civilization scarcely realizes how far east true Russia lies. Poland, Lithuania, Courland, Esthonia are Russia's western conquests. But the real Russia does not commence until the marshes of Pinsk are crossed. It lies beyond the Ukraine, the Dneiper is its western boundary, Smolensk its western outpost. The Volga and the Don are the real Russian rivers The black soil that raises the Russian wheat and furnishes the millions upon millions of peasants is east of Kiev, south of Moscow There teems Russia, far inland, far eastward, almost untouchable by western force of arms.

Loss of Warsaw, of Riga, even of Petrograd would deprive Russia of no great strength She still would have within her the sources of her wealth and power She still has the hordes which she can arm and throw in wave after wave upon her western enemies

Napoleon at Smolensk and again at Moscow would fain have opened negotiations for peace. The czar refused or answered not at all The Russian people were aroused and could not be kept back. Today the Russian people are aroused as they have not been for 100 years.

It is a terrible and a majestic spectacle. One hundred and forty millions of people have awakened out of sleep. For them the war has but commenced Their fatalism is not stirred The world may see them driven back into their east, or it may see them driving westward in a slow but gradually irresistible return The day that Bismarck feared and foresaw has arrived

Factories on the Farm.

From the Atlanta Constitution

The Charlotte Observer, speaking of new features in farming operations in North Carolina, of the prosperous stock and dairy farms there whose "money-making facts have put the farmers to thinking," tells of the profitable "farm factory" of L. Shuford, an extensive north state farmer.

On the farm a spring branch that had been wasting its life in idle song was harnessed and is now manufacturing ice cream, producing block ice, operating a creamery and furnishing light and power for farm and household purposes. And all it costs the farmer is the trouble of turning on the water and shutting it off."

That is farming on the scientific principle and making every edge cut And other progressive farmers are following Mr. Shuford's lead, with the result that the farm-factory idea is growing It is merely the turning of waste material into dollars and cents.

The Observer also states, on good authority, that in a short time the entire Mecklenburg section will become strictly a grass, grain and cattle country

Even on a limited scale the "farm-factory" pays its way. Through this agency the farmer becomes a manufacturer as well as a producer, and one enterprise of this kind is certain to be supplemented by others

SOUVENIR COINS ARE CALLED IN BY BANKS

Berlin—(by mail.)—The Imperial bank has invented a new device for increasing its gold stock. It is aimed at the many memorial gold coins which people either lay aside or wear as jewelry Thus not a few German women wear brooches or bracelets with three gold coins of 1888, called the "Three Kaiser year," bearing the heads of three emperors who ruled over Germany in that year. Coins of 1913, in commemoration of the present emperor's 25th year on the throne, are similarly treasured Coins of this kind have not been turned into the Imperial bank out of patriotism, because the owners think that they show their patriotism best by holding on to them. Now the bank is inviting them to surrender the treasured coins and take receipts for them, and promises to return to them similar coins within a year after peace.

CHILDREN OVER PLAY AS WELL AS OVER WORK

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

While we are considering the overworked child and attempting to relieve his condition by legislation we should not forget the overplayed child.

The number of children employed in factories in small in comparison with those occupying themselves in school and at play. But every physician and many mothers know that the strain of the amusements of their children is destroying their nervous and physical stamina as effectively as though they had to spend eight or nine or 10 hours in a mill.

The young undeveloped body is overstrained. At night, after a day of school and play, the boy or girl is irritable. There is bickering between brothers and sisters. A remark that would have excited no comment in the morning precipitates a quarrel, and the parents find it difficult to keep the peace. The day ends, too often, in unpleasantness where it should close in calm companionship.

The 7-year-old boy, allowed to play at will in the company of other children who race up and down the street or over the lawn, may strike his little brother when they come together in the house without being vicious. His whole system is upset and it cannot recover its equilibrium without long rest. If he does not get sleep enough at night he wakes in the morning, still on edge, and begins the day with more flingings of his arms and apparently unreasonable tantrums.

But the same children, when kept quietly at home, and free from undue excitement, behave like different creatures. They are affectionate, amenable to reason and harmonious. Every mother is familiar with the transformation which such a day makes in her children and a few of them understand the reason for it. But they all wonder why the young boys and girls cannot behave every day as they behave on their days of unruffled nerves when the strain on them has not been greater than they could bear.

It is possible to rescue the overworked child by legislation limiting the number of hours during which he can be employed But little short of a social revolution will lift the overplayed child from the conditions which are retarding his development and planting the seeds of greater weakness in the next generation.

Pocket Knives.

From the Paris (Mo.) Mercury

What becomes of all pocket knives is as great a mystery as what becomes of all the pins. Sometimes when long shadows fall across the yard, when the night birds are calling and the baby across the way has squalled his last squall until the next, we sit idly musing, recalling one by one the knives we have known and loved. The first was a Barlow with one blade; with it came gladness such as the world can never know again. The second was an iron handled "I. X. L." with a razor edge, and dignity was added to joy. We swapped unsight, unseen with "Old Man Abbey," were swindled outrageously, contracted the trading habit and all sorts and conditions followed. None lingered. At 16 we acquired a four-bladed Westernholm that would split a hair; at 20 we owned a pearl-handled boudoir blade, which we carried in a buckskin sack and used only for manicuring purposes, or to lend casually to a girl we pestered, and at 25 a bearded bard, we were presented by the late Adolphus Busch, in recognition of services to him and his, with a beautiful knife encased in a burnt bone handle, containing a corkscrew attachment with his picture hidden cunningly in one end and that of a strange lady with no clothes on in the other. She was very beautiful, even if not particular, but went the way of all others. The seven ages of man, the ideals and aspirations distinctive of each, are marked by the pocket knife he owns, loves for a time and loses. At 40 or more, mewling again any old sort of a knife that will clean a pipe or cap a bottle will do, but even they won't stick.

Just What We Haven't Got.

From the Wall Street Journal.

Chicago's mayor at San Francisco let out a shriek that could be heard as the shot of the embattled farmers, calling for a high tariff to shut out imports from Europe. And imports are exactly what we want most

OLD MEN REMAIN HEROES OF WAR

Edward R. Bushnell, in the Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

Another aged commander enters the limelight of the European war. Prince Leopold of Bavaria, who will be 70 years old on his next birthday, is the man who, technically at least, has captured Warsaw. And the taking of the Polish capital, after the failure of the two previous campaigns, is unquestionably the crowning military achievement of the Teutonic arms

The advanced age of Prince Leopold makes him a fit companion of the military commanders on both sides of this fray. Field Marshal von Hindenburg, who led the great semi-circular sweep around Warsaw to the northeast came out of retirement to take command of the eastern army. And he is now 68 years old. The dash to the southeast to cut off the Russian retreat is led by another famous fighter who according to his age, ought to be on the retired list He is Marshal August von Mackensen and he is 66 years old Thus these three military heroes of the German nation who have driven the Russians out of most of Poland and hurled them back over the Carpathians, average nearly 68 years old

Somewhat the same situation exists in the allied armies on the western front. General Joffre at the head of the French forces, has already turned his 70th year, while his three leading subordinates, Foch, Castienau and Gallieni, are all in their 60s. General French and Earl Kitchener of the English forces have also passed their 60th birthdays, while Count Cardona, of Italy has also lived more than three-score years

Von Hindenburg and Von Mackensen have already had their share of applause for their military exploits. Von Hindenburg was Germany's first military hero of the war when he defeated the Russians in their first great clash on the eastern border and took enough prisoners to harvest Germany's crops. Von Mackensen achieved his fame when he came to the defense of hard-pressed Austria and led the expedition that drove Russia out of Galicia and recaptured Przemysl

It is only fair therefore, that Prince Leopold should have his turn

Prince Leopold and his Bavarian troops delivered the finishing blow in front of Warsaw, and he is probably now occupying the czar's palace in the Polish capital The aged prince has until the present been rather inconspicuous in this war His nephew, Prince Rupprecht, has played a much more prominent part The selection of Prince Leopold to lead the Teutonic forces in the center was an honor awarded him by the kaiser He was called from Munich for this very purpose, the kaiser apparently wishing the Bavarian prince to represent him when Warsaw was entered.

The Bavarian troops had not achieved a great deal in the prosecution of the war, and since their state has suffered probably the most from the war in the east it was entirely fitting that they should have been the ones selected to force the fortresses in front of Warsaw.

Prince Leopold is a veteran in military experience. His military education was received in the Austro-Hungarian army before Bavaria became part of Germany. He took a prominent part in the Austro-Prussian-Italian war of 1866. He fought entirely through that war and came off without a scratch.

Big Guns of a Century Ago.

From Dundee Advertiser

It would scarcely appear feasible that a shot weighing 800 pounds could have been employed 100 years ago, yet the Turks, who used the largest cannon in Europe, actually used guns of such caliber at that time. When Sir J Duckworth passed the Dardanelles to attack Constantinople in 1807 his fleet was dreadfully shattered by the immense shot thrown from the batteries. The Royal George, of 110 guns, was nearly sunk by only one shot, while another cut the main mast of the Windsor Castle almost in two, a single shot knocked two ports of the Thunderer into one, the Repulse (24 guns) had its wheel shot away and 24 men killed and wounded by a shot, the ship being saved only by the most wonderful exertions. The heaviest shot which struck our ships was of granite, weighing 800 pounds, and was 36 inches in diameter One such shot, to the astonishment of the tars, stove in the whole starboard bow of the Active, and, having crushed this immense mass of timber, the shot rolled ponderously aft, the crew standing aghast at the singular spectacle. One of these guns was cast in brass. It was composed of two parts, its breach resting against massive stonework, and the difficulty of the charging such a monster would not allow of its being fired more than once.

How the War Began.

R. Spillano in Commerce and Finance.

It was a year ago that the emperor of Austria, doddering remnant of a decayed and disreputable family, declared war on the king of Serbia, a "monarch" whose great-grandfather was a pig sticker

Out of that act has developed the most vicious, terrible and costly conflict in the world's history Eleven nations are at war. More are likely to be drawn in

The end seems further off now than it did six months ago.

In killed, wounded, missing and prisoners the losses aggregate 10,000,000.

In 12 months the science of slaughter has advanced by leaps and bounds.

With another year what would the totals be?

Germany, France, Belgium, Russia, Turkey, Italy, England and Austria are fighting to the death, but the doddering old emperor who started the war no longer is waging battle against the king whose great-grandfather was a pigsticker. In the horrors that have come out of the war the pretext that served to precipitate the conflict has become but a memory.

DISGRACE OF BEING CALLED "HIGH BROW"

From Harper's Magazine.

The worst fault, however, into which our ageleng service of mediocrity has led us is a weak-kneed, pusillanimous deference to mediocrity itself The college has borrowed the vice from everyday American life. For example, the most deadly weapon in the yellow journalist's armory is the term "highbrow."

A politician may be called "grafter," "boss," or even "muckraker," and escape unscathed; but if he is denounced as a "highbrow," and the label sticks, his career is ended A playwright or a novelist may be written down as "cheap," he may be said to plagiarize, he may be shown to be vicious and unclean, without serious damage to his reputation; but let him be proved a "highbrow" and the public will fly from him as if he were a book agent.

Now the widespread American belief that knowledge makes a man impractical is responsible for some of this curious odium but far more is due to our servile deference to mediocrity The weight of public opinion is usually against the expert, the specialist, the thinker, the exceptional man in general, for public opinion whether right or wrong, is always mediocre; and there are few among us who do not in this respect yield somehow, somewhere, to public opinion.

The doctor distrusts the advanced political theorist, the politician distrusts the advanced dramatist, the dramatist sneers at the innovations of science. We are all made timid by the enormous majorities which uphold mediocrity

The British Soldier.

From the Review of Reviews.

Toward the close of the first phase of the combat of nations, the quick crossing of the channel brought the student of peoples at war face to face with contrasts; conditions in England appeared to be the reverse of those in France and Germany.

A picturesque circumstance at once compelled sharp comparison. London swarmed with soldiers. For every soldier seen on the streets of Paris or Berlin, one might count at least 100 in the British capital. No restaurant was without several military customers. Khaki-clad privates were seen strolling in all public parks where the people of London take the air. The music halls were never without a bevy of officers.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the physical appearance of the majority of these British soldiers. Perhaps one-half of the thousands of these volunteers, personally studied, were superb examples of vigorous and robust manhood. The Scotch especially were magnificent specimens. Superior to all in their physical fitness, vitality, and bearing, were the soldiers and officers from Canada, although comparatively few of these were seen, most of them, it was said, were not at Aldershot or in London.

At a rough estimate, one would say that at least two-thirds, perhaps three-fourths, of all the soldiers and officers observed in England during March of 1915 were excellent military material,—this includes the one-half of the whole who are exceptionally fine-looking men The remainder were inferior in stature and all other evidences of physical strength

It was frankly admitted by well-informed Britishers interested in the war that the officers were not well trained You couldn't expect anything else, could you said one of these "They have had six months' training But I'm filled with cheerful optimism and you all find that they will turn out all right"

General Robertson.

Alfred G Gardiner in The Atlantic

The remarkable fact about General Robertson is that he has won his way to distinction by the qualities of his mind He has brought into the British army the rare element of abstract thinking—that learning of which we in the past have had too little and the Germans appear to have too much That is a statement which goes without saying It is said that although born in Lincolnshire he comes of that Scottish stock the Gordon Highlanders is memorable to every reader of Scottish And he has seen active service in India and in South Africa and was wounded in Chitral But it is in the lecture room and the study, and not in the field that the youth who enlisted in the Sixteenth Lancers more than 30 years ago has won his unique distinction He discovered a genius for languages, including Indian dialects, and this paved his way to notice. And once he had got his foot on the ladder his progress was irresistible for he revealed an understanding of the science of war that impressed all who came in contact with him, and his ultimate appointment as commandant of the staff college at Comberley gave the army the rare experience of an incomparable lecturer Today there is no officer in the British army who is listened to with such respect as the former private of the Sixteenth Lancers. As chief of the staff to Sir John French he is the power behind the throne.

The Road to Laughter Town.

Would ye learn the road to Laughtertown,
O ye who have lost the way?
Would ye have young heart, though your hair be gray,
Go learn from a little child each day
Go serve his wants and play his play
And catch the lilt of his laughter gay
And follow his dancing feet as they stray,
For he knows the road to Laughtertown,
O ye who have lost the way

FAILURE AND SUCCESS.

From Collier's

The universal tragedy of mankind lies in the discrepancy between one's ideals and deeds What we wish to do, what we mean to do, and then—what we actually do! Or more often, alas! what is left undone. Here is the tragedy of aspiration which withers and dwindles into inactivity or mere expediency

It was Hamlet's tragedy it has been the tragedy of every person who has ever walked this earth, from the half-naked savage up If this were all it would mean that there is nothing to be gained by high ambitions and noble purposes. But it is not all. There is a vast difference between one who aims at a lofty mark and one who never aims at all Here are the two alternatives, to take life in glum passivity just because it is difficult and bitter, or to hurl oneself into the struggle with such ardor and courage that even tual defeat is never considered. It is the attitude of the good soldier ordered out on a "forlorn hope," to do his best while there is a breath left in him

The wise philosopher—and everyone of us must have his philosophy of life whether he consciously formulates it or not—aims higher than he can ever hope to attain. "The desire of the moth for the star" may never help the little creature to reach it, but at least it will lift him into pure air above the paltry and sinister flickerings about him. For here is hope which can mitigate the tragedy of living for all; true success lies not in attainment, but in the sincere and unremitting struggle to attain.

From the Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

If Shakespeare had asked "What's in a number?" as well as "What's in a name?" and pursued that inquiry he would have found an endless field for investigation There is something uncanny and mysterious in the character of figures, the strange things you can do with them and the way certain attributes recur in their use.

The numbers 3, 7 and 9 furnish the most interesting study. Numbers 3 and 7 have their good points, but in potency and versatility they have to take a back seat when 9 has the stage. No. 7 was the favorite in the bible. To it we are indebted for seven days in the week, the seven golden candlesticks, the seven lean years that devoured the seven fat ones and the seven lean cattle that made a meal on the seven fat kine.

The Rule of Three is a nightmare in every child's education. As his education progresses he becomes acquainted with the Three Graces, "Three Men in a Boat," "The Three Musketeers." It's on the ball field, though, that number 3 shines. Here find the three basemen, the three outfielders, three strikes and three outs. And pursuing this line of reckoning shouldn't a man get his base on three balls instead of four? Then, there are such trivial things as three meals a day, the third degree, the three estates and three cheers.

But you can't begin to manipulate 3 and 7 as you can 9. Take the multiplication table for example. Everywhere the product of 9 results in a 9. It doesn't make any difference what you multiply with or how many times you repeat or change the figures. Just try it. Multiply 9 by 2 and you get 18. Add 1 and 8 and there you have 9. Multiply 3 by 9 and you have 27. Again 2 plus 7 equals 9. There is no variation until you multiply 9 by 11. This gives you 99 and apparently an inconsistency. But add the two digits 9 and 9 and you get 18, and again 1 plus 8 equals 9. This process may be carried out to an indeterminable length and the results are always the same. Pick out any number at random For example, 4,563. Multiply it by 9 and you get 41,067. Add the digits and you have 18, add these digits again and 9 reappears.

Now try another Take any row of figures at random, reverse their order and subtract the less from the greater. Always the total will be either 9 or a multiple of 9. For example, take 3,459, which reversed reads, 9,543. Subtract 3,549 from 9,453 and you have 6,084. Add the digits and the result is 18, a multiple of 9. The same result follows, no matter whether the numbers are raised by squares or by cubes.

Here is another way by which the number 9 exerts its strange powers. Write down at random any number, add its digits and then subtract the sum of these digits from the original number. The sum of the digits thus obtained will always be either 9 or a multiple of 9. Thus take 7,325. Adding the digits gives 17. Subtracting 17 from 7,325 leaves 7,308. Add the digits and you get 18, and adding 1 and 8 gives 9.

GOOD BREADS.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Boston brown bread—Ingredients, two cupfuls of white cornmeal, two cupfuls of yellow meal, two cupfuls of graham flour, one cupful of molasses, one cupful of sour milk and one of sweet milk, two cupfuls of boiling water, salt to taste and one teaspoonful of soda.

Mix the two meals, the flour and the salt well together, add the boiling water Put the sweet milk and molasses together and add them to first things. Then disolve the soda in the sour milk and put these in. Put the mixture into a round covered tin bucket and steam it for three hours, uncover and bake in the oven for half an hour. This bread may be eaten hot or cold and be toasted when stale. In New England baked beans go with it.

Whole wheat bread—Take a fresh yeast cake and dissolve it in two tablespoonfuls of tepid water. Put a pint of milk into a bowl; add to it a pint of boiling water and let it stand until it is lukewarm, then put in the dissolved yeast, salt to taste, and enough whole flour to make a thick batter. Beat the batter with a spoon for 15 minutes when it will be in a liquid state. Again add flour sufficient for a good bread dough, turn this on the board and knead a few minutes. Return the dough to the pan and let it rise until light—for about three hours. Mold into small loaves, let rise again and bake for 35 or 45 minutes in a moderate oven.

Children's apple bread—An old-fashioned dish for children is prepared as follows. One quart of cornmeal, one pint of ripe chopped apples, three tablespoonfuls of butter, a pinch of salt and one and one-half cups of water; sweeten as desired and bake as ordinary cornbread.

Raised cornbread—Ingredients, one cupful of fine sifted cornmeal, one and a half cupfuls of milk, two eggs, one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of sugar, salt.

Scald the milk and pour it over the meal. Let cool and then add the butter (melted,) salt, sugar, baking powder and yolks of eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Bake in a flat pan in a hot oven for 30 minutes.

Gluten bread—Pour a pint of boiling water into a pint of boiling milk; add a teaspoonful of butter and salt to taste. Let the liquid stand until lukewarm; then add an egg, well beaten, a quarter of a yeast cake disolved in tepid water, and enough gluten flour to make a soft batter. Cover the batter and stand it in a warm place to rise; then add enough gluten flour to make a soft dough and knead it well. Form several small loaves and let rise again. Bake for an hour.

Draft Horse Is Doomed.

From Chicago News.

The heavy draft horse is doomed. He will not vanish suddenly, but his hour has struck. Motor trucks already are displacing him in cities. The cheap farm tractor will do the same in the country. In a few decades the great, magnificent brutes will be little more than a memory. Their places will be taken by bloodless machines, that never whinny greetings to a kind master, never search one's pockets for sugar—and never break their legs on icy pavements or drag out a friendless old age under the whips of stupid, greedy drivers.

When one thinks of these last considerations, the horseless age doesn't seem so gloomy as prophecy. But if man is wise there will be no horseless age.

If man has any real wisdom—and that belief, though often disappointed, never dies—the horse will be promoted to the position of humanity's chief pet and plaything, but always with a substratum of usefulness which will keep him from degenerating into a mere toy. The draft horse, the trotter—even the "general purpose animal"—may go, but the saddle horse ought to stay and thrive.

Killing Christians in Turkey.

Constantinople Correspondent of Boston Transcript.

A German official recently told an American who was traveling in the country that they were out to eliminate the Christian races in Turkey. They are succeeding and there is none to raise a protest. Turkey is now free to satisfy her thirst for blood and destruction and to carry out the suggestions made by her masters in Europe. Never in Moslem history has there been such a riot of crime and carnival of murder aimed at the annihilation of the American and Greek races whose only fault is that they are not Moslems.

Among literary works planned, but never written, have been a "Life of Hazlitt," by Stevenson; "History of the Wars in Flanders," by Sir Richard Steele; "Life of Talleyrand," by Thackeray, and "A History of Our Vernacular Literature," by Isaac Disraeli.

Unlike Mr. Presbrey and his somber predecessors, he called a spade a spade, and with that spade he dug a very deep grave for bigotry, winsomely engaging a whole churchful of unconscious bigots to assist him in burying the dead.

The silencing of the bell' Violins flutes and 'cellors—without the brass and cymbals—in the choir' Joyous, inspiring anthem' Twenty-minute sermons and cheerful texts' Oratory without thirdlies, and fourthlies, and ninthlies! Golf on week days and a genuine interest in the Sunday school nine! Potted plants in the vestibule and fresh posies on the reading stand! Broiled lobster instead of fried chicken—when he could get it' Man alive!

And congregations at both services on the Sabbath that tried the capacity of the building' And, most wonderful of all if the regular pewholders were not in their seats by five minutes past 11, the busy ushers were instructed to conduct the standing overflow that lined the walls to the cushioned pews of the tardy'

A long way back in this narrative I said that Mr Presbrey was a good man and that he would bear watching. The proof is at hand He has become a book agent A side issue, of course. His preparatory school for boys was not what you would call self-sustaining So, if you didn't have boys to send him, you could do the next best thing by subscribing for that enlightening set of books known as "The Great Masters of the Pulpit," 12 volumes, calf or cloth, with gilt edges and copper plate portraits, at $2 50 or $4, just as your fancy for covers ran, $5 down and the balance in weekly installments. Your name on the subscription list was always solicited, because its presence there was an asset not to be despised in the effort to introduce the books into all respectable and intellectual homes It was particularly desired that you be among those at the top of the list. If your name was there, everyone else in town was sure to know that the books were well worth possessing No home should be without "The Great Masters of the Pulpit." You felt rather sorry for Mr. Presbrey, so you subscribed—for the $2.50 set. He was so successful in the placing of these books in Corinth and nearby villages that, after a month's trial at the work, he felt encouraged to add Dickens and Thackeray and Shakespeare to his stock But not Balzac or Gautier It was much too early for the effort to introduce those French masters into the homes of the Corinthians The Rev Mr. King had not been there long enough

Mr. Blagden led the way down the aisle to the pew that once had belonged to his great grandfather The name in the corner of the seat had never been changed The word "Blagden" was there, just as it had been ordered by the far sighted and thrifty ancestor, whose penuriousness took in the probability that some future Blagden might aspire to different initials; moreover, it was ridiculous to expect that the first born male in each generation would have to be named So-and-So, simply because of loyalty to a church pew

It is not the purpose or the desire of the writer to devote a chapter to the description of this spring morning service in the First Congregational church, of Corinth We will merely glance over the congregation, absorb a few stray words from the lips of the pastor, commend the music, and be back on our way to the house on the hill, vaguely satisfied with the new Corinthian era.

We find the church filled to overflowing. Not one of the old pewholders is absent. Each and every one got there on time without being called by the bell. In fact, a goodly number were there ahead of time There was in each breast the ever-impending dread that some brash outsider would sneak in and confiscate his seat. And it's a very awkward matter, getting one out of your pew after he's once got into it. You can't do it without words, and the other fellow is quite apt to have something to say about it himself.

Very stiff and erect sat Mr Blagden, looking neither to right nor left, but straight at the fervid, impassioned, convincing face of the young minister who had wrought so many changes. No man dozed—never' The spell was upon all those within the sound of his voice. In the old days one might have been supported in the belief that Mr Presbrey's hearers regarded the passive mood as the only true channel through which to absorb sanctification; hence, they slept But young Mr King, soulful and forceful, had them in his grip. They just couldn't sleep. He was fighting satan in practical, Twentieth century way, not allegorically

His sermon on this eventful morning had to do with "Hell" He spoke of the modern, up-to-date hell, the sort that we see every day of our lives if we take the trouble to look about us. It was somewhat of a new idea to the people of Corinth They had come to believe that hell was a long way off Mr. King made it uncomfortably near for those who listened.

Here are a few of the surprising things that filtered into the ears of the Corinthians and gave them something to think about for days.

"Chistianity is a science, and we've got to treat it as such It isn't a theory . . . You can't conquer sin by sneering at it. . . . Everything else in the world is going ahead, the church isn't. . . . The Salvation Army and the Y. M C. A. know how to fight. They know where to hit and how to hit. . . . You can't pat the devil on the back all week and call him 'old chap,' and then turn around and surprise him by trying to thrash him on the Sabbath. . . . We have one day of rest in the seven. He never takes a day off. . . . If you expect to defeat the Black Prince, you've got to come out of your shells and fight in the open. You'll have the advantage of him there. . . . The world is very large and very clever Fossils and mossbacks have no more license for thinking they can fight the world than an octogenarian has for thinking he can fight a youth of 25. That's why, my friends, the church is going around part of the time with a black eye and a grudge. And it is always whining when it gets thrashed. . . . It only fights the devil on Sunday, and then gives him a week to recuperate. And, my friends, his Satanic Majesty doesn't care the snap of his finger for all the Sundays we can crowd into Eternity It's the week days that he's interested in. . . . Fight the devil with love, not bitterness of spirit. He can't find a defense against love. If you try to fight him with scorn as the weapon, you'll get mightily beaten He has too many friends who resent being sneered at—and they're influential, too. . . . I have a great deal of respect for the sincere atheist or agnostic I like a man who is sincere The atheist is never anything less than he pretends to be You can't say as much for the great majority of our professed Christians. Give me a fair and square, upright atheist every day in preference to a weak kneed professing Christian who doesn't stand for anything after he's paid his pew rent and added a half dollar or so of a Sunday to pay for his week's salvation The atheist is a man the wish-washy half hearted sceptical Christian isn't good enough to black his boots You can't get into heaven by paying 50 cents a week on the installment plan Why, the things go in these days, it costs a great deal more than that to get into the other place A man who spends $1 000 a week having a devil of a time, my friends can't balance his account with God for 50 cents or $1. Frock coats and black ties don't make Christians of you Overalls and jumpers will do quite as well No matter which your wear you will have to lay them aside when you start forth to face your Maker You may come to this church in your every day business suits if you choose As a matter of fact, I believe it to be easier to preach salvation to a man in his gray sack suit than it is to try to get at him when he's got on his black regimentals. I wear this long black coat because it is, in a sense, the official robe of my great office I respect it but it doesn't make a Christian of me any more than it makes one of the undertaker I witnessed a negro minstrel parade not long ago. All told, there were more than 40 Prince Albert coats in that procession But those fellows didn't look like preachers So, you see, it isn't a question of clothes I believe we'd all feel better for it if we stuck a small, fragrant nosegay in the lapels of our coats next Sunday, just to prove to ourselves that church going is a joyous, not a grim undertaking I do not like to see a man singing Hallelujah with a long and doleful face Sing it gladly' That's what it means."

At the conclusion of the 25-minute sermon and while the congregation was fairly shouting the rare old hymn Eric drew a long breath and looked about him as if suddenly aroused from a sort of stupor He had listened in frank astonishment during the first part of the sermon, toward the end he allowed himself to be carried away by the earnestness of the young minister He was disappointed when the extraordinary discourse came to an end He wanted more Here was a man with a gospel so broad, and convincing and brave that his heart warmed toward him at once This was not the stern gospel that Mr Presbrey had fairly jammed down his throat in the old days. He had the feeling that he was going to like Mr King as a man as a friend as a brother It would be quite impossible to ever look upon him as a relentless arbiter who prodded one with texts and dogmas until the soul sickened No this man's religion smiled, he would have a warm hand clasp.

"I'll bet he's a fine chap," whispered Eric in Mary's ear She nodded her head but frowned slightly in the fear that his very worldly estimate of the minister might have reached the ears of Mr Blagden

Out of the corners of their eyes they glanced at their uncle's face It was beaming it was rapt

'Wonders have been performed," murmured Eric Then, this quaint thought found expression in a whispered "You can teach an old dog new tricks, after all"

An old habit moved him His gaze wandered as it had done on countless Sundays in other times, to the pew in which Joan Bright and her father always sat.

At the same instant, one of the occupants of that pew turned to look directly into his eyes

Joan Bright was there For one long hazy minute they looked at each other Then a slow even curious smile crept into her face She nodded her head He was too amazed too dazed to respond to her greeting at once She looked away before he could shake off the spell of a possible illusion.

Strangely enough, his interest in the service was gone During the prayer and the benediction he did not take his eyes from the half averted, serene face of the girl across the church It was not until the service came to a close that his mind grasped the fact that she stood beside a tall, handsome young man who held the hymn book with her, while Judge Bright stood detached and apart

With the final "amen," he hurriedly left the seat after a quick apology to his uncle and elbowed his way through the crowd, bent on reaching the door ahead of her.

If he had paused to look at Mary he would have seen the wave of red that spread over her cheek, and the curious narrowing of her eyes. She had been aware of Joan's presence from the moment that young woman entered the church

Just as he reached the vestibule, with craning neck and eager eyes, a hand was laid on his arm.

"She came out of the other door, Eric, to avoid the crowd, I fancy," said the owner of the hand. "She's getting into young Sallonsby's automobile now Funny how times have changed. People used to think it wrong to go to church in a carriage when I was a—"

"So it's you, is it?" demanded Eric harshly

Joan was entering the big red car at the curb. She did not look back. His eyes were upon her He had not glanced at the man who volunteered the information. He knew without looking.

"Yes," said Adam Carr Then he added whimsically "It's always me. Come along with me. Don't wait for your uncle. I have news for you."

Eric, grievously disturbed by Joan's behavior, suffered himself to be led down the steps. At the bottom, he turned to his old friend with a sudden anger that must have attracted the attention of those near at hand.

"I suppose you've had news that he died, just as you said he would?"

Adam did not respond to the angry sarcasm until they were clear of the crowd.

"No," he said, "I have come to notify your uncle that I've given up the chase."

"By heaven, it's high time," cried Eric.

"And to admit that I've been on the wrong track all the time. The fellow I've been chasing all these years turns out not to be Chetwynd at all."

Eric stared. "What is your game now?"

"Simply this. I'm going to let you shoulder the whole business. I know nothing whatever about the affair on the bridge or what transpired afterward."

"You mean that you are going to let me get out of it as best I can'" cried Eric, amazed.

"Let us cross the street. Too crowded on this side. Fine preacher, that. He's making Christians just as they make sardines—I mean, he's packing 'em in the same way."

Once across the street, he resumed the original theme. "My boy, I've come to the conclusion that you killed Chetwynd. No court of justice can convict you of the crime, however The corpus delicti must be established. In other words, the state is obliged to produce the body of the victim in order to prove that he is truly and legally deceased. There must be something beside verbal testimony to show that the man is dead Technicalities are great life savers I once knew of a case in Chicago where a man was sent up for life for murdering his wife The state was required to prove the corpus delicti It produced one of the metatarsal bones and said it was a part of the dead woman's corporal body, although some of the experts declared it to be from the person of a pig But the jury decided it was a part of the woman and convicted the prisoner If it hadn't been for that tiny bone he would have gone scot free. So, in your case there's got to be something to show that Chetwynd is really dead"

"But I will swear that I killed him," said Eric sharply.

"You wouldn't have anything to say about it" said Adam Carr cheerfully. "Your lawyer would see to that He would demand the exhibits, from a to z, among them Chetwynd or a part of him What's a lawyer for if not to attend to such things as that?"

"Is that what you came here to tell me'" demanded Eric

"That, and this I can't afford to be dragged into this thing It means ruin, degradation I merely ask you to assume the entire responsibility Leave me out of it altogether. No one need be the wiser"

"I see," said Eric thoughtfully. They walked along for some distance in silence. Adam was watching his friend out of the corner of his eye.

At the corner below, Eric drew up sharply

"You're justified in asking this of me, Mr Adam," he said, knitting his brows. "You have stood by me, right or wrong I am not so ungrateful that I will drag you down—ruin you, as you say I won't say that I condone or approve the uses to which you have put this unhappy business but that is neither here nor there. If you ask it of me I will tell my story without connecting you with it in any way whatsoever Here's my hand on it. I've tried to dislike you, but I find that I can't."

Adam Carr's face glowed. He uttered a little cry of relief as he clasped the young man's hand.

"That's all I wanted, my lad," he said briskly. "I wanted to see if you were true blue, so far as your friends are concerned. I didn't believe you could go back on me, after you saw what it meant to me. You would have told long ago but for me. Perhaps you don't realize it, but you would have told everything the other day if you hadn't felt that it would be doing me a grave injustice. Well, I know it if you don't We've stood together all these years, my boy, and we'll stand together now. You've got something to confess to Horace, and so have I. My crime is 10,000 times darker than yours. It isn't conscience that's working on me, just plain fatigue. I'm sick and tired of playing with Horace. I don't sleep nights. It's got on my nerves. So, if you don't mind, we'll face him together—this afternoon."

Eric was trembling all over. "Do you really mean it, Mr. Adam?" he cried.

"I do. And we'll not put off until tomorrow what we can do today."

In a maze of wonder, Eric walked on beside this strange, amazing man. The thought never entered his head that Adam Carr, the must astute and calculating of men, might have conceived the idea that his own safety lay in the powerful effect Eric's candour would have on Horace Blagden. This is not saying that Carr secretly cherished a conviction of that sort, but that he was clever enough to profit by the perfectly obvious conclusion.

"And by the way," said Adam, with a speculative chuckle, "if I'm any judge of human nature—and I profess to be—I think we'll find Miss Bright on the right side of the fence when she sees you are in trouble. It's a way women have."

CHAPTER XIX.

TRUTHS AND LIES.

On the church steps, Mr. Blagden looked here and there in quest of his nephew He had stopped inside to shake the hand of the engaging young minister, and to compare notes with half a dozen rock ribbed deacons. Eric and Adam Carr were far on their way down the street when he emerged with Mary

She had seen the two men, however, and was filled with misgiving. She fell into the natural error of suspecting that her brother had hastened away to meet Adam Carr, whereas her first thoughts attributed his hasty departure to a resire to accost Joan Bright.

Our Grandmother's Dyes.

From the Indianapolis Star.

A Pennsylvania manufacturer announces with a flourish that he has a new dye that has stood all necessary tests and will help to solve the difficulty that comes from inability to import German dyes. The basis of the new dye is logwood and the other ingredients are easily obtained.

Probably the man has found the formula his grandmother used when she dyed yarns for knitting and weaving or colored her blankets or carpet rags. The grandmother had all sorts of recipes for homemade dyestuffs, most of the mixtures being of vegetable origin and some of them containing logwood, which was brought from the West Indies and was to be had at any "general store."

Moreover, the pioneer mothers knew how to make these dyes "fast;" the colors remained unchanged in the fabric dyed, no matter how much they were washed and worn. There was no secret about these mixtures; some women, tradition has it, could get better colors than others, but the domestic dye pot was known in every household.

When analine and other cheap dyes came into use many new and beautiful shades and tints were made possible, but, alas! they faded easily; fast colors ceased to be. The coal tar products even penetrated the Far East, and weavers of Oriental rugs, once colored only with vegetable dyes, began to use the convenient substitute to the great distress of collectors. Perhaps the absence of the German dyes may result in the permanent adoption of a better substitute, thus bringing good out of temporary evil.

William the Silent was once saved by a spaniel which scratched his face and awakened him just in time to flee Spanish soldiers who intended murder. A sculptured effigy of the dog lies at the foot of William's statue at Delft, Holland.

Autoist Rescuer Also Saves Dinner From Blazing Stove In New Jersey Town.

A. R. Gerber, a local clothing merchant, was the hero at a fire to which he was called as he was passing through Hartford in his automobile on his way home from Philadelphia. When a woman ran from her house and yelled that her kitchen was on fire Gerber didn't need any second alarm. Slamming on the emergency brake, he jumped from his machine before it was stopped and found the gasoline stove ablaze.

Calmly moving some furniture out of his way and taking the woman's dinner from the stove so it would not be ruined, he pulled the blazing stove right out the back door and landed it where it could do no further damage except to itself.—Mount Holly (N. J.) Dispatch Philadelphia Record.

FARMER'S WIFE TOO ILL TO WORK

A Weak, Nervous Sufferer Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Kasota, Minn. — "I am glad to say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than anything else, and I had the best physician here. I was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work and suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I feel like a different person. I believe there is nothing like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weak women and young girls, and I would be glad if I could influence anyone to try the medicine, for I know it will do all and much more than it is claimed to do." — Mrs. CLARA FRANKS, R. F. D. No. 1, Maplecrest Farm, Kasota, Minn.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

It is going the rounds of the papers that autoists traveling at night can avoid the glare of the head lights of an approaching auto by the simple process of tipping the windshield backward at an angle of about 45 degrees This causes the intense glare of the oncoming head lights to be thrown upward and still allows the driver to see his own side of the road. The experiment is worth trying and a little experimenting will show that the trick really works.

The Prison Mirror, published in the Penitentiary of Minnesota, says "Why is it that from the first inception of our paper to the present time, we have never had an editor sojourn in our midst? Other professions have been well represented: Of preachers, enough to establish a good sized colony in hell: of doctors, sufficient in numbers to populate a large cemetery, and of lawyers, we have had enough to supply members for the Ananias clubs of the large cities; but editors—not one."

THE CLASS MEETING

The Young People's Class of the English M. E. Church met at the home of Miss Huldah Johnson on Tuesday evening, for their regular monthly meeting. Meeting opened with songs and prayer, followed by a brief business session. After this about 30 scholars and visitors turned themselves to an hour of real wholesome games and hearty laughter, which was followed with a very splendid luncheon, served exclusively by the hostess- Everyone present had a delightful evening, and were back to our own bedsides before the clock said one. Hoping that Miss Huldah may invite us again some time,

New Oakland Six, Model 32, $795

"Sturdy as the Oak"

The New Oakland Six

¶ In designing this new Oakland Six, Model "32," our engineers have met the demand for a car devoid of every bit of excess weight which added nothing to the endurance of the car or the riding comfort of the passengers. They produced, in Model "32," a motor car with every advantageous mechanical and engineering feature found on high priced cars.

¶ And so well did they plan that the result is a new Oakland Six at $795---the first real, full-sized six-cylinder car to sell at less than $1000.

¶ Model "32" possesses all of the essentials of the most exacting motor car service. There is power beyond all need. The car is roomy, with wide seats and plenty of leg room. Long, resilient springs and deep upholstery insure perfect riding comfort on any road.

¶ Co-operating with Oakland engineers is the largest and most complete motor car manufacturing organization in the world---an organization capable of giving the most complete expression to Oakland principles of design and refinements of construction; and with a buying power that makes sure a minimum cost of materials.

¶ Due to this same organization there is a unity of purpose which guarantees that into every Oakland motor car there is an in-built quality which makes the manufacturer proud to have built tee car, and the user proud to own it.

¶ The working together of these forces, the striving of many men and minds toward the accomplishment of a single purpose, finds expression in a

DAIRY ASSOCIATION NEEDED

Demand for Grade and Purebred Dairy Cattle is Very Heavy

The present moment has arrived for the organization of county associations in Iowa to promote the breeding and selling of more good dairy cows.

It would require six or seven carloads of grade and purebred dairy cattle to meet the demands of men who have written to our office during the past month asking where such stock could be secured," says Prof. H. H. ..., in charge of the dairy ... College.

"If such associations were formed, they could co-operate with the dairy department of the college to excellent advantage.

"Many farmers desire to buy in local communities where they can secure carload lots. By the method of collecting carloads ... this course Iowa to a large extent could supply purchasers because ... their own associations through which they can deal.

"Iowa cattle are preferred by most purchasers because of their freedom from disease. But it is only when it becomes known that there is a great demand for good dairy cows and heifers that we ... purebred stock that ... dairymen will receive the encouragement that it should have.

ROOSTER TOO MUCH FOR A FORD

Mr and Mrs Alec Nelson, accompanied by Mr and Mrs W H Hanna, returned last Friday from the twin cities where they had spent a few days visiting the Minnesota state fair. Mr Hanna says that while they were passing a farm house on the way up an ... was sighted in the road ahead. The bird failing to get out of the way, Hanna looked back to review the remains but the remains weren't to be reviewed, and the party in the auto scratch their heads as they wondered what had become of the darned old rooster. When they reached Owatonna they were surprised to see people point at the rear but concluding it was some Indians who had never seen a Ford before, they drove on. Pretty soon a small boy hollered for them to stop and see what they had ... At first they had no ... front end of the car and to satisfy the urchin they stopped, and as they did so they heard a rooster crow. Further investigation brought the fact that the rooster, when they encountered him, had in some way got tangled up under the front end of the car, and there he was as quiet as a cricket, and crowing because he was fully satisfied that it would require more than one Ford to get his goat. Mr Hanna then took charge of the old duffer and gave him away to the small boy for yelling the way he did.—Thompson Courier.

ADVERTISING THAT PAYS

By FRED F. FLATT, Columbus Junction, Ia.

There is not a better investment for a business man than money put into publicity—in telling the people what you have to offer them. That old idea so prevalent among merchants and manufacturers, "that everybody knows me, and will trade with me if they want to," is no good in these modern times. To be sure, they may know of you, but they will not know what you have for sale.

Then the question naturally arises, "Where am I going to get the best returns from my money spent in advertising?" There are many ways, but you should find which is the best for your line of business or your product. I take the position that the newspaper is the best medium to reach prospective purchasers and the buying public in general. But now some merchants and manufacturers will say that they don't believe there is any direct benefit derived from having their advertisements in the newspapers.

Some merchants and manufacturers never get any returns from their newspaper advertising, simply because they do not understand how to apply it. In some towns and cities the merchants seem to think that money spent for newspaper advertising is just a donation to the publisher. This is generally the kind of man that cannot make his advertising pay in the newspaper, or anywhere else.

But on the other hand, Mr. Jones, the clothier across the street, advertises all the time and makes it pay. Why does he? Because he puts thought into his advertisements. He is ready to invest in advertising space in the newspapers or periodicals. Previous experience has taught him the value of such advertising. The people have confidence in him and he knows it. He runs his advertisements in the newspapers the year round, telling them what he has to offer, or maybe just a friendly talk.

Some merchants think that advertising space is only valuable when they are having a special sale; but this is a mistake. People get in the habit of reading your advertisements from week to week, and they look for them the first thing when they get their paper. But advertising of any kind will not pay the merchant or manufacturer who does not live up to his statements. He must have a legitimate business, and conduct it upon business principles to make his advertising profitable.

Advertising is the life of any business, when it is done right; in fact, it is necessary to advertise in these modern times if you want to stay in business, for the merchant or manufacturer who does not advertise is a back number and a continuous loser of business which his competitor is getting.

There are many men who have made their fortunes through the right use of advertising in connection with their business. It is true that some business men do not know how to use it properly, but because of this they should not say that it does not pay.

Take the business man who looks upon his advertising as part of his capital; he realizes that it is a powerful asset and is selling more goods or products and making as large a profit as his non-advertising competitor. He takes as much care in preparing his advertising as he does his bank account, and he is the man who has an increasing bank account, for the right kind of advertising does pay.

DIED

The infant of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Nelson, which was born September 23, 1915, died September 28, 1915.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the home, six miles east of Klemme, Wednesday, at 10 o'clock a. m. in the midst of a number of relatives and neighbors, after which the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Klemme.

Another flower has opened its foliage to beautify and perfume its surroundings for only five days. Then came the chilly hand of death and plucked it, only to ingraft it into the great vine into the Paradise of God where it will again bloom and live for ever.

We may puzzle our brains over the tongue twisting names which France and Russia have given to some of their towns, but England herself furnishes a few quite as dazzling as that of Przemysl. FARMER ASKS $20,000 FROM THREE MEN FOR THEFT OF HIS BRIDE

Alleged Abduction Occurred Two Hours After Wedding —She Did Not Return.

Ottumwa, Ia., Sept. 25.—Chester A. Smith, Hedrick farmer, has filed suit for $20,000 damages against three prominent farmers of this vicinity, charging that they abducted his young bride, kept her a prisoner away from him and finally alienated her affections. The defendants in the suit are Henry Schwartz, James McMullen and Benjamin Williams, and the young bride is McMullen's daughter.

Smith charges that within two hours after his wedding, August 21, the three defendants drove to his house, took the bride, put her in an auto and drove to Schwartz's home, where she was kept a prisoner. He says he tried to see her three times afterwards succeeding only once—when she was brought out upon the porch of the Schwartz home. On that occasion, he says, she told him to leave, that she wanted nothing more to do with him.

Smith was found not guilty last Sunday of subornation of perjury, a charge lodged against him by McMullen, who alleged Smith induced another man to swear falsely to the girl's age when a marriage license was secured.

The suit for damages is filed for the October term of court.

LIEUT. CLAUDE GILLETTE TAKES POST GRADUATE WORK

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 25.—Lieut. Claude Gillette, U. S. N., and wife are visiting at the Guy Gillette home en route to Annapolis, where he will take a post-graduate course in naval training work.

The lieutenant has just returned from a 7,000-mile cruise to the Aleutian islands with the Pacific fleet, being in command of the Perry, which won the trophy in engineering.

After a brief visit with his brother they will leave for the east, where he will spend two years in studying at Annapolis, Harvard and Columbia. As a reward for faithful and efficient service and also as a good investment, the government will furnish him his training.

COURT HEARING ASSIGNED ON IMPORTED DEPUTIES

Muscatine, Ia., Sept. 25.—Unionists throughout Iowa, as well as the employers of union labor, will watch with interest the action of the Iowa supreme court in the case of J. U. Rehmel vs. the board of supervisors of Muscatine county, which is an appeal from the action of the district court here in enjoining the supervisors from the payment of wages to the several score of special deputies who were on duty during the protracted button strike several years ago.

At the time of the labor trouble the local authorities were unable to cope with the situation and some 60 deputy sheriffs were imported from Chicago. The payment, which entailed the expenditure of some $6,000, was objected to by the unionists and an injunction suit resulted in restraining orders being issued against the board. An appeal from this action was taken, and the supreme court docket shows the case listed for trial early next month.

CLAIM YOUTH HIRED TO MURDER MERCHANT

Winterset, Ia., Sept. 25.—That a hired assassin may have slain Rufus Ulery, aged storekeeper at Webster, on the morning of August 26 is a theory upon which Sheriff Frank Brock, of Madison county, and George E. Bidwell, special agent from the department of justice are working on here.

John and George Frazier, whose arrests were recently caused, were called upon yesterday to answer before Justice of the Peace Casady to informations charging them with murder in the first degree. They were bound over to await the action of the grand jury without bail.

An attempt is being made to locate a 19-year-old youth who is believed by the authorities to have actually done the killing. This young man is said to have come to Iowa from Colorado with the Frazier brothers at their request.

IOWA MAY NOT RESIST ON DELIVERY TO AGENT

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 25.—The Iowa department of justice may not intervene in the action in the federal court at Chicago brought by the Hamm Brewing company against the Rock Island railroad, in which the portion of the Iowa liquor law which requires a consignee of liquor to appear at the station in person to receive it, is being attacked as invalid.

The state officials have serious doubt of the legality of the section in question. The Iowa law was patterned after a federal statute which permits a consignee to send a drayman, with a written order, to the station for liquor which is for personal use. The officials say that the Iowa law omitted the section which permits a consignee to send a drayman after the booze, but the statute says that no part of that law shall be binding which is in conflict with the federal law on the same subject.

Even though the federal court declares the section invalid, the law will not be weakened, the officials say. The authorities will still have a written statement of the consignee with details as to where the booze is to be taken.

AUE SELLS ALTON PAPER; WILL GO TO DES MOINES

Alton, Ia., Sept. 25.—The Alton Democrat has been sold to George E. Bowers, of Alton; Will Bowers, of the St. Paul Dispatch, and Attorney C. W. Pitts, of Alton. George E. Bowers will edit the paper.

John F. D. Aue, retiring publisher of the Democrat, will leave Alton in the near future to take the position of business manager of the Register and Leader, at Des Moines.

Mr. Bowers, who will edit the Democrat, has had extended experience in the newspaper game and comes well recommended. He at one time owned the Orange City Herald, and sold out that business to go into raching in Montana. He is at present deputy revenue collector for this district.

CREAMERY MAY SUPPLANT BREWERY AT IOWA CITY

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 24.—Iowa City may have a large creamery plant to supplant the brewery industry when the new liquor laws go into effect January 1. Local brewery men are considering such an enterprise with State Dairy Commissioner William B. Barney, of Hampton, Ia. He and his coworkers at Des Moines have been considering the question of conserving industrial resources which might otherwise go to waste with the advent of prohibition and the abolition of stills and breweries

CHEAP PICTURES ARE BASIS OF EXPENSIVE LEGAL CONTROVERSY

Farmer Accused School Teacher of Taking Them—Costs Now More Than $10,000.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 25.—Four pictures, valued at less than 10 cents, which hung on the walls of the old Henkle school house near Fort Madison, have cost a small fortune in a legal controversy which was fought out in the Iowa supreme court yesterday for the third time.

Eleven years ago a school teacher, Miss Martha Richardson, placed the four pictures in question on the walls of the Henkle school, where she was employed.

W. L. Henkle, a wealthy farmer near Fort Madison, claimed to own the pictures. He said he had received them as a supplement to a Sunday newspaper, and had sent them to the Henkle school by his son. Henkle's fight to get possession of the pictures again has cost him a fortune, his attorneys said yesterday. The fight involved him in two damage suits. In the one he had to pay Miss Richardson $1,600 judgment for slander, for alleged statements that she had wrongfully taken the four pictures. In the other case, which was before the supreme court yesterday for the third time, he is resisting a claim of $5,000 damages made by Jacob G. Krehbiel, whose house, where the teacher roomed, was searched by Henkle in his hunt for the pictures.

Since the original hearing of the case in 1905, Miss Richardson added a little spice to the controversy by marrying T. B. Snyder, the attorney who represented her and secured the verdict of $1,600 against Henkle for alleged slander. Henkle lost in this damage suit in the district court of Lee county. He served notice of appeal to the supreme court, but was one day late in perfecting the appeal, the attorneys said. Therefore, he paid the judgment.

As to the money spent in fighting the case, a former attorney in the case yesterday stated that between $10,000 and $20,000 has been expended so far.

CAFE OPERATORS "SKIP" LEAVING UNPAID BILLS

Mondamin, Ia., Sept. 25.—Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Shofroth, recently in charge of the Mondamin cafe here, have gone to parts unknown, leaving a large number of unpaid bills. Creditors have attached the remnants of the stock. Miss Alice Baldwin, who was left in charge of the place while Mr. and Mrs. Shofroth ostensibly had gone to visit relatives in Nebraska, threw up her hands in despair when she learned that all of the silverware and personal effects about the place had been removed and that no money, even for making change, was left in the cash register. The place has been ejoying a large patronage and the general belief is that it had been making money, but the disposition evidently was for quick and easy profits through paying out as little as possible. The wholesale bills had been left unpaid, in addition to various accounts around town.

UNFOUNDED RUMORS AFLOAT ABOUT DUBUQUE BANK

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 25.—"Reports of the discovery of a new embezzlement in the Dubuque National bank are from unreliable sources and without foundation in fact."

This was the statement made by D. D. Myers, president of the Dubuque National bank. Business proceeded in an apparently normal manner today at all Dubuque banking institutions.

The amount of the shortage in the funds of the Dubuque National bank now is estimated at from $10,000 to $40,000. The exact amount will not be known until a complete checking up of the bank's books has been made.

The men under arrest are still at large on bonds. The story that a band of bank wreckers are at work is without foundation.

ENTHUSIASM WANES ON "HONOR" SYSTEM

Fort Madison, Ia., Sept. 25.—The honor system at the Fort Madison penitentiary has received a severe check because of an epidemic of escapes from the various convict camps established outside the prison walls by J. C. Sanders, warden.

The situation is considered serious by state officials. It may result in a tightening up at the penitentiary. Men who have been enjoying liberties may be returned to the prison again.

The state is required to pay $50 reward for the arrest and return to penitentiary of every escaped prisoner. So many men have gotten away from the Fort Madison institution in the last two weeks that it has become expensive for the state, it is said.

MISS ENID SHAW WEDS J. M. McMILLIN, NEW YORK

Washington, D. C., Sept. 25.—Friends here have received word of the marriage, in New York yesterday, of Miss Enid N. Shaw, daughter of former Governor Shaw, of Iowa, to John M. McMillin, of New York. Mr. McMillin has been associated for years with Mr. Shaw in business. The couple will live in New York, after a southern trip.

SEVEN CRAWFORD ROUTES CONSOLIDATED INTO FOUR

Denison, Ia., Sept. 25.—It is reported that the postoffice department will, on October 1, consolidate the seven rural routes running out of Denison and the one from Arion into four routes of over 50 miles each. This takes away the only route from Arion. As in other cases of consolidation, all the old carriers are for the time being out of commission, and the postmaster must secure carriers with autos for the long routes. On the face of the figures there is a saving to the government of $2,400 a year. Carriers of the new routes will receive $1,800 per year and must pay from this the cost of maintaining service all the year round with substitutes when an auto cannot make the entire trip.

SOLON ASSAULT CASE COMES BEFORE GRAND JURY

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 23.—The charge of assault, made against Charles Wolfe, mayor of Solon, by Editor Kregel, of the Solon Economy, came up before the grand jury of Johnson county for consideration yesterday. The case took up the greater part of the day. No decision has been made public. The case attracted state wide interest, as Kreigel's life hung by a thread for many days. The assault was made by Wolfe last May, the mayor firing two bullets into the body of the newspaper man.

LITTLE EXCITEMENT CAUSED AT DUBUQUE FROM BANK EPISODE

Temporary Officers to Replace Men Under Arrest—Cashier Had Lived High.

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 24.—Temporary appointments have been made in place of the three officers of the Dubuque National bank, who were arrested yesterday, and business is proceeding as usual. President Myers made a formal statement to depositors and the public, giving assurance of the bank's stability, and there has been no demonstration or indication of a run. The bank is capitalized at $100,000 and has a surplus of $20,000.

George Homan, Joseph Harrigan and Charles Seige, cashier, teller and assistant teller, respectively, will be brought to trial at the federal court term here in December on the charge of misappropriating about $20,000 of the bank's funds.

Harrigan is believed not to have financially profited, but permitted favored persons to overdraw their accounts, and to keep the record clear was forced to juggle the books in violation of the banking laws. Homan secured money from the bank on his personal note covering up the transaction by making it appear loans were made to responsible persons. It was on the discovery by the examiner of a technical error in a note bearing the name of a prominent churchman who, when his attention was called to it, declared he had given no such note, that developments followed.

Homan, although practically without resources had invested in numerous Dubuque concerns, purchased a country home and lived at a $6,000 pace. Seige is a young man. He declares he took the funds to assist his mother, expecting to pay them back. That he had guilty knowledge of the irregularities for several years is alleged.

BRIDEGROOM GOES "FLAT" WHILE ON HONEYMOON

Muscatine, Ia., Sept. 24.—To be owner of a large seven-passenger touring car, with which you embarked upon your honeymoon, and yet be forced to apply to a welfare society for lodging for the night would be embarrassing to most bridegrooms, but it didn't seem to take any of the joy out of life for George Garrett, of Elkhart, Ind., who reached here Monday night enroute to Seymour, Ia., to visit relatives. A series of mishaps drained not only Garrett's purse, but consumed his small bank account, and upon his arrived here he was forced to "hock" his extra suit to buy gasoline and, with his wife was boarded at a local hostelry at the expense of a local charity body. Garret told of inheriting a small fortune, which permitted him to buy the car only

IOWA SHORT LINE NOW IS WORTH ONLY $20,000

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept. 24.—The Iowa & Omaha Short Line, after seven years' existence at an initial cost of about $300,000, has been appraised by a commission consisting of F. W. Duren, B. P. Wickham and H. G. Bell, and found to be worth $20,000, of which sum the right of way and all property except locomotive, freight cars, passenger coach and depot improvements, takes $18,525. The locomotive is valued at $400, the single passenger coach at $75, four boxcars, six freight cars and two coal cars are lumped together at $500, and the "depot improvements" at $1,000.

The appraisement was made on petition of creditors and stockholders of the company, who want the property sold before it deteriorates further in value, and the proceeds applied on liabilities of the line.

SMALL PART OF IOWA CORN ENTIRELY OUT OF DANGER

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 24.—Following is the regular weekly bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service on the week ending September 20:

The average temperature for the week was slightly below the normal, due to prevailing low readings on the last day, which caused frost in many localities on the morning of the 21st. Showers were frequent, and in many sections heavy to excessive, making unfavorable conditions for rapid ripening of corn. The crop is very backward, and not more than 20 per cent of it is dented and not more than 5 per cent is safe from injury by killing frost. The frequent showers also delayed threshing, and in some sections plowing and seeding. The harvesting of a very heavy crop of grapes is nearing completion in the western counties, and many apples have been picked. Pastures continue in excellent condition, but reports of potatoes rotting in the ground are still being received.

PROMINENT CEDAR RAPIDS MAN STRICKEN SUDDENLY

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept. 22.—Lew W. Anderson, prominent real estate and insurance man, died suddenly last evening at Greycourt, his home in Vernon Heights, a suburb of this city. Death was due to heart failure. Mr. Anderson had attended to his usual duties at the office during the day and was in apparent good health until the attack. He was 48 years old and had been prominent in local business circles for many years.

TWINS, 85 YEARS OLD, CELEBRATE OCCASION BY BIRTHDAY PARTY

These Iowans Claim Record for United States—Both Active and in Good Health.

Mount Pleasant, Ia., Sept. 23.—Mount Pleasant holds the distinction of being the home of Mrs. Jane Baugh, who with her sister, Mrs. Rachel Hackenburg, hold the record of being the oldest living twins in the United States. Yesterday the two venerable women celebrated at the home of Mrs. Baugh in this city their 85th birthdays.

Two years ago a metropolitan paper carried a story of twin brothers who had reached the age of 80 years, alleging that they were the oldest living twins in the United States. At that time Mrs. Baugh wrote to the editor, and in reply he stated that after thorough search of all records that she with her sister were without doubt the oldest twins in this country.

Both Mrs. Baugh and Mrs. Hackenburg, despite their advanced age, are active and in the best of health. Throughout their life they have always lived simply, doing each day's work as it came. Even today, Mrs. Baugh still insists upon putting up each summer vast quantities of fruit which she picks from her own orchard. Present circumstances would seem to indicate that they still have many years of useful life before them.

Mrs. Hackenburg is a resident of Christian county, Ill., while Mrs. Baugh has lived in this city for the last 57 years. She is the widow of the late Lewis G. Baugh, a pioneer business man of this community.

SHRINERS TO HOLD BIG SESSION AT WATERLOO

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 23.—Arrangements are being made to entertain 1,500 to 2,000 Shriners here on Wednesday, September 29. Seventy-five candidates will be admitted into the order. New and terrifying devices of torture have been devised for the occasion, according to the committee.

The committee has engaged the Cedar Falls band of 50 pieces to meet all incoming trains and play concerts. The Kilties band will also be in the procession, which will form at 5 p. m. The parade promises to be a notable and spectacular one. At 1:30 the Arab patrol of Cedar Rapids, led by the band and followed by hundreds of red-fezzed nobles, will march to the cattle congress grounds.

Following the parade, the nobles will march to the Pythian temple, where a banquet will be served. The initiation will be in the armory in the evening.

MARRIAGE LICENSE WITNESS IS CHARGED WITH PERJURY

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 23.—C. D. Duncan must answer to the charge of perjury. Yesterday he signed bonds in the sum of $1,000 for appearance in Justice Stanberry's court on Thursday. On September 2 Alfred J. Eidahl and Miss Phyllas Johnson aroused Clerk of the Courts Fred D. Blake about 2 o'clock in the morning, desiring a wedding license. They had with them C. D. Duncan as a witness. He swore that Mr. Eidahl was over 21 years of age and that Miss Johnson was over 18. The license was issued under this affidavit. Mr. Eidahl and Miss Johnson then went to the home of Justice Stanbery, roused him out of bed and at 3 o'clock that morning he pronounced the words that made them husband and wife. Yesterday W. C. Johnson, father of the bride, appeared upon the scene and caused a warrant to be issued for C. D. Duncan for making the false affidavit.

HUSBAND ON TROLLEY CAR WHICH KILLS HIS WIFE

Cedar Falls, Ia., Sept. 23.—Mrs. John Heald, 73 years old, was instantly killed by an electric car on the Waterloo, Cedar Falls & Northern railway, two miles east of this city. She attempted to cross the track apparently unconscious of the approaching car.

Her husband was on the car that struck her. One son and one daughter of the couple live in California.

PLEDGES $36,000 FOR HOSPITAL AT CHEROKEE

Cherokee, Ia., Sept. 21.—The campaign for a municipal hospital closed last night and was a great success. The total raised by campaigners was $36,000, in addition to the site. The soliciting by campaigners is now finished, but it is planned to hold the lists open until $56,000 is pledged. The closing of the campaign was celebrated by an automobile parade which included about 100 cars decorated with flowers and electric displays.

AMERICAN TROOPS MAY CROSS RIO GRANDE TO GET OUTLAWS

Government Seriously Considering Sending an Expeditionary Force Into Mexico to Clean Up Bandits.

SITUATION GROWS SERIOUS

Yesterday's Battle, in Which Uniformed Mexican Soldiers Participated, May Mean Border Climax.

Washington, D. C., Sept. Possibility that American troops cross the Rio Grande to de Mexicans raiding border in Texas, was talked of here a result of yesterday's border tween United States soldiers cans near Progreso, Tex. One can soldier was killed and wounded in the battle. At least Mexicans, per[illegible] more, were down, it was reported. The Private Henry W. Stubblefield, Stone Gap, Va., and the other A. V. Anderson.

An incident that added to riousness of the situation in the the war department officials fact as reported by General that several uniformed Mexican southern border covered the raiders. As viewed here the is regarded as one of the most of the numerous disturbances border.

TENSE SITUATION EXISTS ALONG BORDER OF

Brownsville, Tex., Sept. 25.—[illegible] of the lower border turned toward Washington where it pected the next important development would occur as a result of yesterday's fight at Progreso, crossing in Mexicans behind trenches on the can side covered with heavy retreat of Mexican bandits who the American town of Progreso.

J. B. McAllen, millionaire ranchman of Brownsville, and a woman yesterday fought off a band Mexican bandits who attacked ranch house in Hidalgo county, killed two and wounded three. The fighting lasted 30 minutes, bandits seeing their men heavy retired.

Capt. Frank R. McCoy, commanding officer at Mission, reported to Brown today that he had sent detachments of soldiers in action and believed that the Mexicans would be killed or driven from country. With the exception of ities in Hidalgo county, trouble was reported along the border today. Troops continued patrol last night around Progreso out encountering any Mexicans.

Fought from Trenches

While no Carranza troops participated officially in yesterday's there is question whether subordinates did not join the on their covering party. The at Progreso were constructed over two weeks ago by Carranza who, at that time, notified soldiers that they had no intention firing on American soldiers. week ago the Carranza abandoned these trenches apparently moved away from the all along this section.

General Nafarrate at Matamoros his staff have assured officers Brown that the Carranza troops the strictest orders to stay across the river.

The escape of the Mexicans across the Rio Grande was regarded in civilian and army circles as the gravest features of yesterday's battle. When the American soldiers pursued the marauders to the river it was reported by Maj. Edward Anderson, of the Twelfth cavalry, that were met by a brisk fire from the Mexican side where apparently a hundred Mexicans were concealed. It also was reported that a number of raiders wore khaki uniforms, whether they were connected with Carranza garrisons which line the various border towns opposite Rio and Brownsville could not be learned.

Army officers believed today that sufficient troops had been placed at danger points to forestall any immediate repetition of the raid.

Capt. A. V. P. Anderson, Twelfth cavalry and Private Otto Kennedy, of Central Lake, Mich., who were wounded yesterday, were reported today to be in no danger. The body of Private Henry W. Stubblefield, of Stone Gap, Va., who was killed by Mexicans, is being held for relatives.

The total of Mexicans killed in yesterday's battle is not made known in further reports today. Two more bodies on the Texas side of the river, it was reported that four-[illegible] others were killed either while trying the river or in scrambling up the bank on the other side.

Another new phase of the situation which Brownsville people discussed today was the announcement that Gen. E. P. Natarrate, Carranza commander at Matamoros, would be removed from his present post because of his supposed lack of sympathy with the efforts of Americans and this section of bandits and his failure to keep his own soldiers within bounds of military rules. The decision was reached by Gen. Trevino, Carranza commander of the northeastern part of Mexico, who is on a trip to Matamoros to investigate charges that Nafarrate had been negligent.

YOUTHFUL BURGLARS "PULL" GROCERY S

Four, 11-year-old boys robbed a grocery store of A. P. Larson, Morningside avenue, last night, securing $4 in cash and quantities of candy and chewing gum. Two of the lads were caught by Mr. Larson, who he heard a noise in the cellar. He went down to investigate. The rest of the others of the quartet were known to Mr. Larson, and he will probably swear out a warrant for their arrest today.

The boys entered through a cellar window. All four had flashlights. When Mr. Larson went into the cellar one of the little lads had a flashlight, and was crying that he could not get out. The police were notified that two of the boys were being held, but when they went to the store, the boys had been allowed to go home.

NO LAW APPLIES TO ARCHIBALD OFFENSE

Washington, Sept 25.—Although department of justice officials have not completed their examination of the papers in possession of the government relating to the activities of James F. J. Archibald, the American who acted as messenger for Dr Constantin T Dumba, the Austrian ambassador, it was believed here that no attempt would be made to proceed against Archibald. As a consequence of this affair however, it is undestood that an effort will be made at the coming session of congress to enact a law to cover such cases.

VON PAPEN TO MEXICO: TRANSFER IS RUMORED

German Military Attache and Prince Von Hatzfeldt, Now in San Francisco En Route to Border Republic—Dismissal From United States May Be Forestalled.

San Francisco, Sept. 27.—Capt Franz Von Papen, military attache of the German embassy at Washington, D. C., and Prince Von Hatzfeldt, who are visiting this city, will leave next Tuesday for Mexico, it was announced today. Both men maintain a secrecy as to their ... and the object of their visit to the southern republic.

Rumors ... in Washington ... that Captain Von Papen would ... transferred to Mexico by order of ... government ... formal action has been ... States government ... the military attache ... for ... his presence in this country is known to be offensive to the Washington administration because of his participation in the Dumba strike plot. Von Papen's reference to "idiotic Yankees" and other aspersions upon the American people contributed nothing to his popularity in official Washington circles.

If it is true that Captain Von Papen has been transferred to Mexico an otherwise delicate situation may be relieved. So far as known Prince Von Hatzfeld was not implicated with Dumba and Von Papen.

Von Papen is also assigned by the German government as military attache to its legation in Mexico, and he might with propriety pay a visit to Mexico City. Prince Hatzfeldt has no connection with the Mexican legation, but is a close personal friend of Captain Von Papen.

Officials learned of the military attache's impending departure without comment, but with some interest. It was not made clear whether they regarded it as a movement to clear the situation or whether they expected the captain would return to the United States.

GERMANS PREPARE TO MOVE WOUNDED

Developments on the Western Front Indicate Resumption of Struggle on Larger Scale.

Amsterdam (via London) Sept. 27—The Telegraaf says it has received news from Belgium that the Germans are preparing for the wholesale transport of wounded to that country. Officers and physicians recently inspected municipal buildings at Louvain and other places with a view of transforming them into convalcellary hospitals.

Paris, Sept 25.—There has been no cessation in the continued artillery activity along the battle lines in France according to the announcement given out at the French war office this afternoon.

Among the points mentioned where there have been artillery engagements is the Artois district, south of the River Somme, north of the Aisne and along the canal from the Aisne to the Marne and in the Champagne district.

Continuing, the reports says that a fresh German attack near Manhoff was completely repulsed. A squadron of French aeroplanes yesterday bombarded the railroad station at Metz.

MYSTERY IN SALE OF STEEL PLANTS

Midvale Company Is Sold for $19,000,000, and Cambria to Change Hands—Big Corporation Hinted.

Philadelphia, Sept. 27.—Midvale Steel company, one of the largest of the so called independent concerns in the country, was today sold to purchasers whose identity has not been disclosed. The sale price approximates $19,000,000.

Coincident with the sale of the Midvale plant came the report that the Cambria Steel company, another big independent concern with a plant at Johnstown, Pa., is in the course of changing hands.

No confirmation could be had of the report that the Midvale and Cambria plants would eventually become units of a new big steel corporation to be organized to take in a number of independent plants in the eastern part of the country.

The Midvale plant which is located in this city employs about 5,500 men and is one of the three steel concerns in the United States which furnishes armor plate to the navy.

BATTLESHIP MICHIGAN LEADS IN EFFICIENCY

Washington, Sept. 25.—The United States battleship Michigan led all other vessels of the battleship class for battle efficiency in 1915, according to announcement today by the navy department.

The battleship Texas was second and the Georgia third in the list of 19 vessels. The torpedo boat destroyer Patterson led the list in the destroyer class, the McDougal being second and the Fanning third. In the submarine class the K-8 stood first, with the C-3 second and the B-3 third.

The battleship Georgia led the list of 20 vessels of the battleship class in gunnery practice. The Texas was second and the Wyoming third.

To protect the bases of telegraph poles against decay a new French practice is to surround them with earthenware pipes and fill the pipes with melted resin and sand, which solidifies and becomes waterproof.

TUBERCULOSIS REMEDY IS INDORSED BY PHYSICIANS

American Association of Clinical Research Declares That Gibson Cure in Few Years Will Place the Dread Malady Among the Non-Fatal Diseases.

Philadelphia, Sept. 25—Physicians who have spent years in the study of tuberculosis declared today at the closing session of the seventh annual meeting of the American Association of clinical research at the Hahnemann medical college, that the cure evolved by Dr. Jefferson D. Gibson, of Denver, Colo., retiring president of the association, is one that in a few years ought to place tuberculosis among the non-fatal diseases.

Dr. Gibson mentioned the cure in his address opening the meeting on Thursday and described it in detail in a paper at today's session. It provides a cure by adding X-rays, ozone and static electricity to the climatic and dietetic treatment now common in tuberculosis.

By this method he claims the presence of the disease can be detected in healthy, robust persons, even before the well known symptoms begin to form and cures can be effected in advanced cases in remarkably short time.

In his paper today Dr. Gibson said:

"It might seem that I have allowed my enthusiasm to run away with me in studying this cure, but I think a feeling of gratification, at least, is justified when I say that out of 757 cases thus treated, there have been only 61 deaths. I wish to state now with emphasis that the X-ray will finally bring about the emancipation of the human race from this dreadful scourge. In a few years, when the method is better developed, it will be a disgrace for a physician to allow a case of tuberculosis of any kind to progress to an advanced stage, because the X-rays even now find the incipient tendencies, even before the symptoms form."

ASK ROCKEFELLER FOR AN AGREEMENT

United Mine Workers Seek to Establish New Contract Relations in Colorado Mine Fields.

Denver Colo., Sept. 27.—An invitation to John D. Rockefeller, jr., to meet representatives of the United Mine Workers of American and establish contract relations in Colorado "if he has the welfare of his employes at heart" is contained in a formal statement given out today by Robert H. Harlin, Percy Tetlow and James F. Moran, committeemen representing the international executive board of the miners' organization in Colorado.

The committee recently came to Colorado vested with power to decide policies for the miners' union in Colorado and take necessary steps to defend members in any legal proceedings. Their statement expresses the opinion that newspaper accounts of Rockefeller's tour of mines in southern Colorado "will create an erroneous impression in the minds of those unacquainted with existing labor conditions" in those fields.

It recites that in calling the strike two years ago the Colorado miners sought to establish the "principle of contract relations between employer and employe by collective bargaining; that to establish this principle recognition must be conceded to a bonafide union of mine workers."

The statement then points out that the United Mine Workers of America is the only bonafide organization of coal miners in the country and recognized by the American Federation of Labor.

The committee takes issue with a published statement by Rockefeller that the Colorado Fuel & Iron company "does not care whether its employes are union men or not," says: "Since the strike was called off last December this company (Fuel & Iron), has steadfastly refused to reemploy men who were still affiliated with the union, and we defy Mr. Rockefeller to produce from his entire working force in southern Colorado, a dozen men who are members of the union."

The statement says the "miners' representatives" with whom Rockefeller has conversed in the coal camps do not represent the union, (United Mine Workers of America), but an organization "created by the head officials of the company and afterwards foisted upon the miners."

"The demonstrate the impotency of such an organization to establish equitable conditions," continues the statement, "we wish to point out that some few months ago the camp enforced a reduction upon the miners of Fremont county of 10 cents per ton, notwithstanding the fact that the men had been asking for an increase of prices."

The statement says that "despite Rockefeller's recent announcement 800 or 900 members of our organization have been refused employment, while others have been discharged on some flimsy trumped up pretext, and that the element that led to the revolt of miners in southern Colorado still obtain."

DOUBT THAT WILSON WILL CALL SESSION

Leaders in Congress All Opposed to Convening Senate Before Regular Session.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27.—President Wilson will abandon the plan to call an extra session of the senate if he follows the advice of most of the democratic leaders. The opinion was expressed unofficially in high administration quarters today that there would be no extra session. Senator Kern, senate democratic leader, has written the president advising against an extra session. Vice President Marshall advised against one yesterday. A number of others close to the president have done so. Thus far he has not officially committed himself.

SURVIVORS IN PORT.

Queenstown, Sept. 25.—Thirty-two members of the crew of the British steamer Chancellor, which sunk yesterday, and the captain of the vessel were landed here by a rescue steamer this afternoon. The remainder of the crew is reported to have been picked up by a trawler and taken to Kinsale.

WANT NO STRINGS TO DUMBA RECALL

Granting Leave of Absence Will Not Satisfy American Government Vienna Will Be Informed.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Ambassador Penfield, at Vienna, has been instructed to make clear to the Austrian government informally that the United States must insist on the recall of Dr. Dumba, the Austrian ambassador here, and that his departure "on leave of absence" would not be satisfactory.

From messages exchanged between Ambassador Penfield and the state department, it is apparent that the Austrian government misunderstood the desires of the United States. It was intimated at first to Ambassador Penfield that the Austrian government might recall Dr. Dumba on leave of absence and might desire safe conduct for him. Dr. Dumba himself telegraphed for such safe conduct a few days later informing the state department that he had been granted leave of absence. No action was taken on his request, but it was forwarded to Ambassador Penfield.

Instructions sent to Mr. Penfield were not disclosed, but he had been authorized to make it clear that Dr. Dumba's usefulness as the Austrian ambassador to the United States has ceased and that if given "leave of absence," he would nevertheless still remain accredited.

The right of a government to demand the recall of an ambassador because of his personal acts is unquestionable under international law and according to officials if the Austrian government persisted in refusing to recall Dr. Dumba passports could be handed to him. There is no indication as yet that this will be necessary, the delay in the Austrian government's decision, it is said, being due to difficulties in cable transmission.

SHOWS VAST DAMAGE BY ZEPPELIN RAIDS

10,297 Claims for Property and 697 for Personal Damages Are Filed.

London, Sept. 27.—The east coast raid committee appointed in January, submitted today to the treasury a report covering 14 German aerial raids previous to June 15, and the bombardment of the Hartlepools, Scarborough and Whitby by German warships. The number of claims reported for personal injuries is 697, of which 178 were fatal cases.

The number of claims for damages to property, which have been investigated is 10,297.

AGED MAN FOUND DEAD; SEEK WOMAN COMPANION

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 25.—The police took up today search for a woman who accompanied George F. Brown, a wealthy capitalist, of Ogden, Utah, who was found dead in a rooming house yesterday.

Brown was 70 years old and was subject to heart failure. A vial of poison tablets was found in the room.

CLAIM ROENTGEN RAY BEST CANCER REMEDY

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 25.—The Roentgen ray therapy is superior to the radium treatment for cancer, according to speakers at today's sessions of the American Roentgen Ray society. Dr. Russell H. Boggs, of Pittsburgh, in discussing the subject, declares that X-ray is the most advanced remedy for malignant growths.

A paper by Dr. A. F. Holding, of New York, stated that 550 cases of malignancy under the Roentgen ray treatment are improving.

OVERHAUL SUBMARINES.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 25.—The submarines F-1, F-2 and F-3, all sister ships of the F-4, lost in Honolulu harbor with 22 men, are to be thoroughly remodelled to make them safe. All three were damaged in a collision at Honolulu last month, and will be towed to Mare Island navy yard at San Francisco.

Talk is cheap—so why not speak a kindly word now and then

Some folks are just naturally crazy and with others it is a case of too much base ball.

No one likes to hear a man continually brag about what he has done, but he is way ahead of the man who brags of what he is going to do.

A person of whom it is said that he has ability but doesn't use it, has more to be ashamed of than the person of whom it is said that he is a natural dunce.

A method has been perfected for making from certain parts of the human body an ink that is absolutely fadeless and unaffected by acids That's a new way for some people to make a mark.

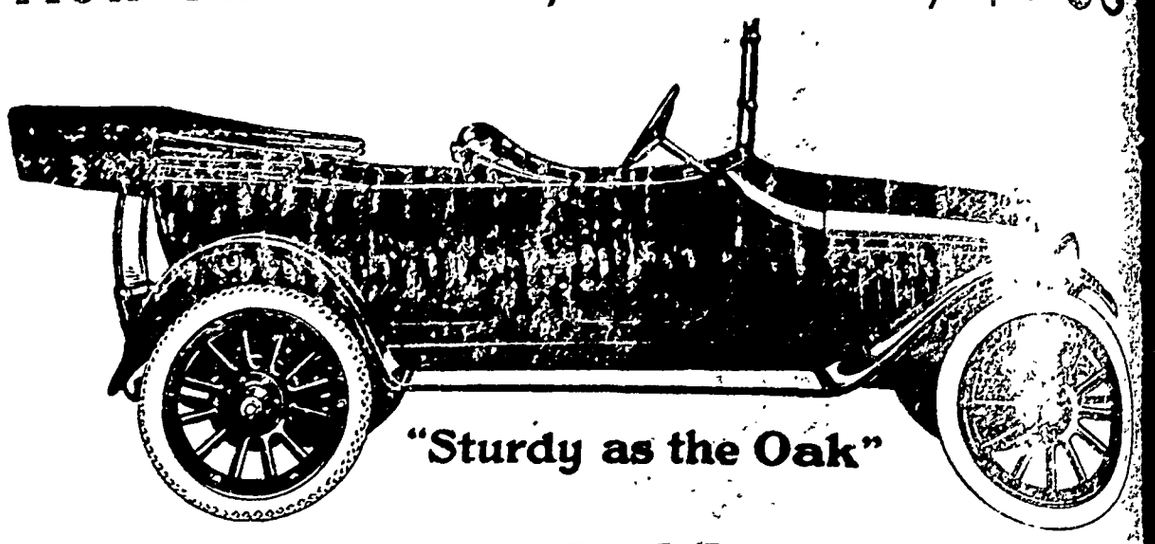
Vice-President Marshall has been threatened with death a half dozen times within a very short time. It took something of this sort to bring us to a realization of the fact that our Vice-President is alive.

There is considerable talk about girls being better students than boys and many more girls than boys completing high school If figures were available, however, it probably would be found that despite their small number more boys than girls are making use of their education.

A country correspondent describing the clothes at a wedding, finishes by saying: "The groom wore his usual smile." In the interest of modesty we trust it was one of the kind that wouldn't come off, and we wish to remark further that if the correspondent told the literal truth about the groom's raiment the bride did not get all the attention upon this occasion.

The preacher on the chautauqua platform gets better audiences than he did in the pulpit, and in addition they pay to hear him, when he may not tell them any more than their local preacher, or tell it any better—and the same audience would consider it almost a crime to put more than five cents on the platter to hear the same preacher in church.

New Oakland Six, Model 32, $795



The New Oakland Six

¶ In designing this new Oakland Six, Model "32," our engineers have met the demand for a car devoid of every bit of excess weight which added nothing to the endurance of the car or the riding comfort of the passengers. They produced, in Model "32," a motor car with every advantageous mechahical and engineering feature found on high priced cars.

¶ And so well did they plan that the result is a new Oakland Six at $795---the first real, full-sized six-cylinder car to sell at less than $1000.

¶ Model "32" possesses all of the essentials of the most exacting motor car service There is power beyond all need. The car is roomy, with wide seats and plenty of leg room. Long, resilient springs and deep upholstery insure perfect riding comfort on any road.

¶ Co-operating with Oakland engineers is the largest and most complete motor car manufacturing organization in the world---an organization capable of giving the most complete expression to Oakland principles of design and refinements of construction; and with a buying power that makes sure a minimum cost of materials.

¶ Due to this same organization there is a unity of purpose which guarantees that into every Oakland motor car there is an in-built quality which makes the manufacturer proud to have built tee car, and the user proud to own it.

¶ The working together of these forces, the striving of many men and minds toward the accomplishment of a single purpose, finds expression in a

RUTH IS HOME AGAIN

"Mother, do you ever have trouble getting all of the yellow out of the white of the egg, when you are making icing?" asked Ruth one day while she was stirring up a cake, "you know the white will not froth when it is beaten, if any of the yellow remains."

"I had that very trouble while you were gone," replied her mother, "what in the whirld can I do to prevent this mixture? I'm sure you know a way."

"Yes, I know a way, and Aunt Mary put me wise, as she did to a number of other things. When any of the yellow remains in the white of the eggs, just dip a cloth in hot water, touch the yellow spots with it, and the yolk will adhere to it, and leave the white entirely free from it's taint. Isn't it easy? I'll have a chance to try it in a few minutes, and I'll show you."

50,000 CARS FOR IOWA

Ten Per Cent of Cars Made Last Year Find Market Here

One out of every ten automobiles made in the United States last year was sold in Iowa. 500,000 cars were manufactured last year in the United States. This means that 50,000 cars were sold to people who live in Iowa. The statement was made in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

If we may compare Iowa with Minnesota, figures lately gathered there and probably applicable to Iowa, show that of all the cars purchased there last year 63 per cent went to towns of less than 3000 population, and therefore largely to farmers; while sales of low priced cars traced directly to farmers were fully 75 per cent.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Henry VIII, of England, was betrothed at the age of 12, married at the age of 17, and in the 53 years of his life was married six times.

Government reports for the fiscal year 1914-15 show a decrease of 64,529,729 cigars smoked in the United States, and an increase of 320,809,776 cigarets.

An English writer has written a book in which he describes more than 700 forms of carriages used in every country of the world. The book takes the history of passenger-carrying vehicles from the time of Joseph until the present. It deals with all forms from the man-drawn jinrikisha of Japan to the American Pullman car.

It is going the rounds of the papers that autoists traveling at night can avoid the glare of the head lights of an approaching auto by the simple process of tipping the windshield backward at an angle of about 45 degrees. This causes the intense glare of the oncoming head lights to be thrown upward and still allows the driver to see his own side of the road. The experiment is worth trying and a little experimenting will show that the trick really works.

Five-Passenger Touring Car--Model 83
$750. f.o.b. Toledo

Advantages—For Your Wife

Many a car that looks good from a superficial examination is often found to be very incomplete and lacking in many conveniences, after it has been purchased.

Nowadays all cars run but some run with considerable less bother than others.

In this respect the Overland has many desirable advantages---advantages that will appeal particularly to your wife.

All electric control buttons are located on the steering column---within natural reach. The operation of these buttons start, stop and light the car. Nothing could be simpler.

The clutch and brake pedals are adjustable to any angle. Another convenience.

Also, they "give" with practically no effort. One does not have to strain in order to apply the brake or disengage the clutch.

The steering wheel is large and turns very easily. Strength is not a bit necessary. A young girl can handle it.

The shifting levers are handy and shift readily. They are placed so that they in no way interfere with either the driver or other occupant of the front seat.

All storm curtains can be put on in a few minutes, without getting out of the car, They are arranged so that they almost fall in place.

These few things are indicative of Overland comforts and conveniences. Your wife will appreciate them.

Compared with other popular priced cars, the Overland has many decided advantages.

RUSS PEASANTS STOP LABORS TO WATCH CZAR'S ARMY RETREAT

©UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

Polish peasants who have just stopped from their field labors are seen here watching the czar's cavalry as it flees before the spirited German advance. Not the picturesque costumes worn by both men and women in this section of Russia.

Chief of British Staff Began As Plain Soldier

Sir William Robertson, About Whom Little Is Known, Has Rendered Some of Most Efficient Service of Any Man In Present War—He Is a Thorough Officer.

British Headquarters, France, (by mail).—Little is known to the outside world about Sir William Robertson K. C. V. O., K. C. B., D. S. O., whose remarkable career from the ranks to chief of staff of the army is so well known to the army itself. His work in relation to that of Sir John French, the commander in chief, has been described as that of the general manager of a great corporation to that of its president.

A powerful built country boy, he came to London at the age of 19 and enlisted in the Ninth Lancers. Promotion from the ranks is not frequent. The great majority of officers come from the military school at Sandhurst. But the door is kept open for a private of good education and character. By passing a stiff examination he may secure a commission.

Young Robertson had had only an elementary education, but he set out to make up for the deficency by study. He invested his shilling a day, which is the pay of a British private, in books. As a British regular trooper has none too much time to himself he used to get comrades to read to him from Bacon and the English classics while he was grooming his horse or cleaning his equipment.

An Expert Organizer.

Not until he had served 10 years did he pass his examination which gave him a commission in the Third Dragoon guards. He was then 29 and the average second lieutenant had about eight years the start of him on the army list. In the course of lineal promotion he could never hope to be more than a major. Special promotion could come only through distinguishing himself. Wa Donald, who won fame by his charge at Omduran and other eminent British commanders who had risen from the ranks had won their way as natural leaders of men in the field. Robertson's career is the more striking, officers say, because it is due to excellence in organization and in the application of the methods of modern warfare, which presupposes the grounding of a thorough scientific military education.

Four years after he had received his commission he had won enough attention to be assigned to the intelligent branch of the quartermaster's department in India. In India he found his opportunity. Rewards are given officers for learning native dialects.

To the average officer there is nothing very attractive in spending hours with a native "munshi," or teacher in acquiring a tongue which can be of use with only some frontier tribe. Robertson offered his munshi a quarter of the reward when he was proficient enough to earn it by passing an examination.

How He Learned Dialects.

Sir William, when he is reminiscent, will recall what an excellent bargain this proved to be. The munshi saw to it that his pupil did not fail to improve any spare moments. He would be waiting at his pupil's door at daybreak and put him through an hour's lesson before breakfast. Having mastered one dialect, Robertson undertook another and then another. Soon he became known as a language expert. This gained for him another opportunity which was to apply his knowledge by explorations on the northwest frontier. When the Chitral trouble came his linguistic accomplishments and his knowledge of the country were invaluable. He came out of the Chitral campaign with the distinguished service order for services which included gallantry in action when he was severely wounded. Now he was a "marked man" in the service, marked by stubborn application which had brought him from the ranks and by his demonstrated ability.

"Every one had to admire him," as another general said. "He had won his way without influence against odds by sheer hard work, making the most of his natural gifts."

On the staff throughout the South African campaign he earned the praise of Roberts and Kitchener by his capacity for getting things done when others sometimes failed. When in 1910 he was placed in command of the army staff college, even those who agreed that he had shown himself to be the man for the place, were amazed at the thought of a man who had been for 10 years a private without any groundwork of regular academic education, should become the director of an institution which gathers the ablest officers of the army for instruction in the highest branches of war and gives the character to army organization in time of war.

Meantime he had kept on with his languages. He now knew French and German and he had studied the continental army systems. There seems to be general agreement that his improvement of the staff college marked an epoch.

Supplies Always There.

As director of military training at the war office he later had much to do with the preparation of the British expeditionary force. He went to France with it as quartermaster general, who was responsible for keeping that army overseas supplied. His success in this capacity led to his appointment as chief of staff.

Now all the branches of the army's activities are under his direction. It is his business to coordinate all, and to amalgamate the forces of the new army which arrive with the old in a homogeneous organization up to the standard required by present conditions of warfare. Despite his life of unremitting application he has few grey hairs at 52, and he gives the impression of the physical vigor and endurance which enables him to keep up the pace of 16 hours' hard work a day. Those who go into his office know him as a man of few words, a good listener, who sticks to the facts and never indulges in theories.

"He does not hesitate to do away with red tape," said one of his assistants. "The essential point with him is to get the thing done. During the retreat from Mons we lost a great deal of material. Among other things officers and men lost all their equipment even including their caps in some instances. As the government clothes and equips the men they could be cared for. But the officers' pay for their own. They would have to fill out certain forms for reimbursement which would have to go to the war office—but Sir William settled that in a minute by giving orders that they should be supplied, and we could take care of the red tape afterward. Throughout all the vicissitudes of the campaign from Mons to the Aisne and then to the Ypres-Armentieres line the soldiers never went short of food. Regardless of red tape and any other obstacles he saw that in some way or other their rations reached them. He is proud of the fact that he rose from the ranks and he dislikes publicity. His one supreme interest is his work. He likes work for work's sake."

Signs of Economy.

From the Indianapolis News.

Substantial benefits are expected to accrue from the general demand for "preparedness." The widespread belief that this country should improve its defenses has led to an examination of national finances. Months ago it was learned that President Wilson had discussed with department heads the necessity for a budget system, and it is understood now that such a system will be recommended to congress at the forthcoming session. In line with this plan are other changes, chief of which are reform in "pork barrel" legislation and greater efficiency in the treasury department. Secretary McAdoo has appointed a committee of treasury officials to investigate and make recommendations to place the department on a "more efficient, economical and business basis." The treasury and postoffice departments have for some time been cooperating on a plan to bring about economy in the construction of public buildings for the postal service. One result of this work was the determination to have central offices in tall office buildings, instead of in structures consisting of only one or two floors. The idea was to save money in the purchase of ground.

An item of more than ordinary interest is a statement from Representative Sparkman, of Florida, chairman of the rivers and harbors committee, that the committee's next appropriation bill would be much smaller should the administration persist in its desire to strengthen the army and the navy. Other public improvements will also be affected. Thus the government might save enough money the next session for the construction of two or three battleships and a number of coast defense works. It is evident that the administration leaders in congress are willing to cooperate with the president. "Economy and efficiency" are words much used today, but they apply to government and congressional affairs as possibly to no other activities.

When the next rivers and harbors appropriation bill comes up there undoubtedly will be a demand for pet projects, important, possibly, from a local and political standpoint, but extravagant when general transportation needs are concerned. Now that public desires are shifting, the time is auspicious for cutting off numerous wasteful practices.

Unexcited England.

From Century Magazine.

"It was not until September, at the furthest point of the British retreat, that the full meaning of the predicted call for 3,000,000 men was understood even by the intelligent, and to this day there exists in many of the farming districts a strange remoteness from the struggle going on so near by. Imagine the feelings of the people of New York, if great battles were being fought as near as Washington. Consider the intense public interest and the suspension of all ordinary activities that would follow a naval battle along the southern Jersey coast or the bombardment of Atlantic City by hostile air craft. Then picture if you can a peaceful English village where, with a favorable wind, the sound of guns in the channel can be distinctly heard, and near which 4,000 or 5,000 soldiers in training may be in camp, the villagers of which are content to gather their news every day from the rural postman, and wait until Sunday for their weekly paper to confirm and elaborate his statements."

A Short and Profitable Patent.

From the Wall Street Journal.

Perhaps the shortest patent application extant is the one on file in the patent office at Washington, which reads. "I claim a patent on a screw with a gimlet point."

Previous to that all screws used in wood work had been of the blunt end variety, and the carpenter had to carefully bore a hole with a gimlet or augur before inserting his screw and forcing it home. The advent of the screw with a gimlet point which would bore itself in, revolutionized this.

This patent was held by the American Screw Company, of Providence, R. I., and before the patent ran out and it was impossible for others to manufacture it without damage suits, this company made tremendous profits. The demand for the gimlet pointed screw was, of course, immense and the company did not know what to do with its profits.

All of its dray horses were carefully selected blacks and tremendous prices were paid for good stock. The harness was of patent leather trimmed with red, while the wagons plying back and forth between the factory and the docks or the railroad had red undergear to match the harness trimmings, and the wheels were decorated with gold leaf, 14 karat fine. But this is all past. Today the pointed screw can be purchased at any corner store for a few cents a package.

Als Ich Kann!

From Collier's.

After a year of war the kaiser still reiterates his sacrilegious vaunt, "God is with us!" We have heard this commented upon unfavorably in Canada, but we have also heard Canadian clergymen express their opinion that in fighting for the British empire the young men of Canada fight on God's side. Now, we sympathize with Canada in this war, and with Belgium; but the attitude which has most of dignity, force, and sincerity is not the British one.

It is the attitude of France, perhaps the only country fighting that hasn't dragged God into the argument of blood. France, like England and Germany, counts among her soldiers and leaders both self-styled Christians and frank infidels—but France appeals to no religious passion—only to love of country. That is enough. The French soul was interpreted for us a few years since in what is the greatest book that the Twentieth century has so far given us: Romain Rolland's "Jean-Christophe." As Christopher's name saint carried the Christ over the water, so has France bravely borne the burden of civilization—a heavy burden in these last 13 months.

One recalls, therefore, the words of advice spoken in M Rolland's book by a philosophical old German—a German imagined by a Frenchman:

> Do not abuse life (said Jean-Christophe's uncle)· live in today. Be reverent toward each day. Love it, respect it, do not soil it. See, it is winter now. Everything is asleep. The good earth will warm again. You have only to be good and patient like the earth. Be reverent. Wait. If you are good, all will go well. If you are not good, if you are weak, if you do not succeed, well, you must be happy in that. Why be angry because of what you can not do? We all have to do what we can. Als Ich kann. A hero is a man who does what he can.

All France is hero today—hero in the Jean-Christophe sense, and with no lugging in of deity or devil. Rolland, who has deeply loved the good both in his own great country and in Goethe's, dedicated his epical romance to "the free spirits of all nations who suffer, fight, and will prevail." They are fighting over there in Flanders, over there in France. Long live the free spirits—free of tyrants, free of tyrants' cant.

Bacteriologists recently found under the finger nails of men, women and children no less than 13 kinds of disease germs, including diphtheria, tuberculosis and influenza.

The biggest ox in the world is to be killed at Schwerin, Germany, for food. He was bred from an Indian zebu, stands 10 feet 6 inches high and weighs 4,180 pounds.

It is expected that both Perrin and McKenzie will ask for immediate sentences.

A sentry never gives up his ride to anyone—not even to his general, no matter how persistently the latter may demand it.

THE ENDLESS BATTLE.

Henry George.

Look around today. Lo, here and now in our civilized society, the old allegories yet have a meaning, the old myths are still true. Into the Valley of the Shadow of Death yet often the path of Duty leads; through the streets of Vanity Fair walk Christian and Faithful; and on Greatheart's armor ring the clanging blows. Ormuzd still fights with Ahriman—the Prince of Light with the powers of darkness. He who will hear, to him the clarions of the battle call.

How they call, and call, and call, till the heart swells that hears them! Strong soul and high endeavor, the world needs them now. Beauty still lies imprisoned and iron wheels still go over the good, the true and the beautiful that might spring from human lives.

And they who fight with Ormuzd, they may not know each other—somewhere, sometime, will their muster roll be called.

TURKS BELIEVE MOST ANY KIND OF STORY

Constantinople Hotbed of Rumors, Some so Extravagant to Be Ridiculous.

Constantinople, (by mail.)—As instances of some of the remarkable war rumors afloat in the Turkish capital, the Associated Press correspondent found that the following had circulation and credence among a large number of Greeks and Armenians, and even some uninformed Turks:

That American engineers were engaged in digging a canal across the narrow part of the Gallipoli peninsula; that the Anglo-French allies had built and put into operation a railroad 25 kilometers long, and that the allies were now busy rebuilding the Greek towns along the Dardanelles and the Aegean sea, which were destroyed during the various bombardments. Lastly, that the French and English would be masters of the Dardanelles, sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus within 14 days.

There are, of course, no American canal builders anywhere near the Dardanelles, there is no such railroad as the allies are said to have built; the Greek towns are in ruin as before; and the 14-day period allowed for the penetration of the straits is recurrently prolonged.

The rumors mentioned are not the most extravagant that one hears in Constantinople. they are merely those heard most often and seemingly believed by a large number of the Greeks and Armenians.

Seeking enlightment as to the reason for such an odd rumor as the presence of American canal diggers, the correspondent learned from a Greek resident that the allies had engaged American engineers to dig the supposed canal because they had such success in canal building at Panama, and that the object of the canal through the Gallipoli peninsula was to afford a channel for the allied fleet to reach Constantinople without having to pass the Dardanelles' forts whose strength, no one here, even Greeks and Armenians, longer doubt.

The suggestion that such a canal would be the task of several years was altogether lost on the man who believed the rumor.

The report that the allies have built a military railroad from Sid-el-Bahr to a point 25 kilometers north is even more widely believed. The truth is that the allies would have to run the railroad in circles in order to make it 25 kilometers in length unless it penetrated the Turkish lines.

An attache of the American embassy in Constantinople had been so impressed with these reports of the railroad building, in fact, that even he besieged the Associated Press correspondent for the truth.

The activity of persons who circulate such rumors as are calculated to falsely impress the populace with the success of the allies gives the military authorities considerable trouble. The penalty for such an offense may be as much as six years imprisonment and a fine that may mean the confiscation of all the property the offender has. But even this drastic measure does not make the rumor mongers more careful. Almost daily a dozen of such cases are disposed of with varying results. A few nights ago a meteor fell near Constantinople, the career of the celestial wanderer coming to an end with a vivid flash of light and a sharp explosion. The next day it was asserted by rumor that a British aeroplane had thrown bombs upon the buildings of the Sublime Porte.

The disposition of the Constantinople newspapers, however, to publish all the facts that they can obtain was recently shown in the reproduction by most of the newspapers here of some of the dispatches which had been forwarded to America by the Associated Press correspondent. They were published merely as showing what a neutral correspondent had found on the peninsula.

Patriotic Hyphenated Editors.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Nothing of the so-called "hyphenated" favor is revealed in the comments of representative Hungarian-American editors on their ambassador, Dr Dumba. Editor Zador Szabados of a New York daily paper jeers at the doctor's solicitude in war time over the long working day of Hungarians in some steel plants after ignoring it in the years of peace. He adds:

"We fully agree with the American standpoint that a representative of a foreign country commits an inexcusable indiscretion by attempting to interfere with another's state's domestic affairs."

Editor Geza D. Berko says the ambassador's was an impossible scheme. To make known to Hungarians the home law relative to employment in a plant engaged in making munitions for the allies would be one thing, he says. But in pursuing the methods he did Dr Dumba was wrong.

Business Manager Joseph Horvath of a Cleveland Hungarian paper says the Dumba plan "never could succeed because the Hungarian-American papers would never give a helping hand to it."

Speaking in behalf of the Bohemians who "have no desire to return to their fatherland from which they were driven for political and economic reasons," the Bohemian National Alliance in a public expression refers to Dr. Dumba's "unlawful and anti-American act with intent to disorganize and tie up the munition industry."

Why is it that other classes of the hyphenated element who were also driven from their fatherland by "political and economic reasons" invariably take the foreign view against the interests and the national sentiment of the land in which they found opportunity?

To the entire hyphenated press of all sorts and conditions the Bohemian-American editors have set an example in loyal Americanism and patriotism.

Benefits of College Life.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The community life of college or boarding school is invaluable training to youth. Quite apart from educational stimulus and instruction this companionship puts the student in touch with the spirit of the time in which his or her life is to be lived. Students, coming together from all parts of the country, bring with them a national spirit that rises above a local spirit. Removed from home environment, the scholar sinks or swims, according to individual merit. Usually he swims—there are plenty to instruct him in the art of keeping his head above water. He gains strength and courage to hold his own against the world, and reasonableness enough to respect the rights of others. The college body must have standards also—high standards—and the pupil learns not only to be a gentleman at heart, but to act as one. He unconsciously acquires polished manners where before he only boasted good ones. And he acquires sharpened wits as well as wisdom. He is neither dead nor sleeping when he wins his degree, but acutely alive and ready for the fray of life.

The Waiting Instrument.

I blame no man for failure here, for he
Who wins no crown is like an instrument
That silent waits the Master's touch to free
The noble numbers that within are pent.

Untouched, and unawake, and still it stands,
Despite the glorious measures it contains
Who knows but that in those diviner lands
'Twill swell the songs of Heaven with its strains?

—Blakeney Gray, in Ainslee's.

THE ONE RECIPE IDEA.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

If you will look carefully over all your collection of recipes, you will find that in each class of foods there are a few basic recipes. That is to say, cream soups require a cream or white sauce foundation, and a flavoring, usually in the form of a vegetable puree. Breakfast muffins are made up of liquid, flour, a leavening agent and something for flavor—sugar, eggs, salt or butter. There are certain proportions between liquids and flour in the various sorts of batters used in fritters, griddle cakes, cake, muffins and waffles. And knowing these, it is possible to vary the unessential ingredients at will. Blanc mange, gelatine desserts, custards—all are made with a fundamental relation between the different ingredients used at the bottom of your particular recipe.

So if you work out the basic recipe for all the different foods that you are in the habit of cooking, you can really simplify your recipes and make the work of cooking easier.

A thin batter, from which fritters, griddle cakes, waffles and some other things are made, contains equal parts of flour and liquid.

A thick batter, from which cakes and muffins are made, contains two parts of flour to one of liquid.

For both, a level teaspoonful of baking powder is used for each half cupful of flour, and an eighth of a teaspoonful of salt.

Cake, of course, has more sugar than muffins and any number of eggs may be added. For muffins, cornmeal, graham flour or any other flour can be substituted in whole or in part for the white flour—and there you have a tremendous variety in muffins and cakes at your finger ends.

Now, suppose you have a particularly satisfactory cake recipe. By adding cinnamon, ground cloves and a little allspice, you have a spice cake. By adding half a cupful each of raisins and currants you have a raisin cake. By adding chopped nuts, you have a nut cake, and by adding a third of a cupful of cocoa you have a chocolate cake.

With baked custard it is the same. Choose a reliable custard recipe. Then vary it by substituting strong coffee, strong cocoa or some other flavor for part of the milk.

FINDING FAULT WITH HIM.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Where the apple reddens
Never pry—
Lest we lost our Edens,
Eve and I."

If you have a husband who is trying hard the best way he can to get along, don't be a millstone around his neck to hamper him in his bitter fight with the harsh world. One word of encouragement from the woman he loves will put heart and strength in him to make renewed efforts; her sneer will make him so despondent that the lightest blow struck at him by an unfeeling stranger will force him down and out.

It is every man's right to have a happy home if he provides one for his wife and assumes the responsibility of its upkeep. If his nerves and brain have been on the rack all day by business cares and worries, he should find peace, comfort, love, consideration and cheerfulness within the four walls of his home.

Wives may not think that such husbands need coddling, and loving, but they do. What encouragement has a husband who has worked hard all day if he is met by a fretful wife who is ever ready to recite her woes to him, but never asks him: "Did you have a busy day, dear, and are you tired? If you do not feel like going out we will postpone going to the movies or concert or lecture until some other time."

How grateful the average husband would be fore such kindly solicitude, which tactly proved to him beyond the power of mere words, how dear he was to her.

Even if a husband does err in his judgment now and then, he should not be made to feel that he had committed an unpardonable folly. Wise is the wife who throws her arms about his neck, assuring him that she is sure he has done everything for the best, and that success will come their way when he is least expecting it—that her confidence in him is unshakable. Such a husband will have renewed strength to try again, aye, and keep on trying until he really does win out.

Many a man has a dread of telling his wife of his business affairs when they go wrong, fearful of her upbraidings, which would be but adding fuel to the fire of his discouragement. Don't find fault with a good, deserving husband. Worthy ones are hard to get, being few and far between. It is in almost every instance the man who has a happy home life who is tormented at home who meets with ignominious failure. Love and appreciation are props of steel to keep a man's courage from sinking.

I wish every petulant wife who is not doing her share in lightening her husband's burdens would ponder over these words and make the resolve that she will experiment on being more kind and tolerant with her husband, to spur him on to more sucessful achievements. Finding fault with him will insure his anger, discontent with his wife and home life. His wife's love and confidence will help him climb to success. Wives, think it over.

A King In Khaki.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

In pictures of warfare at the western front, King Albert of Belgium might easily be mistaken for an ordinary soldier of the legion. Nothing is distinguishing, save that he looks "every inch a king"—of the right caliber!

And he is a king who recalls the best traditions of the fighting kings of old, when they marched with the men, or led them, to victory or defeat.

From the beginning he has been, in the thick of the fight for his country, sharing the fortunes of war with his comrades—true king and true soldier, asking nothing but to serve.

And it has been valiant, inspiring service, which stands high on the honor roll of kings whose swords were drawn for justice, and not glory.

The vision of his Belgium, laid waste by the invader; the ashes of its ruined homes; the shadows of his wandering people; the tears of the innocent and orphaned ones—all these are with him, upholding, nerving him for every ordeal.

He is a king in khaki, who holds that the king is not greater than the people; that the only heroism is that of service—to live for one's country, or die in its defense.

Trees Along Roadways.

From the Portland Oregonian.

The habit of planting fruit and nut trees by the roadside has long prevailed in parts of Europe. It should be cultivated in the United States. Hickory and walnut trees are as healthful as elms and a great deal more useful. Salem's streets have been planted with hundreds of walnut trees. Those set out along McMinnville's pavements years ago will produce a ton and a half of nuts this season.

The first use of the treadmill was in China, where it did service in remote times in irrigating the land.

she murmured half then turned her eager face tion of the corner above.

She forgot Eric and Adam Carr and the sinking feeling she had experienced on seeing them together not five minutes before. There is something immeasurably selfish in young love.

Jack Payson came striding toward her. Perhaps from a window in the Briscoe house Horace saw them meet and move off together down the street.

An hour later she said goodby to her lover at the gate and hurried up the walk toward the suddenly attractive portals of "the Giants Castle." There was a gladness, a brightness in her eyes; a song in her heart. Somehow the world was brighter, the sun was warmer, the buds on the trees were greener than they had ever been before. She tripped up the steps and fairly danced across the porch. There was in her mind a great resolve to do something she had never done before, to put her arms about her uncle's neck and kiss him, not once but many times.

She paused for a moment just outside the library door to compose herself. As she stood there breathing quickly, the curious stillness she had noticed on entering the house became more pronounced. She recalled with a shudder, having been in a house once where a dead woman was lying upstairs in the winding sheet. The utter stillness of that well remembered house was not unlike this that now closed in about her, smothering the joy that so lately radiated from her warm, throbbing heart.

Half in fear, she laid her hand on the knob of the library door. A moment passed before she turned it. The sense of impending disaster increased with each second of delay. What had happened? Who in the house was dead?

The door opened quiet, slowly, and she looked into the partially darkened room. No voice called out a welcome to her.

The shade in the big front window was high, that end of the room was flooded with sunlight. Her eyes were slow to take in the details of the picture that lay before her. So immovable, so still were the four figures that made up the tableau that she could think of them only as statues.

First and naturally, her gaze fell upon the square, thick set figure in the window. Adam Carr was standing there, his back to the room, his hands clasped behind him, staring at the porch through the white lace curtains. It was as if he had turned his back upon a particularly harrowing scene.

Eric leaned against the mantlepiece, his chin lowered, his arms folded across his breast, the picture of utter dejection. On the sofa before him sat his uncle and aunt, the former stiffly upright and tense, the latter drooping limply against him, her hands covering her eyes.

It was all over. Eric had confessed. The blow had fallen.

After what seemed an interminable length of time, her brother lifted his eyes and saw her standing there, stunned, irresolute. He stared for a moment with haggard eyes, and then let his arms droop limply to his side. The act was in itself an acknowledgment of potent despair. Then, with a movement of his head, he directed her to attend the stricken pair on the sofa.

As she glided across the room Adam Carr turned from the window and swiftly left the room, without so much as a glance at the four persons who were left to play out the drama. With deliberate intent he banged the library door in closing it. The shock served its purpose. It broke the spell.

With infinite gentleness, Mary drew Mrs. Blagden's stiff, cold hands away from her face and held them close to her own warm, heaving breast. Mrs. Blagden stared blankly, ever wonderingly, at the face of the girl. The white, drawn lips moved in a voiceless question.

"They know everything," came in hoarse tones from Eric.

The tears sprang to Mary's eyes. Through the mist that blinded them, they asked the great, important question of him.

"How can I ask them to forgive me?" he groaned, and that was his answer to the question that lay in her eyes.

Mrs. Blagden's lips parted. A dead, lifeless voice uttered these words:

"Let me be alone with you, Horace. Let me die with your arms about me."

Then it was that Horace relaxed. His strong gaze wavered. A great shudder ran over his frame.

"There is nothing more to be said," fell clearly, mechanically from his lips. His eyes were upon the white face of his nephew. "We know all there is to know. It is all over. The truth at last." His voice rose to a sort of wail. "I—I can't understand why you have allowed us to suffer all these years, Eric, when one word from you would have ended our misery, our uncertainty, our—our endless waiting. See! See what it has cost us!"

"God forgive me," groaned Eric, burying his face in the arm that now rested on the mantel.

With an effort, Horace struggled to his feet. Slowly he crossed over to the young man's side, towering above the bent, shaking figure. After a moment's hesitation, he laid his hand on Eric's shoulder. His nephew cringed.

"Give me time," he began, but went back to correct himself, revealing the new phase that marked his manner in these days. "Give us time, Eric. It is hard to take all this in at once. We must work it out for ourselves and by ourselves. Just your aunt and I. When the shock has worn off." He was speaking jerkily, brokenly, as if the effort to control himself was trying his every power. "We do not want to be harsh, or unjust, Eric. We shall seek—"

Eric looked up, amazed. "Harsh? Unjust?" he said bitterly. "Why, I've forfeited all claim to—"

"Hust, my boy," said Mr. Blagden. "Give us time—give us time."

Mary, in the intensity of a great emotion cried out shrilly. "He didn't mean to—to kill him, Uncle. You know he did not mean—"

Mrs. Blagden shook herself free and turned on the girl. There was a wild, insane glare in her eyes.

"He treatened Chetwynd 100 times."

"He threatened Chetwynd 100 times," she repeated Horace. "He hated him! He wanted to kill him!"

"My dear, my dear!" pleaded Horace. "Calm yourself. Let us judge this poor boy as God will judge him. Remember, we called him our son but yesterday."

"I cannot—I cannot forgive" mourned his wife, falling back limply. "Don't touch me—now!" she cried out to the girl, who would have caught her in her arms. Mary shrank back, repulsed.

A full minute passed, fraught with tragic misery. Eric was the first to speak.

"I have told you everything. Adam Carr has supported my story. If you think he would lie to save me or himself—"

"No," said Horace grimly, "Adam Carr would not lie. He hates me too well to lie to me. The truth always hurts worse than a lie, and he knows it. I believe you, Eric. You have never been anything but honest. It isn't that. It's the other thing. The long years we've been allowed to suffer."

You would have sent me to the gallows if you had known all this five years ago. You were different. You would have had no mercy, no pity in those days.

"You think I've changed? You were not afraid to risk confession today. Is that it?"

"No, no," cried Eric hastily. "I don't mean that. But I was afraid at the time. Afterwards it was too late. I—but I've said all this before. Why go over it again. I am the confessed slayer of your son, my own cousin. Now I ask to be given a fair trial, a just hearing. That's all."

Mr. Blagden said nothing for a few moments. He was studying the young man's face.

"You came out with the truth because you were sorry for us," he said at last. "Because you wanted to end our suffering and suspense?"

"Yes," said Eric. "I could have gone forever without telling if I had so desired."

"And you were not afraid that some day Adam Carr would betray you? You have never felt that he had a weapon to hold over you and to strike if he saw fit to suit purposes of his own?"

Eric hesitated. "No, I've never really been afraid of Adam Carr. If I had been afraid of him I should never have come to you with the truth. He did hold it over my head but—well here I am, sir. I was not afraid of him."

"I had to do with Mary and John Payson?"

"Yes. I will be frank."

"You came to the truth because you were sorry for us because—" His voice faltered. "Because you loved us after all and could not let it go on any longer?"

"Yes."

"Conscience had nothing to do with it? The fear of God was not in your heart?"

Eric did not hesitate. "No. My conscience so far as the death of Chetwynd is concerned is clear. I had no fear of God, for God was my witness."

Mr. Blagden again laid his hand on his nephew's shoulder.

"Is it love or pity?" he asked, his voice shaking.

Eric was honest. He looked squarely into his uncle's eyes.

"I don't know, sir. I can't explain. I used to hate you and Aunt Rena. I do not hate you now. Somehow, I have changed."

"Somehow, we have changed," said Horace, correcting him. "We should not have expected you to love us, when, God forgive me for saying it—when our own son did not love us. Do not interrupt. If he had loved us he would not be where he is today. My boy, I will not say to you now that I forgive you. It is not yet in my heart to do so. I must have it all out with myself with God as my counsellor. You took the life of my son. You—Rena I beg of you!"

Mrs. Blagden had risen and stood wavering before the two men on the verge of utter collapse. She put out her hand and touched her husband's arm.

"I want to be alone with you, Horace. Will you come?" she said duly.

"Yes, yes," he cried, putting his arm around her shoulders. "We will go, we will go my dear."

"Wait," she said. Then she turned directly to Eric. "Eric, you should not have let your uncle suffer all these years. It was cruel of you to—"

"Come, come my dear," broke in Mr. Blagden, unsteadily. "You were the great sufferer. I—I was going about among men all the time. You sat here alone and—My God! How long the years have been! My dear, my dear! How long we have waited together, you and I!"

He broke down completely. With the frail form of his wife clasped tight to his breast he lowered his head until his face was buried in the silken white hair.

Eric's lips moved in a mute appeal; his hands went out toward them and then fell to his sides. With a dry, racking sob in his throat, he turned away staggering blindly toward the window. Mary came up with him quickly. She slipped her arm about his shoulders and whispered words of comfort and hope.

The shuffling of unsteady, dragging feet drew their visual attention once more to the pair at the other end of the room. Mr. Blagden had started to leave the library, he was making his way toward the door with the bent figure of his wife at his side, his arm about her waist for support. The old man's head was held high and his eyes were set.

Eric sprang forward to assist him but was waved aside. Humbly the young man walked before them and opened the door for them to pass out into the hall.

OUTFLOW OF GOLD STAGGERS EUROPE

Upsetting of Economical Conditions May Diminish Labor Demand and Cause Trouble After the War.

BY FRANCIS W. HIRST.

Editor of "The Economist."

London Special.—As war continues, with British and German expenditures for war alone reaching a total of probably £7,000,000 a day, the outflow of surplus gold from Europe to the United States and to all neutral countries must increase. Even Spain has taken about $1,000,000 worth of the precious metal from London lately. Japan will probably receive a great amount from Russia in return for munitions. But what will happen when gold become a drug in neutral markets and belligerents can offer nothing else in return for imports? I see from Japanese papers that Russo-Japanese merchant fleets, which carry on trade between Vladivostok and Japan, after raising freight rates, have insisted since August 10 that freights be paid in Japanese currency, thus avoiding the depreciation in the ruble. Gradual dissipation of great European gold hoards together with excessive issues of inconvertible paper on the continent, may have upon gold an effect similar to that demonitization had upon silver after 1870. Gold may become cheap and purchasing power may fall further. Gold prices will rise, and after the war or perhaps before its end the double consequence of rising prices and diminished demand for labor will cause universal discontent among the poor.

Today's meeting of parliament, following the trade union congress, will clear the political air. Conflicts in the cabinet over conscription may be delayed till finance is settled and the Dardanelles issue decided. The budget is the principal dish. The chief contribution to new taxation will probably be through the income tax being increased both as to its rate and its scope, a scheme which most business men prefer to any increase in the inheritance tax. One hundred millions in new taxes are freely predicted. Prolongation of war makes public and private economies essential.

According to "The Times," Lloyd George's criticism of trade unions has produced resentment. Peril of overstraining industrial workers was emphasized at British association meetings. Overwork usually means more strikes rather than increased production. Government factory inspectors drew attention to this aspect, apparently overlooked by Lloyd George, who is now the prophet of compulsion and conscription.

ROOSEVELT SAYS THIS IS ERA OF COMBINATION

Theodore Roosevelt in the Metropolitan.

Big business has come to stay. It can not be put an end to, and if it could be put an end to, it would mean the most widespread disaster to the community. The proper thing to do is to socialize it, to moralize it, to make it more an agent for social good and to do away with everything in it that tends toward social evil.

To do this there must be a wise governmental control, a governmental control that will check the corporation when it is doing wrong and check the labor union when it is doing wrong, and hold each accountable and responsible for its deeds and misdeeds, but which shall at the same time recognize that the corporation has its rights just as the union has its rights, and that each is to be encouraged as long as it does well. No great industrial well being can come unless big business prospers.

We in this country have only begun our campaign for a better national life. We have only begun to consider our duty regarding the child. Child labor must be stopped, for the laboring child, the child-drudge, is apt to turn into the shiftless grown-up. The child can be kept off the streets only if he has proper playgrounds, which are just as essential as schools.

The child's mother needs especial care; the mother is the only citizen who deserves even more from the state than does the soldier and who if in need according to her station is entitled to help from the state so that she may rear and care for her children at home.

As for the father, if he is a wage worker, our prime duty is to help him to begin to exercise industrial power. We can aid in testing the plan of profit sharing with industrial workers; and the plan of conditional compensation by which the union as a whole receives the workers' added profit share, and thereby assumes a collective responsibility for efficiency.

If in any industry both the men at the top and the wage workers below are sufficiently advanced to try representative industrial government, we should be encouraged, sometimes, where the union is strong, this should imply legal responsibility on the union's part; for unions differ in strength, conservatism and responsibility as much as corporations do.

When My Ship Comes In.

Somewhere, out on the blue sea sailing,
Where the winds dance and spin;
Beyond the reach of my eager hailing,
Over the breakers' din;
Out where the dark storm-clouds are lifting,
Out where the blinding fog is drifting,
Out where the treacherous sand is shifting,
My ship comes in.
O, I have watched till my eyes were aching,
Day after weary day;
O, I have hoped till my heart was breaking
While the long nights ebbed away;
Could I but know where the waves had tossed her,
Could I but know what storms had crossed her,
Could I but know where the winds had lost her,
Out in the twilight gray!

But though the storms her course have altered,
Surely the port she'll win,
Never my faith in my ship has altered,
I know she is coming in.
For through the restless ways of her roaming,
Through the mad rush of the wild waves foaming,
Through the white crest of the billows combing,
My ship is coming in.

Breasting the tides where the gulls are flying,
Swiftly she's coming in;
Shallows and deeps and rocks defying,
Bravely she's coming it.
Precious the love she will bring to bless me,
Snowy the arms she will bring to caress me,
In the proud purple of kings she will dress me—
My ship that is coming in.

White in the sunshine her sails will be gleaming,
See, where my ship comes in;
At masthead and peak her colors streaming,
Proudly she's sailing in;
Love, hope and joy on her decks are cheering,
Music will welcome her glad appearing,
And my heart will sing at her stately nearing,
When my ship comes in.

THING THAT MIGHT HAPPEN

Skeptics, However, Will Want Affidavit That Old College Chums Took Only One Drink.

"Well, of all things that live and breathe, if it isn't my old college chum, Bill Edworthy!"

With these few well-chosen words, a tall, well-built young fellow slapped another W. B. Y. F. in the small of his back with such a resounding whack as to almost put his lights out. Even a blind baggage car could see that the young men were old college chums.

"Ding my slats," said Bill Edworthy, the young man who had been struck; "if it isn't Henry Allison, the stroke oar of the class of umpty-steen. Well, if you aren't a good sight for tangled lamps."

"Why," continued Henry, "it must be 'steen years since I met you at the last alumni dinner. How's things?"

"Fine. Say, do you remember the night when we got lit up and came down with the chickenpox?"

"Sure do. Sort of a stewed chickenpox. Well, I've got about five minutes to spare. Let's drop into this cafe and have just one drink."

So the two college chums who had not met in so many years sidled into Dinkeldorfer's cafe and Hank gave his order and Bill said: "Make it ditto." The bartender did that little thing for them. They had one drink and Bill said good-by to Hank and Hank said good-by to Bill.

Just one little drink, and each went his way.

Sticking to His Prediction.

Two workmen met in the street and stopped to chat about their friends.

"Casey seems to be doing well where he is," remarked one presently.

"He'll not stop long at that job," replied the other with a gloomy shake of the head.

"Why not? He seems to be quite comfortably placed."

"But he'll not stay there a month. I say it, and I've said it ever since he got that job eighteen months ago."

Rewarded.

"John and James went up the hill to fly their kites. John had a new ball of twine. He gave James ten yards for his kite and kept the remainder of the ball for his own use—"

"I got the answer," shouted one boy.

"Well, what is it?"

"Johnny got a good mark for being perfect at short division."

Where He Learned.

"Why, Willie, I'm surprised to hear you use such language. You have been playing with those naughty boys again, haven't you?"

"Truly I haven't, mamma. I was just over to Tommy Brown's house playing with the parrot his uncle sent him from Chicago."

YES, FATHER PURSUED THEM

In Fact the Old Gentleman Overtook and Stuck Very Close to the Eloping Pair.

When the conversation turned to the subject of romantic marriages this little anecdote was volunteered by H. H. Asker, a North Dakota politician:

One afternoon Green was standing on the corner looking at the jitneys when he was suddenly confronted by an acquaintance of other years. Soon they were comparing notes and recalling happy hours.

"So you were married ten years ago?" said the acquaintance in response to a statement made by Brown. "Took place in the church, I suppose, with bridesmaids, flowers, cake and the brass band?"

"No," answered Brown, with a reflective expression, "it was an elopement."

"An elopement, eh?" returned the acquaintance. "Did the girl's father follow you?"

"Yes," answered Brown, with something akin to a sigh, "and he has been with us ever since."

SAGE TEA PUTS LIFE AND COLOR IN HAIR

Don't stay gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens hair so naturally that nobody can tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

CUPID WINS

A pretty home wedding took place Wednesday evening at 7:30 at the G. W. Kluckhohn home in this city when their son Clarence was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Metzgar, Rev. Howdeshell of the English M. E. church officiating. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present and after congratulations all partook of a bounteous wedding feast.

The bride moved here early last spring with her parents from Chicago and has made many friends during her short residence here.

The groom is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kluckhohn and is strictly a Klemme product—being born and having grown to manhood at this place. For the past few years he has been the right hand man at the Gruetzmacher Bros. place of business and his friends are many and sincere. "Fat" as he is commonly called by his many friends is one of our most ideal young men and will provide a good home for the young lady he has chosen as his life partner.

They will go to housekeeping in a short time in rooms over the old First National Bank building where they will be at home to their many friends.

The TIMES takes pleasure in joining with their many friends in wafting to them our heartiest congratulations and hope that they may enjoy a happy and successful voyage over life's seas.

To the Farmers and School Children of This Vicinity:

Here is an opportunity to make one dollar quick: "A man has $100. He pays $10 per head for cows, $3 per head for sheep, and 50c per head for hogs, and he must purchase 100 head for his money. How many of each does he buy?" The first one to send me the correct answer to this gets the dollar WANTED—500 sets of harness to oil at $1 per set—every 10th set oiled free W. S. LEMMON, the man who works for Frank Gruetzmacher.

The correct answer to the above will be announced next week.

OWNER OF POCKET BOOK FOUND

The pocket book found by W. S. Lemmon in front of the First National Bank on the evening of September 10th, has been returned to its owner. A traveling man saw the advertisement in the KLEMME TIMES while at Belmond, and notified Mr. S J. Hickens, of Waterloo, whom he knew had lost his pocket book. Mr. Hickens wrote to me and described his pocket book and contents in every way. so it was plain to see that he was the owner. I sent him his $35 and received in return $10 for my kindness. So you see it pays to advertise in the KLEMME TIMES. "Honesty is the best policy." W. S. LEMMON,

HOW WELL IT PAYS TO MILK GOOD COWS

What Some of the Good Milkers Have Done For The Past Five and Six Months

Josephine, Pure Bred Holstein, freshened April 23, 5 months in test, 4962 lbs of milk, 188 lbs of butter fat, $53,27 value of butter fat, cost of feed $6.35.

Bess, Pure Bred Short Horn, freshened January 10, 6 months in test, 4492 lbs of milk, 208 lbs of butter fat, $59.80 value of butter fat, cost of feed $8.75.

Nancy, Grade Short Horn, freshened March 4, 6 months in test, 6111 lbs of milk, 268 lbs of butter fat, $76.78 value of butter fat, cost of feed $7.12.

Long Legs, Grade Short Horn, freshened January 15, 5 months in test, 4869 lbs of milk, 218 lbs of butter fat, $63.20 value of butter fat, cost of feed $5.40.

The value of skimmed milk exceeds the cost of feed.

BIG CHANDLER "SIX" MAKES HIGH DIVE SOUTH OF GARNER

An auto accident, which might have been quite serious, but which was not, as all parties which were in the car at the time escaped without very many bruises. On Friday evening a big Chandler Six was coming to Garner from south of Concord. They were probably running at a fast rate of speed, and when they came to the big ditch, which is 12 feet deep, they did nothing else but run the car right into the ditch, landing on the bottom of it in the mud and water. The big ditch is just south of the Concord hill, and the drenger had passed not long before. The old bridge had been removed and a temporary bridge installed on the east of where the old one had been. About 14 loads of sand had been hauled in the road and piled up to use for making the new bridge, and also the material which had been dug from the ditch was piled up on the bank. The parties in the car probably did not see the obstruction, but came on without slackening their speed. They cut through the sand, up over the pile of dirt and landed right side up in the ditch. The car was gotten out some time during the next day and brought to Garner for repairs, which were slight. The parties in the car were very fortunate for not getting seriously hurt, for if the car had turned turtle all might have been killed or at least drowned. It is generally a good plan to keep a lookout for a thing of this syrt when traveling at night on a new road.—Democrat.

CREAMERY ELECTS OFFICERS

The Annual Shareholders meeting of the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery was held at the opera house last Saturday afternoon and very few changes were made in the roster of officers. C. A. Arnold was re-elected president, N. L. Palmer, secretary and H. L. Suckow, treasurer. The following are the directors: John Bock, Jr., Elko Buss, Herman Pricbe, H. R Stromer and W. F. Stille. Everything passed off smoothly and the annual dividend of 8 per cent was declared. It was found that the amount of business transacted the past year will run close to the $100,000 mark, a gain of over 100 per cent over last year when the total amount of business was $47,000. It was also brought out that the Klemme creamery was one of the very few that will show an increase in business this year owing to the very few that will show an increase in business this year owing to the very rainy and cold weather that we have experienced. We believe that a great deal of the success can be given to buttermaker, A. D. Gimse and it is needless to say that he has been retained. Art has been turning out a premium product all the time and can always be found working for the best interest of the creamery and at the same time keeping harmony among the patrons.

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued.)

"I can almost see the struggle on the bridge," said Horace, addressing no one in particular. "It appears to me as if in a vision. I can see Chetwynd hurling the stone at Eric, and the savage attack that came after. I can hear the things he was saying of Mary—those brutal, vicious things. The fight was fair. God called my boy to the judgment bar. It was his time to go. It was not an accident. It was God's will. No human agency could have checked the will of God."

A man was standing near the hat rack in the hall. Eric stared, unbelieving.

Mr. Blagden's gaze rested for a moment on the motionless figure. Then his long, thin arm was raised; a quivering hand pointed toward the door leading to the porch.

"Leave my house!"

Adam Carr did not move. "I just wanted to say—" he began.

"Go!"

"I can't go until I have said—"

"Go, I say!" Horace's voice shook with suppressed fury.

"—until I have said that I am sorry to have been the cause of so much anguish to your wife, toward whom I have had no feeling," persisted Adam patiently. "I am sorry for what I've done to her. My grudge was against you."

"Hard as flint," fell from Horace's twisted lips.

"To strike fire from flint," was the other's sharp retort.

"You have not found me so hard as you suspected," said Horace slowly. "Not hard enough to give out fire when you strike in these days."

"Nor am I so hard, Horace Blagden," said Adam, for the first time revealing a sign of nervousness. "Well, I'll go now. If you need me, Eric, I'll be ready. A black Sunday."

"You have failed there," cried Horace, a thrill in his voice almost of triumph. "It is a bright Sunday. We see the light for the first time in years. Go, sir. Eric will not need you. We shall ask no favors of you, Adam Carr."

Carr allowed his gaze to rest on the face of Mrs. Blagden for an instant. She was regarding him with unspeakable loathing in her eyes; the crushed, beaten spirit was answering the call of pride. He opened his lips to speak his last word to her, met the look in her eyes, bowed awkwardly, and strode from the house without uttering another syllable.

"I cannot turn the other cheek to him—I cannot," grated Horace. "'Love your enemy as yourself!' Bah! Puerile nonsense!"

Brother and sister watched them ascend the stairs and return down the hall. A moment later a door above was gently closed.

"Did you hear what he said?" asked Mary, in a half whisper. "He said Eric will not need you!' Oh, Errie, Errie, he means to be kind, he means to be just."

Eric groaned. "Kind! Just! After what I've done for him."

She spoke eagerly. "He realises that he has not always been kind or just to you. He—"

"See here, Mary, you don't know all that happened in there before you came. He cursed me at first. He called me a murderer. He laughed when I said that I was ready and willing to give myself up to the law. He said there was no law that could punish me sufficiently. The change of front came after all this. Oh, I know how he feels—how he feels in his heart. He—"

"That was madness, fury," she cried. "He couldn't help it. He was beside himself. Now he is beginning to see clearly. He is a fair man."

"Just the same, I told him I was going to give myself up to the law and stand trial. I—"

She cried out piteously. "You must not do that! You shall not!"

"It isn't for Uncle Horace alone to acquit me of manslaughter. That's what Adam says the charge will be. The court must do it. And, listen: if I wait for Uncle Horace to file the affidavit against me, if I wait for him to bring me into court, it will never come to pass. He won't do it. It will be his turn to punish me. He will sit back and let the charge hang over me for years, just as I have done by him in a different way. Oh, I know him! He doesn't forgive so readily. He has Adam Carr and me just where he wants us. And he'll be content to let it wait, just as he has waited."

"I am sure you are wrong. He will do one of two things. He will bring charges against you, or he will openly exonerate you. He will issue a statement, mark my words."

"Besides," went on Eric, knitting his brows in thought, "if I want to be brought to trial and legally acquitted of crime, I must not put him in the false position of complaining against me if he really means to acquit me in his own mind and heart. I must do it all myself. He may not aid in the prosecution, there is that much to be said. But if I don't give myself up, the state's attorney will force him to take action. It's got to come, so I might as well shoulder the whole of it and let Uncle Horace out of an unpleasant job."

Her protests were of no avail. He announced his intention to deliver himself up to the sheriff the next morning.

"It's a bailable offense," he said. "Adam Carr says I will not have to go to gaol if I have a bondsman ready. I am sure I will have no difficulty in getting—"

"What will Joan say when she hears of all this?" cried the uphappy girl, falling back on resources she would have despised an hour ago.

He closed his eyes, as if in pain. "I wonder if what Adam said will turn out to be true."

The remark would have puzzled her at another time. Now she passed it over without comment. A new thought had occurred to her.

"You must go to Jack. Tell everything to him. He will help you. He is strong and—"

"I could have told him yesterday," he said, "but not today. It's too late now."

Martha, the life long servant in the house, was coming down the stairs.

"Dinner's been waiting nearly an hour, Miss Mary," she said peevishly. "Everything's spoilt, and it's Sunday, too. I knocked on their door twice, but Mr. Horace says, without opening, to never mind, they won't be down, but for you young folks to go on eating. Do hurry. Belinda's mad as she c'n be. I don't blame her either. It's terrible for a cook—and an Irish cook at that—to be—Why, Mr. Eric, you surely can't be going out now!"

Eric had grabbed up his hat—an old slouch hat instead of the tall silk one he had worn to church—and was striding toward the porch.

"I can't eat anything—I'm not hungry," he stammered distractedly. "I'm going out for a while, Mary. Stay around close, please, and see that—that everything's all right upstairs."

"Aain't nobody going to eat—" began Martha, almost in a state of collapse.

He was flying down the steps and across the lawn, leaving Mary in the doorway looking after him with troubled, uneasy eyes. She saw him vault the wall and make off in the direction of Jabez Carr's cottage. After a moment she turned to Martha.

"I shan't disappoint you, Martha, I'm hungry. Come along."

That was always the way with Mary. She was a philosopher. She was content to leave everything to Providence—or luck? Meanwhile, she was hungry.

Her brother made straight for old Jabe's cottage. Somehow, he felt in need of an old friend—one who could lie to him joyously. He suddenly was longing for the valuglorious lies that had charmed his boyhood fancy, even though he knew them to be lies. He wanted to hear something beside the truth. The truth was an ugly thing—a very ugly thing. Why do people ever tell the truth? His soul hungered for lies—the gay, delightful lies that old Jabe could tell. Harmless lies, they could hurt no one, not even the teller of them.

Uncle Jabe was smoking his pipe on the doorstep, and gently but quite audibly berating a squirrel which refused to eat out of his hand, a most insulting thing for a squirrel to do, if one could judge by the scornful remarks of the gate keeper.

"Hello!" he called out in his cracked voice to Eric as the young man unlatched the gate. Somewhat summarily, he cast a handful of peanuts at the very head of the astonished squirrel, and hobbled over to meet his visitor. "Dang little fool of an idiot," he complained, as a final opinion of the scurrying quadruped. "Starve, if you want to." This in the face of thoughtless prodigality. "Well, well, Eric, I'm glad to see you. Where you been keepin' yourself?"

Eric wrung the gnarled old paw. Presently they were sitting side by side on the bench, leaning back against the wall of the cottage.

"Uncle Jabe, I wish you'd tell me that story again of the fight you had with the pirates who held Lady Imogen in captivity. That was the very best thing you ever did. Tell it once more."

Jabez scratched his head, blinking his faded little eyes in considerable surprise and embarrassment. He coughed rather dismally. "I—I can't jest exactly place that—Oh, yes, I know the one. But you see, Eric, that was the most gosh-all-whacking lie of all."

"Never mind. That's just why I want to hear it. Go on, please."

The ancient regarded him speculatively. "You are jest like a teeny little kid. They're always askin' you to tell the same story over and over ag'in."

"I'm kind of lonesome, just for one of your whackingest ones, Uncle Jabe," said Eric, rather plaintively. "Don't tell me a true one."

"By ginger, I ain't got any true ones," exclaimed Jabez, very truthfully. "Leastwise, I can't remember the true ones. My memory ain't what it used to be. Come to that, I'm danged if I believe I can recollect the lies either. It's powerful unhandy to have to remember what's lies and what ain't."

"But the one about Lady Imogen was a fine one."

Jabez was racking his brain. "It must ha' been," he mused sadly. "That's why it's slipped my mind. Who was she? I mean, this here Lady Imogen you're talkin' about."

"The daughter of the Earl of Gaystone," supplied the grown-up child.

"Um," said Jabez uncomfortably. "She couldn't ha' been. There never was a Earl of Gaystone. Say, see that squirrel over yonder? That blamed little—"

"Tell another one, if you can't remember that one," Eric broke in. "I'm actually homesick for one of your good old tales. I want to go back to the old days, Uncle Jabe."

"Somethin' gone wrong, my lad?"

"Yes," said Eric, leaning his head against the wall and staring up at the tree tops.

Jabez was silent for a moment.

"All right," said he gently. "I'll tell you a new one—a rip-snorter."

CHAPTER XX.

"ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF."

Joan Bright walked briskly up Blagden avenue the next morning. The day was warm, and sweet, and springlike; the sky was blue; the trees were beginning to don their gay greenery, and the dead leaves of last fall no longer littered the well-kept lawns.

She was abroad early, bound for the home of Horace Blagden, to see Mary Midthorne. Her blithe young heart would not stay closed against the wayward friend; she was off to make peace with her and to beg forgiveness for her own shortcomings.

She had thought it all out. She had been thinking it all out for weeks and months. After all, what had Mary done that was so deserving of reproach? Nothing—nothing at all. Miss Bright was arguing, when one came to sift out the facts of the case. For that matter, had not her own judgment of Mary's frivolities been formed while she was still under the influence of those back number morals of the old Corinth? She had pronounced herself broad-minded, even in the old days before the reconstruction; now she realized that she had been narrow—not so narrow as the rest of them, Heaven forbid!—but disposed to a shortness of vision that did ont permit her to see far beyond the confines of a very small circumference.

In some unaccountable way, she theorized, everything in Corinth had undergone a subtle change. Churchgoing, for instance, struck her as a rather sprigthly proceeding nowadays, instead of the laboriously somber duty it once had been. Corinth, throughout all its concentrated life, had gone to church with a stately energy, now it seemed to have conceived the idea it was pleasanter to go about it cheerfully, gladly, even springily. Joan found herself comparing Corinth with other satisfying places in the great big world—not the Babylons, but the clean, wholesome, alive places where one could take a deep breath of God's air and not feel contaminated because the ungodly shared it in common.

Blagden avenue was no wider than it had ever been; it just seemed to her that it was. What influence had been at work to open the front room window blinds in all the houses along the avenue, not only on week days but on the Sabbath?—The front room or parlor gloom of sanctuary no longer prevailed, she noticed that. Sunday nowadays found the light streaming into those prim and virtuous rooms with all the glory it could produce. She recalled other days, not so far off, when Corinth closed its front room shutters for fear the world might look within and break the holy Sabbath day. Now Corinth sat on its front porches and gave welcome to the Sabbath all day long.

No wonder the town seemed new to her, and better.

She recalled certain comments her father had made in the automobile the day before while they were being whisked homeward after that uplifting service.

"Blagden avenue seems broader than it was yesterday," he had said.

"It is quite as wide, literally, as Broadway, Judge Bright," said young Mr. Sallonsby.

"Ah, but the whole world is in Broadway."

"I think the world is just beginning to take notice of Blagden avenue," was the young man's comment. He meant to be sarcastic, but merely spoke the truth."

"The world isn't so bad as it's painted."

"Depends on local color," said the young man, airing himself epigrammatically. He felt rather proud of it.

"And whether you look up or down," completed the judge.

And so, said Joan to herself that night, after Sallonsby had taken his departure, it all depends on the way one looked at Mary Midthorne's so-called indiscretions. She was rather ashamed of herself for having peeped at them from behind closed front room shutters, so to speak.

Moreover, she had treated Eric rather cavalierly after church. Perhaps it was the thought of that which kept her awake nearly all of the night, trying to blot out the expression she had caught in his eyes.

She wondered if she would see him that morning. How handsome, how manly he had looked—But how now! She was on her way to see Mary and no one else. She reminded herself of this at least a dozen times during her progress up Blagden avenue.

Suddenly her heart began to beat furiously, the color came and went in her cheeks, and her eyes experienced a curious effect of momentary uselessness.

Eric Midthorne had turned the corner above and was approaching her with long, vigorous strides, his head lowered, his hands in his coat pockets. The gray Fedora hat was pulled well down over his eyes. He looked up when he was 20 yards away, and saw her.

His face, which had been pale and worn a moment before, was now a dusky red. On the instant, hers became flushed and hot.

She extended her gloved little hand. "How do you do, Eric," she said.

They were looking squarely into each other's eyes as if fascinated.

She waited a moment. "In regard to the plans?" she asked in the same manner and quite without purpose. She could feel the blood roaring in her head.

"Yes. I—I can't undertake the work," he replied, the words coming rapidly. "I must give it up. He'll have to get someone else."

Her eyes fell, her cheeks lost their vivid color.

"I—he won't let you off, Eric," she stammered. "I am sure he will not."

His smile was not pleasant to see.

"A great deal has happened since the bargain was made," he said. The word, "bargain," possessed an ominous, even accusing sound for her.

She met his gaze. "I am on my way to see Mary now," she said, as if that explained everything that had passed.

His face brightened. "You are? I'm glad, Joan. Nothing should come between you two. Mary loves you."

"Then it will be all right," said she, eagerly. "I was quite wrong—stupidly wrong. I hope she will understand and—overlook some of the—"

"Why, couldn't you have written me that you'd ceased to care, Joan?" he broke in regardless. "Why did you let me go on thinking that you—But, good heaven, what am I saying? You are right. You have made it easy for me. It would have been hard—oh, so hard to have broken it off if you had gone on caring."

She started. Suddenly she was the Joan of old. "Broken it off?" she cried blankly. "I don't understand."

"I will not ask why you have ceased caring," he went on rapidly. "That is your own affair. I am glad that you are spared the pain of caring for someone—in that way—who isn't worthy. You have found someone who deserves—"

"Eric, I—" she began tremulously, then caught herself up with an effort. "Let me turn back with you, please do," she substituted in low, eager tones. "I must see you alone, I must talk with you, Eric. There is so much I have to say that can't be said out here in—"

"Joan!" he cried. "You don't mean that you—"

"I—I haven't changed," she murmured. "There isn't anyone else—there couldn't be."

"And Sallonsby?" he said, the blood rioting in his veins.

NEW BELGIAN CAPITAL IS LOCATED AT HAVRE

From Havre Letter to the Brooklyn Eagle

Havre, however, is something more than a British base. Havre is the Belgian capital. Imagine if you can the government of the United States moving to Atlantic City, or better yet, to Asbury Park with the Japanese, or the Mexicans, or even (to make the analogy exact) the Germans in possession of Washington. Stick the state department into one empty shop along the boardwalk, the navy department into another, with the departments of commerce, labor, agriculture, education, and what not occupying adjacent shops in the same building. There you have an idea of Belgium in Havre.

The Belgians chose a large new building on a bluff facing the sea, four stories high, with a row of shops fronting the street. Over the main entrance a small sign in blue and white letters was erected: Palais des ministeres. The Belgian arms were stuck over the door, and the Belgian flag run up a staff on the roof. Two sentry boxes were set down at the right and left of the entrance and the ministry moved in, after arriving in Havre, together with the entire diplomatic corps (Brand Whitlock excepted) in motor cars one dark night in November.

Outside this villa the Belgian flag flies during the day. At sundown it is lowered with what ceremony can be devised. Three or four gendarmes line up at attention. At the door of the garage in the little garden, the military chauffeurs stand with hands raised in salute. On the lawn under the windows a few clerks group themselves and Baron de Broqueville, minister of war, and his small staff appear at the top of the low steps. The passersby, if any, pause and remove their hats.

The Czarina Alexander Fedorovna and two of her daughters have passed examinations as trained nurses and with scores of other titled Russian women are working shoulder to shoulder with the daughters of the humbles citizens.

NORTHCLIFFE REMAKES BRITISH JOURNALISM

From the North American Review

Lord Northcliffe has been a power in British journalism for now nearly 20 years. It was on May 4, 1896, that the first issue of the Daily Mail was sold in the streets of London. Its advent marked a revolution in the press not merely of the metropolis, but of the whole kingdom.

Up till then a certain ponderosity had been the hallmark of most British newspapers. They were extremely respectable, weighty and dull. They had, one might have said, a temperamental distrust of liveliness as something dangerous and enslaving. Verbatim reports of everything reportable, long winded and eminently sententious editorials, and stodgy columns of parliamentary debate, filled their pages. Occasionally some journal of unusual enterprise would send a special correspondent out to Persia or Afghanistan, would dive deeply into the profundities of European politics, would open a subscription list for some semi-public object, or produce a new scheme of army reform.

It was a decent press and a well informed press. It was wealthy, pontifical, respected and "literary." But it had an extraordinary limited range. From the every day interests of normal men and women it stood serenely apart. It made no effort to reach the mass of the people who had grown to maturity since the setting up of a national system of education. It was curiously out of touch with the commercial life of the country. In general the appeal of the British press in those days was mainly to the educated and the fastidious.

Into the easy going and self satisfied world there burst 19 years ago the Daily Mail. Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, as he then was, its orginator and chief proprietor had already shown as a producer of newspapers that he had ideas, keenness, courage and initiative. But this was by far the biggest venture he had yet essayed. Over $2,500,000 was spent on the initial cost of founding the Daily Mail, two solid years were devoted to the preparatory work, and the paper was issued daily, complete in every respect, for nearly three months before a single copy was sold to the public.

Its success was immediate. Small where its rivals were unwieldy, compact where they were diffuse, published at 1 cent while they sold for 2, sacrificing everything to presenting the events of the previous 24 hours in as clear and as concise a form as possible, and with a news service far beyond anything that had hitherto been even attempted, it jumped instantly into popular favor. The daily circulation at the end of the first year was over 300,000, and at the end of two and a half years had passed 500,000 during the Boer war it reached the 1,000,000 mark, and is now, I suppose, somewhere between 1,300,000 and 1,400,000.

From the first it has been a paper with a real individuality, going clean outside the humdrum game of politics, tackling the questions that interest it with a directness the very opposite of the gingerly, noncommittal fashion affected by most papers, suggesting rather than echoing or criticising, and never content to hew to the hackneyed line. The Daily Mail became a national newspaper to a unique degree.

Kind of Preparedness Wanted.

From the Pueblo (Colo.) Chieftain.

The people of the United States do not want a preparedness that will put upon us the burden of militarism under which Europe has been staggering for the past 20 years.

We do not want a preparedness that will encourage the growth of military ambition, and that will stimulate hatred or jealousy of other nations.

We do not want a preparedness that will build up a group of contractors and manufacturers selfishly concerned in increasing the expenditures of government without a close regard for national necessities.

We do not want a preparedness that will detract in any way from the strength of our position in support of the principle that war is supreme folly and useless waste, and that the rights of peaceful industry are superior to the alleged rights of military necessity.

We do want a preparedness that will give a reasonable assurance that this country will not be wantonly attacked by any nation jealous of our prosperity or covetous of our wealth.

We do want a preparedness that will give us a defensive strength commensurate with our importance as one of the great nations of the world and commensurate with the duties we owe to observe and to the people of other nations and to the advancing cause of civilization and human progress.

Military Training for Young Men

From Review of Reviews

Even the German and French army systems, with all their emphasis on the military, have many advantages as a training for the development of all sides of character in those who go from the training camps to the term of army service routine to the work of civil and industrial life. The French could have an army of 3,000,000 young men on the plan of short and intensive training, and the highest possible training for the navy is doing much to teach and train the young men who enlist in it and it can do still more of this kind of work in the future. A large navy is an expensive thing, but for the United States it is at the present time a matter of necessity. At least some portion of the expense can be offset by a deliberate purpose to make a brief period of naval service positively valuable for all future life to a very large number of young men. This is Secretary Daniels' aim.

Investigations show that women sleep longer and harder than men.

REAL CONVICTIONS ARE OF SLOW GROWTH

E. S. Morton in Harper's Magazine.

What are the accumulations which ought to make 50 fitter to exercise authority than 25? Book knowledge partly, but for the most part, thoughts. By the time he is 50 a man who is to amount to anything should have come to a few large, seasoned convictions that are part of the fiber of his mind. Convictions of that sort are not blithely obtained out of books.

Books may have to do with them, but they are acquisitions of the spirit and though the rudiments of them may be come by in youth they need to be tempered, tried out, and adjusted to practice by years of thought, talk, observation, effort and experiment with life.

Washington at 25 had in him the rudiments of the Washington that was to be, but he had nearly 20 years of training before he took command of the continental armies and he was first president at 57.

Lincoln in early manhood groped his way through grievous distress and perplexities but by the time he married when he was 33, he had come, it would seem, to a clear sense of the fundamental convictions that made him. Eighteen years more he thought and read and talked in courts and taverns, and pleaded on the stump the faith that was in him and travailed variously, and then at 51 he was elected president.

Pitt, prime minister at 24 because England was short handed and couldn't wait for him to get his growth, broke down in the middle of his job and died at 47. Napoleon was first consul at 30, had completed his activities at 46, and died at 52. Alexander at 33 had done everything that seemed to him desirable to do in the world at that time and departed out of it.

Youth makes a greater figure in war than in anything else, but war is a comparatively simple business and can be learned young. In most matters men are lucky if they can take their time to learn and estimate the prices and the heavy responsibilities of leadership until their thoughts are matured, their skill is fully practiced and their characters have been shaped and tested in the forge of life.

CARE OF WAR WOUND

In the last week of July, 1914, a great surgical congress was being held in London. The leading surgeons of the world were expected. The greatest single attraction was to be Von Eiselsberg. When the congress opened it was noticed that German and Austrian surgeons were not in attendance. Few present inferred that this meant that war was a practical certainty.

On the last day of the congress came the first of a series of declarations of war. The congress was held without its stellar attraction—the clinic by Von Eiselsberg. There are those who hold that the opinion of Von Eiselsberg on a surgical subject is the best to be had in the world.

The chance that Germany and Austria have to win this war depends very much upon the care taken of their men. The best minds in sanitation are engaged in protecting the soldiers against all forms of preventable disease. Rubber is settling all questions as to food, drink, and clothing. In addition, there is need that the wounded shall be well cared for and returned to the ranks at the front with the greatest possible haste.

The greatest surgical genius of his country, Austria, Von Eiselsberg, has drawn up a series of directions for the care of the wounded in this hour of need for Austria and Germany. Most of what he says applies to the treatment of ordinary wounds among people engaged in the ordinary duties of life. Those that do not apply to the ordinary accidents of the ordinary man do apply to the men who handle heavy machinery or use high explosives in the very large manufacturing plants and big mines.

Surgery, Gynecology and Obstetrics for June publishes the following 10 commandments for the military surgeon:

"1. The fresh wound must not be touched with the finger, and no antiseptics must be applied to it. As soon as possible the fresh wound is covered with a piece of dressing without the wound or tissues around it being washed or irrigated. The dressing should be sterile white hygroscopic gauze—if possible, prepared beforehand as an individual dressing. This sterile dressing is fastened with a bandage—if necessary with adhesive plaster. Care should be exercised in using mull bandages, for if they are applied a little bit too firmly they may cause constriction.

"2. The treatment of primary hemorrhage, if local compression with dressings is not sufficient, is to be accomplished with elastic bandages or tourniquet. Hemorrhage from large arterial trunks may be controlled by pressure with the finger, wrapped, if possible, with sterile gauze. Hemostasis with instruments (ligation) should be deferred so far as possible until a stationary hospital is reached.

"3. The canal of the bullet should not be probed, either with a sound or with the finger, nor should it be tamponed with a piece of dressing, even if it is sterile. The rule holds, too, in general for the later treatment of wounds. The sound, dressing forceps, or finger can be introduced for the sake of orientation only immediately before or during the opening of a wound for suppuration.

"4. Fractures should be immobilized by fixing both the neighboring joints. In the first dressing at the front it is not so important to produce accurate coaptation as to see that the bone fragments do not rub against each other or exert pressure upon neighboring soft parts. This fixation may be accomplished by means of a plaster dressing, if the material is at hand and the physician is a master of the technic. Generally he only applies splints. The wire splint in different sizes is an excellent splint for universal use. The fixation of the the broken femur is the most difficult, especially if the fracture is above the middle, as the ordinary Petit's boots are not adequate. For transportation I would recommend a modification of the splint which has two lateral wings to enclose the thigh and pelvis. In the final treatment of fractures of the long bones, especially the femur, I use extension as much as possible, and finally get the patient on his feet again by the use of plaster or mull dressings.

"5. The extraction of projectiles is a pressing operation only in very rare cases and even secondarily should only be performed when there is some special indication for it, as when the bullet is causing serious symptoms or can be felt immediately under the skin. The desire of the patient to have the bullet removed should not influence the physician to remove it. The Roentgen picture makes the diagnosis of the location of the bullet easier, but should not lead the surgeon to perform an operation that is not indicated. It almost looks as if Roentgenology had brought about dangerous attempts at extraction, by which patients have been injured.

"6. In all painful operations, even painful changing of dressings, where injection of morphine is not sufficient, ether should be resorted to. Ether vapor and slight ether anaesthesia are often a failure, especially in the phlegmonous processes.

"7. In suppuration the secretion should be emptied out by incision and counter-incision along the dressing forceps introduced into the wound, and then—always under anaesthesia—a drainage tube inserted. Tamponing of the opening should always be avoided. Changing a tampon and applying a fresh one are not only painful, but directly injurious.

"8. In every swelling that is at first diffuse and then gives the impression of an abcess and causes fever, one should think of the possibility of an arterial hematoma-aneurism.

"9. For the sake of maintaining asepsis at every stage in the treatment of wounds the use of strong rubber gloves that can be easily washed without any special care is earnestly recommended.

"10. Extensive operations should, as far as possible, be put off until the hospital is reached, where all aseptic precautions can be taken for after care. In severe injuries of limbs, extensive suppuration, gas phlegmons, or threatened gangrene with septic fever, amputation should not be too long delayed, and the life of the patient endangered too much for the sake of preserving an injured limb.

"The most important of these 10 commandments is: Dressings must be aseptic, and military surgery as conservative as possible."

The more important of these recommendations are as follows:

It is very important that wounds be not tampered with. The authority is so anxious that the wound shall not be washed out that he says neither the wound nor the tissues around it are to be washed or irritated.

Bullet wounds are not to be probed. Even when the bullet has been located by an X-ray and its removal seems easy it is not to be removed. When an abscess is being opened it is proper to go into the wound with the forceps or finger but not under other circumstances.

Suppurating wounds are not to be filled with gauze tampons.

In fracture cases the most important point is to see that the jagged bone ends do not cut and tear the nearby tissue. This is more important than getting the ends of the bones t

In his treatment of gas in tetanus, and gangrene he depen on extensive operations, such a tation, and less on oxygen in exposure to the open air after cisions, than do the other war who have been recently quoted column.

There are some people who the removal of bullets; many wounds probed. There are ma ple who want to have their cleaned up and all torn shreds off. The majority of people w suppurating wounds filled wit tampons. Such people will reading the surgical precepts Eiselsberg, the greatest Austr geon of his day.

WAR PROMOTES BETTER HIGHWAYS IN TURKEY

Constantinople, (by mail).—The extent to which the war has promoted good roads building in Turkey is indicated in a report just issued by the Ottoman ministry of war, stating that 740 miles of roads have been graded, leveled and resurfaced with gravel, and 382 miles of roads have been macadamized by the "work battalions" of the Turkish army since the beginning of the war.

European Turkey has benefitted greatly by these improvements, but the greater mileage of the new roads is in Anatolia, the Asiatic peninsula. The work has involved not only actual road improvement, but the construction of hundreds of bridges and culverts.

The total mileage of roads built by the Ottoman army during the war is 1,122 English miles. The work was done entirely by the older Turkish reserves and by Armenians of military age, who were not sent into the field because their loyalty to the Turkish flag was doubted.

From his own experience in traveling over several hundred miles of the new roads, the Associated Press correspondent can say that the work was well done on the whole. Much care was taken in finding the best grades. Wherever necessary the embankments were revetted, and no labor was spared in making cuts where they were necessary to a favorable grade. This is especially true of the roads built between Adrianople and Constantinople and those built in the Taurus and Amanus mountain ranges. While the majority of the engineers and officers, supervising the work, were Turks, there were a few Armenians and Greeks and a number of Germans and Austrians.

Very little modern road building machinery was used, with the exception of a few steam rollers and small rock crushers. The roads were leveled by pick and shovel, and cuts were made in the same manner, although hand drills and blasting powder were used where ledges were encountered. Most of the crushed rock, tons of which were used, was broken by hand, a task which some officers made easier by having a piper keep the hammers in time with a tune.

Those familiar with travel conditions in the Ottoman empire say that the country has never had so many good roads as at present. In addition to the new roads that have been built for strategic purposes, many miles of neglected roads have been put in repair, one such notable instance being the pass road through the Taurus from Ergli to Tarsus.

PHILOSOPHY OF EXCHANGE VERY PLAINLY DESCRIBED

From the New York Times.

American goods are the dearest in the world and yet, at the same time, Europe is so much in need of them that she has to go on buying them, with the effect of making them dearer still. Economic laws are turned upside down. We have, in this country, the best market in which to sell and the worst market in which to buy. But Europe has nothing to sell to us, or very little, and her necessities compel her to buy. So the international account is thrown somewhat out of balance. The buying is all on one side, the selling all on the other.

Normally, to continue at all, trade must be two-sided, tending always to come out even. In the course of a peaceful year it comes out so nearly even, between the United States and Europe, that only 2 or 3 per cent of the total account has to be settled by the transfer of gold from one side of the Atlantic to the other; for the other 97 or 98 per cent purchases balance sales back and forth; hence the use of foreign exchange bills in lieu of gold shipments.

A merchant in New York owing money in London would never think of sending gold. He would buy from a Wall street banker a draft on a London banker for so many pounds sterling. Likewise a London merchant owing money in America, perhaps at the very same moment, is buying a London banker's draft on a New York banker for so many dollars.

This swapping of credit is but the means of swapping goods without the intervention of gold. It amounts to many hundreds of millions a year between this country and Europe. But now, because Europe buys so many more goods than she sells, the demand in London for dollar credit at New York is very much greater than the demand in New York for pound-credit at London. Hence the premium on dollars and the discount on pounds.

It is a premium not upon American gold over European gold; it is a premium on the means of settling debts in dollars without the use of gold. Europe would rather pay the premium than send the gold, because, for one reason, shipping gold is very costly and extra hazardous in time of war, and, for another, all the belligerents wish to keep their gold so long as they can afford to do so. It is, for instance, costing Great Britain 7 cents in every dollar to pay her American debts in credit rather than in gold.

At the Battle of Tippecanoe.

From the Kansas City Star.

The Indians returned to the attack with redoubled fury. An entrance into the camp was effected and for a few minutes it looked as if the soldiers might be overwhelmed.

Many officers went down under the fire of the Indians. Harrison's horse was killed. He mounted another and quickly disposed his troops to better advantage. When his lines were re-established not an Indian that had reached the camp was alive.

A story is told that illustrates the terrible losses of the Fourth Indiana regiment. General Harrison, riding furiously toward the point of greatest peril, encountered a mere boy with blood-stained head working heroically to stem the Indian attack.

"Young man," asked the general, "where is your colonel?

"Dead, sir."

"Your major?"

"Dead, sir."

"Your captain?"

"Dear, sir."

"Who commands the regiment?"

"I do, sir, Ensign Tipton, Fourth Indiana, sir."

The Camel Driver's Advice.

Who hath put a curb on his passion and bridled his angry tongue,
In the presence of those who, witless, a witless master serve,
Hath given a song to Allah, and his praises shall be sung,
And peace in the brawling tavern is the thing he shall deserve.

Who seeth the cunning beggar, with eyes discerning and grave,
And saith, it is my kinsman, bred in another town,
For him the sun in its wasting a wave of warmth shall save,
The world shall hail him prophet, and his meed shall be renown.

Who meeteth the mighty captains, with sword and armor a-shine,
And hath no shout for the shining, but questions into the cause,
Shall have, in his days of weakness, a dream and a smile benign,
And his ears shall catch the music of a world's sincere applause.

Who saith to Love, when he meets her, the bed that I own is hard,
And the road that I go is thorny, and leadeth through rugged land,
Shall walk to the end unharnessed, shall go to the grave unscarred,
And one to the very ending shall yearningly hold his hand.

TURKS CAN'T CONQUER FEAR OF AEROPLANES

Constantinople, (by mail).—Although the Turkish soldier is hardened to artillery, machine gun and rifle fire, he is still so terrorized by the aeroplane that the mere sight of one sends him to cover.

The fear of the flying machine is due, of course, to the effect of the bombs and darts that are thrown by the aviators, but there are psychologists among the Turkish officers, who maintain that the fear of the man-bird largely arises from the fact that men still carry the "bloody memory," as evolutionists call it, of the days when human beings were the prey of huge winged creatures.

But the aeroplane bomb has qualities of its own to make it a fearful thing. Unlike the artillery projectile, it has no trajectural curve, against which cover can easily be obtained. In addition, although the scatter area of either the aeroplane bomb or the steel darts is small, it is in the form of a complete circle, while the scatter area of the artillery projectile lies almost straightforward of the explosion. For this reason, an infantry position that is well protected against the artillery and small fire is still open to attack from above.

Aother factor that makes the aeroplane bomb cared is that it contains high explosives of a sort that cannot be employed in artillery ammunition, owing to their great susceptibility to shock. Most of the British and French aeroplane shells dropped on the Gallipoli peninsula contain nitro-gelatine, a mixture of nitroglycerine and cellulose, the two making an explosive that is 98 per cent pure, which in other words, is all converted into heat with the exception of about 2 per cent.

The shattering effect of this explosive upon the steel shell of the bomb is terrific. At its best the ordinary artillery shell flies into but a small number of fragments, but the aeroplane bomb is shattered completely. Its fragments usually show edges that are as sharp as that of a razor, and wounds caused by them are deep lacerations.

The aeroplane bomb "splinter" has a shattering effect upon small bones, but, hitting a large bone, it will firmly imbed itself. The artillery projectile fragment hardly ever does this. The wounds caused by it are, as a rule, fatal or easily cured, while those caused by the aeroplane bomb are what surgeons term "vicious." While the artillery "splinter," owing to an absence of great velocity at mean distances, takes a direct course in making a wound, the aerial bomb fragment, because of its smallness, shape, sharp edges and greater velocity, literally plows a zigzag route through the human body. Were it not that the Roentgen rays make the location of the fragment possible, the mortality from the effects of aeroplane bomb wounds would be appallingly great.

SELLING $10 GOLD PIECES FOR $1 WAS IMPOSSIBLE

Edna K. Wooley in Kansas City Star.

"Americans are all money grabbers," said the acquaintance who had just parted from us. "They all want something for nothing. They'll take any chance to make a few dollars. They have no imagination beyond dollars and cents. The American business man is built in the shape of a dollar mark."

We were silent for a space after the departure of our axiomatic acquaintance. Then, said my friend:

"I don't believe it. That's the American's reputation, I know, but we've got to reckon with the natural caution of the average Yankee. I'll bet a $10 gold piece that I couldn't sell that gold piece to the average good American business man for a silver dollar."

"I don't believe in betting," was my rejoinder, "but I'd like to see your theory tested out."

We acquired the gold piece from a bank teller, who assured us that it was full weight and worth every cent of its face value. My friend started the game by offering to resell it to the teller for a silver dollar.

"Stop kidding me," said the teller.

"I mean it," said the owner of the gold piece.

"G'wan away from here," grinned the teller.

Entering the main door of the bank as we departed was a large and prosperous looking man whom my friend greeted by a name familiar in financial circles.

"Say, old man," he said, "I've got a gold piece here I want to get rid of. Want it?"

"Won't the bank change it?" asked the other.

"Give me a silver dollar and it's yours," said my friend, showing the piece.

"What's the joke?" asked the financier.

"There ain't none," answered my friend. "It's real gold. Just got it in the bank here. You can have it for a silver dollar."

The financier edged away, while he eyed both of us suspiciously.

"I don't know what your game is," he announced, "but you can count me out."

We tackled an insurance man next. He crawled out of the offer by declaring he had no silver dollar handy, and seemed to be glad to see us go.

A real estate man said he'd take it for nothing, just to please us, or he'd apply it as first payment on a lot, but he wouldn't take the chance of letting a perfectly good silver dollar go out of his keeping for something that he was not sure about.

NEW ENGLAND THRIFT; ALSO GOOD SOCIALISM

During his professional work the young engineer (Francis Hopkinson Smith) used to go off and take his recreation painting. I recall an incident which he related at that time as illustrative of a phase of the New England countryman's character.

Frank Smith had found an old water mill with overshot wheel near some piece of his work and, having ensconced himself in a shady and favorable spot, he proceeded to paint a picture of the mill. His occupation soon drew the attention of the miller, who strolled over and observed him across the fence with growing interest. Finally, on the second day, as his picture grew in resemblance, the miller asked the painter:

"What are you going to do with that when it is done?"

"Sell it," said Smith, working at the finishing touches.

After a pause of reflection:

"What do you cal'clate to get for it?"

"Oh! a hundred dollars," said Smith, cheerfully, "Perhaps more."

"A hundred dollars! gasped the miller.

He walked away to reflect and presently returned. His manner had somewhat changed.

"Hes you ast anybody's permission to paint that mill?" he asked, leaning over the fence.

"No—I have not," said Smith, promptly, whose picture was now about finished.

"Hes anybody ever give you permission to paint it?"

"No," said Smith.

"We-all, you know whose mill it is?"

"No, I do not, but I rather expect it is yours," said the painter.

"It is," said the miller decisively, and then, as the painter made ready to leave: "We-all, don't you think you ought to divide what you get for that picture with the man who owns the mill?"

"Well, honestly, I don't," said Smith, laughing as he bade him good day and came away leaving him still hanging over the fence pondering the inequalities of life.

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE

Medicine Not Needed in This Case.

It is hard to convince some people that coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that, to some systems, coffee is an insidious poison that undermines the health. Ask him if coffee is a cause of constipation, stomach and nervous troubles.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life, and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading an advertisement of Postum I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said, 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily, and in about two weeks I could sleep better and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 146 pounds when I commenced on Postum and now I weigh 167 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

RUTH IS HOME AGAIN

Ruth had gone to a thimble party one afternoon, and was amused at the way the girls had to run about the room after their spools of thread and balls of crochet cotton.

Ruth herself didn't have to do this, and after one of the girls had noticed it, she called the attention of the other guests to the fact.

"How in the world do you manage?" asked a number of them at once.

"Manage? Why it's the easiest thing in the world," replied Ruth. "Notice my apron pocket. See the little eyelet hole in the middle? I simply put my ball or spool in this pocket, and put the end of the thread through the eyelet. This keeps it in place and makes chrocheting or knitting a delight in place of a torment."

"Ruth, you are certainly the most practical female of my acquaintance!" ejaculated one of her admirers.

MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY

The country isn't going to the dogs just because every farmer in Iowa isn't going to get a bumper corn crop However, one would think so to hear some people talk. Forty and fifty years ago the Iowa farmers were satisfied to get any kind of crop, drive from twenty to thirty miles to market, burn hay for winter fuel, fight the Indians and grasshoppers and many other things. In those days they didn't hear a train whistle twice a year, and they didn't know any more about driving an automobile than the writer knows abut the Irish navy. But they got along some way and were so busy doing it that they had no time to whine like some of them do today when the land is flowing with milk and honey, drainage ditches and automobiles. Don,t whine until you are broke.—Thompson Courier.

BABY FALLS FROM WINDOW

What proved to be a miraculous escape from death was the falling from the upstairs window to the ground below, a distance of about eleven feet, by a child of Mr and Mrs. Frank Yates last week. It seems the little child was asleep on a bed upstairs and rolled against the screen, the window evidently being even with the bed, and the screen being one which either was not fastened as it should have been or was on a swinging hinge, which gave way allowing the child to roll over the window sill and down to the ground. The child was picked up unconscious, but soon came to. The doctor was called to examine the child to see whether or not any bones had been broken but it was found that no injury had been done and along toward evening the child was crawling around on the floor and seemed to be as happy and contented as ever.—Fenton Reporter

SCHOOL CHILDREN FROZE OUT

The Britt schools have been practically closed the past two weeks on account of the cold weather. The heating plant is undergoing repairs The members of the school board have been the targets of many uncomplimentary remarks of late They are pushing the completion of the plant as rapidly as possible It would seem that the installation of city steam would do away with the continual trouble with the present plant. The school board has been confronted with this same proposition the past two or three years. Better build a new, commodius, modern building next year and install city steam heat.—News.

LOST MONEY ORDER FOUND

Last week postmaster Smith had a money order presented for payment that came near being an oddity The order was made out in 1905 by Lincoln Hall postmaster and was made payable to E. Blackford of Algona. The order had to be sent to Washington where a new one was issued. The order was over ten years old and had become lost and was just recently found.—Burt Monitor.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F J Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio is the only Constitutional Cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they get sick from overwork, become sluggish the delicate tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead or the urine is cloudy full of sediment or you are obliged to get up two or three times during the night, if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by using a good kidney flushing any time.

15 Head of Cows and Heifers & 15 Bulls Ready For Service

In presenting this offering of cattle we wish to extend an invitation to the farmer that is looking for a good bull, we are listing 15 head that are ready for service and in good breeding condition, having run on grass all summer. The cows are a well-bred lot, and some of the best breeding cows we have owned. All safe in calf to our high class Scotch bulls. These cattle are sold right out of the pasture with no fitting whatever, so the buyer will see just what he is buying in breeding condition, which is a great advantage.

Guarantee: All bulls guaranteed breeders when not allowed to run in the herd; but all non-breeding bulls must be returned to us in good condition. All females of breeding age guaranteed breeders when properly cared for; a cow showing in calf or calf at foot is a proven breeder. ¶ All transfers will be made free of charge and the new form of certificate furnished with each animal sold.

Terms: The clerk will make arrangements to take care of you properly if you wish to buy on time.

Free Transportation to Farm: Parties coming by train will be met at Garner on the C., M. & St. P. Ry., at Klemme on the R. I.

COSSON FOR GOVERNOR

He Is Without a Doubt the Most Talked of Man Today

HE STANDS FOR PRINCIPLE

If Elected The Law Enforcement Will Proceed Without the Slightest Friction and Unsettlement of Business.

The platform upon which Cosson will make the race for the nomination for Governor may be briefly summed up in the following:

To those friends and citizens who believe that my record as a public official, my knowledge of constitutional law gained by years of experience in dealing with constitutional questions in the office of attorney general, my experience as a legislator, and as an administrative and executive officer, and my knowledge of the needs of the state and her institutions, together with my stand upon public questions, makes me the logical candidate at the next primary, I suggest that affirmative work be done in my behalf instead of wasting time in attempting to arrange conferences or in criticising other candidates, present or prospective. If I win I desire to win upon my own strength, and not the weakness of some other candidate.

I have sufficient confidence in the intelligence and the discriminating judgment of the people of Iowa to believe that if a majority of our people think in view of the peculiar circumstances, and the problems which will confront our state during the next few years, that I can render the most service I will be selected regardless of whether there are two or more candidates in the field.

GEORGE COSSON.

COSSON COMMENTS

Views of Press Concerning His Work and Candidacy.

IDEAL MAN FOR GOVERNOR

Widely Informed and Broadly Sympathetic and Whose Thought and Act Are In Tune With Best Purposes of the Times.

Attorney-General Cosson has made a splendid record in his present office, has had vast experience in the political arena, is honest and is a vote getter which no one will doubt when the votes are counted. Iowa should feel proud to get the opportunity to vote for such a man as George Cosson for governor, a self-made man, an upright man and a man that always stands for betterment in everything. Cast your vote for Cosson for governor at the 1916 primaries. Every voter should be a booster for Cosson on his past record, which has proven him a man well qualified for the office he seeks.

Harlan Republican: The thing for dry republicans to do would seem to be that they should concentrate on Attorney General Cosson. He has the wider reputation as a dry and would be a platform of himself. His reputation as a law enforcer is greater than that of perhaps any other state official in the nation.

Guthrie Center Guthrian says to make the new temperance laws effective it is necessary to elect an executive in sympathy with them; that "George Cosson had demonstrated his fitness for the job and it will be handed him at the proper time."

Des Moines Daily News: Cosson is entitled to support for governor not merely because he is the man who can beat Harding, but because under all the circumstances he is the best qualified man for the place.

We want that news item.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

Some of the big railroads have been using powdered coal with very satisfactory results. The coal, finely powdered and dried, is stored in receptacles from which it is blown into the firebox in jets by air pressure, much the same as oil fuel is used. The dry powder is converted into gas almost instantaneously, the temperature of the firebox is not lowered and the objectionable heavy black smoke is obviated. This method is also more economical of fuel than ordinary firing and materially lessens the labor of stoking.

The United States flag, flying upside down is a distress signal. This was brought home forcefully to the colored janitor at the Iowa building at the Panama-Pacific exposition recently when he ran up the banner in that way. A group of visiting marines made a wild break for the spot, expressing consternation and filling the darkey with the same.

Island 37, a notorious bootlegging headquarters in the Mississippi river near Osceola, Ark., has been raided by indignant citizens. A clean job was made of it, all the houses being burned and the 18 male residents jailed. The island is somewhat of a no-man's-land with the authority questionable as between Arkansas and Tennessee.

Much of the ivory from which our piano keys, billiard balls, knife handles and combs are made is collected in Siberia from the fossil remains of the giant mammoth, the great grandmother of the elephant. Many of these tusks are 250,000 years old, having been preserved in frozen soil or ancient ice only recently brought to the surface.

Gems to the value of $19,276,591 were imported into this country in 1914, as against $46,137,328 in 1913. The great falling off is due principally to the handling of the diamond industry in Amsterdam, its cessation in Antwerp and quiet conditions in London and Paris on account of the war.

Granada was at one time part of the Roman province of Roetia, but after the Arab invasion it became an independent Moorish kingdom. It was the last possession of the Moors in Spain, who tearfully gave up their country to their conquerors, Ferdinand and Isabella, of Spain, in 1492.

The tuna, which until within a few years was known only as one of the greatest of game fish, is now the basis of an extensive canning industry. It it predicted that 1,000,000 cans of it will be garnered this year on the Pacific coast.

The ways of the law are sometimes like those of a heathen Chinee. A New York policeman, on whom three bulldogs were "sicked," had the "sicker" arrested for violating the sanitary code. It provides that canines must be muzzled.

The government of India has succeeded in improving the quality of the cotton grown in some of its territory by distributing better seed and inducing natives to use modern implements.

New York city has received the first of 10 rapid fire guns to be mounted on her police boats. Their attention will be devoted not to the navies of the world but to river pirates.

MRS. JACK DAVIS, OF CORRECTIONVILLE, IS VICTIM OF ACCIDENT

Rushes Onto Main Street With Clothing in Flames—Lives Only Few Hours.

Correctionville, Ia., Oct. 2.—Mrs Jack Davis, about 45 years of age, who has been operating a home bakery here, was badly burned from a gasoline explosion yesterday afternoon and died from her injuries last night. She was alone in the house at the time and it is not known exactly how the accident occurred.

The Davis home is right in the business district and the first intimation of trouble was when she ran, screaming, from the house with her clothing in flames. A large number of persons rushed to her assistance at once and several men smothered the blaze with their coats, but the woman was so badly burned that she dropped into an unconscious condition within a few minutes, never rallying from the shock.

The surviving members of the family consist of four children and the husband. Three of the children are in Des Moines and the younger child was in school when the accident occurred. Mr. Davis works at house moving and other general contracting.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL MAY GET BIG BOOST

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 2.—Davenport Rock Island, Moline, East Moline and Bettendorf, through a meeting of their representatives, made plans for the entertainment of 85 members of congress who have been invited here to inspect the Rock Island arsenal and to be shown why it should be granted such a large appropriation that it can be made the chief munition manufacturing plant of the United States government.

The five-borough committee pledged $2,000 for the entertainment of the congressmen and senators, who are invited here October 14 and 15. Ten senators and 73 congressmen have been asked to inspect the arsenal, on which the federal government has up to the present time expended $12,342,791.

MUST SAVE ARMORY OR LOSE GUARD COMPANIES

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 2.—At a meeting of some of the leading business men of the city, plans were devised to save the armory to the two local militia companies, F and G. The building was sold at sheriff's sale last March to satisfy two mortgage claims. Adjutant General Logan issued an ultimatum to the city stating that if the two companies here had no meeting place they would be disbanded. This letter brought about the action of Monday.

It is planned to ask the bondholders of the armory company to donate their bonds. Money to meet the mortgages, which amount to about $8,000, will be raised by popular subscription before the redemption period closes, which will be some time in March.

CLAIM "BLUE SKY" LAW FREQUENTLY VIOLATED

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 2.—Declaring that the new Iowa "blue sky" law has not been successful in preventing the sale of unapproved stocks or securities during the first six months of its operation, state officials are planning a conference within the next week to decide upon a plan for prosecuting firms and brokers allegedly ignoring its provisions.

The records at the state house show that during the six months just ended only 26 permits to sell stock have been issued by the secretary of state. It is declared that there has been no decrease in the volume of new securities being disposed of in the state, and that the persons selling them have been openly violating the new law.

Special attention was called by the secretary of state's office to the recent sale of shares in the Sir Francis Drake estate in Des Moines. It was stated that the provisions of the "blue sky" law were openly ignored in this sale. Such a proposition as the Drake shares could not get state approval, it was said.

The present law was enacted by the general assembly after the statute passed in 1913 had been tested in the courts and pronounced invalid. No move has been made to test the latest enactment in the courts, and, according to the officials, those who objected to the passage of the law have simply ignored it.

MAN WHO TOOK MERCURY STILL HAS CHANCE FOR LIFE

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 2.—Suffering tortures and seized intermittently with pains that double him up like a jackknife, John F. Kennedy, the Chicago man in jail here suffering from bichloride of mercury poisoning, looks forward to only a few more days of life.

That Kennedy told the truth when he said he swallowed seven bichloride tablets, physicians now have no doubt, as he shows every symptom of mercurial poisoning. He is being fed with whites of eggs at short intervals, to counteract the poison, and given milk in large quantities as an absorbent. Heroic measures are being taken to rid his system of the poison. The doctors will not predict the outcome 24 hours hence, but admit that he still has a chance for life.

IOWA TRACTOR CONCERN TO MANUFACTURE WAR SHELLS.

Charles City, Ia., Oct. 2.—C. W. Hart, president of the Hart-Parr company, in an interview with a press representative yesterday afternoon, made the first official announcement of a war order from Great Britain amounting to $1,500,000 for the manufacture of shells.

This order will not interfere with the manufacture of oil tractors.

IOWA LAND TRADED FOR LARGE COLORADO RANCH.

Glenwood, Ia., Oct. 1.—C. C. Randall of Riverton, Ia., traded 970 acres of land in Lyons township, which he purchased five years ago at about $90 an acre, for 3,600 acres near Denver, Colo. The Randall holdings were figured at $200 per acre. The Colorado land was figured at $25 per acre, and there was a cash difference of $104,000 paid to Randall.

IOWA CITY—The 300,000 Scandinavians in Iowa have been given the recognition of having their language made a part of the teaching of the state university. WOMAN, WHO POSED AS CAPITALIST, HELD ON CRIMINAL CHARGE

Got $200 From Police Chief and $425 From Man Who Wanted to Sell Farm.

Mason City, Ia., Oct. 2.—On a grand jury indictment charging her with obtaining money under false pretense, Mrs. Adam Mohr was arrested at Burlington yesterday and brought to this city. Mrs. Max Gorman, wife of the chief of police of this city, made the arrest.

Mrs. Mohr came to this city last April. She appeared well, versed in the Rebekah lodge, Eastern Star and other lodges. In this way she quickly got the confidence of a good many people. She was here to buy a stock farm. Approaching C. L. Berlin, an aged gentleman, she inquired about farms and he finally told her he would sell her the one he owned in Falls township. She looked it over. There was 160 acres in the farm and it was a stock farm, just what she wanted. A price of $175 per acre was agreed upon and she was to pay the total amount, $28,100, in cash.

She told Mr. Berlin, according to his story, that she had a carload of cattle at Wheaton, Ill., that she wanted to place on the farm at once. Her money was to reach her in a few days, she said, and she secured from Mr. Berlin a loan of $425. She also secured $200 from Chief of Police Max Gorman.

After she had borrowed this $625 she said that she had about $7,000 she wanted to loan in part or in whole, and that she would loan it at 4 per cent. Chief Gorman could use about $1,500 of this and he gave her his note for this amount, she stating that she would forward the money to him as soon as she arrived home. She returned to Burlington. No money came, and there was no shipment of cattle arriving for the farm. Chief Gorman made a visit to Burlington, found Mrs. Mohr and secured the note of $1,500 he had given her. She said that the reason the stock had not arrived for the farm was that they were in quarantine. He tried to recover the $625 but failed.

At the session of the grand jury just closed, an investigation was held, resulting in an indictment against Mrs. Mohr. Officers who have been investigating state that they have evidence that Mrs. Mohr has served a term in the penitentiary for a similar offense and was released from Anamosa only 14 months ago. Mrs. Mohr is a fine looking woman, 63 years of age, seemingly cultured and refined. In an interview today she declared that she never served sentence in a penitentiary in Iowa or anywhere else. She says that she is honest and in securing the $625 she did it in trust "You trust me and I trust you."

GETS THUMPING WHILE SEEKING RETURN OF RING

Glenwood, Ia., Oct. 2.—Two employes of the state institution at Glenwood, and Elmer Burkhardt, of Hartford, Conn., have been brought into the limelight. Burkhardt met Miss Jennie Collins, at Payson, Ill., became engaged to be married, and he claims to have sent her a diamond engagement ring and $50 for traveling expenses east, where they were to be married. July 6 last Miss Collins and B. C. Walker were married at Glenwood. Yesterday Burkhardt appeared in Glenwood. He visited the home of the Walkers, demanding his ring and money back, and then he alleges he was assaulted by Walker. Walker gave a cash bond for his appearance in court.

CHILD DRINKS LYE AND DIES IN TERRIBLE AGONY

Webster City, Ia., Oct. 2.—Dorothy 14-month-old child of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Foss, died in terrible agony this morning, after accidentally drinking a cup of lye water which the mother was going to use for washing.

W. C. T. U. PLANNING FOR BIG WINTER CAMPAIGN

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 2.—Sweeping plans for a statewide antiliquor campaign and religious movement, to be carried out during the coming winter under specially appointed and salaried leaders, were formulated here yesterday as the most important feature of the regular afternoon executive session of the W. C. T. U. state convention.

The work of this big temperance and religious campaign will cover the entire state from corner to corner, Mrs. Mary Sibbits to be general superintendent of the work of the various speakers who have been chosen. The W. C. T. U. expects to open its campaign in December, carrying it on through until spring.

Sioux City is thus far represented by three delegates. They are Mrs. M. E. Patterson, Mrs. F. Walsmith and Mrs. Laura B. Hale.

SHORT LINE OWNER FLATLY REFUSES TO OPERATE ROAD

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 2.—Robert Abeles of St. Louis, owner of the Atlantic Southern railroad, yesterday served notice on the Iowa railroad commission that he will not comply with the commission's order to restore train service on the road.

W. A. Follett, an attorney representing Abeles, arrived in Des Moines yesterday afternoon, after consulting with Mr. Abeles at St. Louis, over the telephone.

The owner of the line instructed the attorney to tell the commission that he will refuse to resume operations on the Atlantic Southern because the road will not pay operating expenses.

It is believed that the railroad commission will go into court to enforce its order on the Atlantic Southern. It directed that trains be run between Lyons and Villisca.

WEBSTER CITY—The 15-month-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Houghtaling was killed in a runaway Wednesday evening before the eyes of its frantic mother. The mother was driving a single horse and buggy and the baby, the only one was with her coming down the Lanks street hill. The harness broke and the horse ran away. The buggy struck a watering trough and mother and baby were thrown out. The child struck on its head and was instantly killed. The mother escaped unhurt.

COMMITTED CRIME TO GET WINTER'S JAIL SENTENCE

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 30.—I. W. W. stands for "I'm Warm in Winter," in the case of Henry Freund, who claims proudly that he is a member of the Industrial Workers of the World. He was arrested by postoffice officials and charged with the theft of a letter from a rural mail box near Thornton.

Yesterday afternoon he plead guilty to the charge, and was bound over to the federal grand jury which meets in November. He gave as his motive for the crime that he wanted to go to jail for the winter months.

CORRESPONDENT SAYS HORSE CAN SWIM IN PISGAH MAIN STREET

Water From Soldier Creek Cuts Through Highway Grade and Floods Little City.

Pisgah, Ia., Oct. 1.—In front of the only hotel in this little city the water in the street is deep enough to "swim a horse." That gives a fair idea of conditions in the main business street, due to the overflow from the Soldier creek. Water in all of the business houses is two to three feet deep and people residing in the lower part of the town, on a level with the business district, have been compelled to take shelter with others in the hill region. No attempt has been made to estimate the damage in the city, or on the farms in this section, but it will be very heavy.

The flood troubles in the city are chiefly due to the breaking of a heavy highway grade south of town, allowing the overflow from the Soldier to rush through the business street in a regular torrent. Unless there is another downpour right away, such as the one Saturday night, it is expected that the flood waters will recede within a few days.

In the vicinity of Pisgah it is estimated that the Soldier overflow covers about 10,000 acres of land, but the damage at this season is not as great as it would have been a few months earlier when crops were growing. The region of overflow extends down through the Soldier cutoff, one of the special drainage ditches.

The city has been practically isolated with the railroad track under water and highway travel impossible across the flooded area.

LARGE AMOUNT SECURED BY BAD CHECK OPERATOR

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Oct. 1.—A clever check artist, signing himself as Charles Tremer, is being sought by the police of many cities at the request of the police department of Cedar Rapids. It is claimed that Tremer represented himself as a representative of Harper & Co., horse dealers of Kansas City. He bought quite a few animals near Garrison, a small place not far from here, and gave checks in payment. Then he bought the horses to this city and sold them, receiving a draft for $1,350. Tremer gave checks on the Cedar Rapids National bank for various amounts, one check being for $1,075, but his balance at the bank was only 8 cents, and has not been more than that for some time, according to the bank officials.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL BRAKEMAN PLEADS GUILTY OF BIGAMY

Dubuque, Ia., Oct. 1.—Thursday morning Walter J. Close, brakeman on the Illinois Central railway, will know the extent of the sentence, having pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy. Two years ago he married Miss Mabel Lynch, of Dubuque. Freeport is the other end of his run, and while "laying over" there, being lonesome he met a Miss Fagan, with whom he became infatuated. He married her. Later she became suspicious and on close questioning Close admitted having been married, but insisted he had secured a divorce. Wife No. 2 demanded more light and forced him to allow her to accompany him to Dubuque. This she did, with the result that wife No. 1 showed up and the charge of bigamy was preferred.

SENTENCES IMPOSED AT COURT TERM AT LeMARS

LeMars, Ia., Oct. 1.—In the district court now in session Judge W. D. Boles sentenced G. A. Henrich of Brunsville, to seven years in the penitentiary for forging checks. Fred Kingsley was given five years for burglarizing a saloon at Kingsley, Ia. Hans Mohr was given five years for the theft of an automobile, and T. McCarthy, alias William Plughoff, three years for obtaining money under false pretenses. All the men pleaded guilty. The grand jury for the term was chosen as follows: John Heibeler, Elkhorn, foreman; A. P. Dornbusch, LeMars; M. T. Abbott, Aurelia; Hans Krause, Grant; McSinger, Plymouth; M. Schnepf, Fredonia; F. Waterbury, Westfield.

ALLEGED BOX CAR THIEF TAKES POISON TABLETS

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 1.—Declaring that he would rather die than go to the penitentiary, John F. Kennedy, a prisoner in the county jail here swallowed poison tablets and announced that he had but five days to live. How much he took it not known by physicians.

Kennedy, who is alleged to be a box car thief, was shot by Northwestern detectives last Thursday while getting out of a merchandise car.

LONG-DALTON LIBEL CASE IS ASSIGNED FOR TRIAL

Ft. Dodge, Ia., Oct. 1.—Assigned for trial next week in the district court at Rockwell City before Judge M. L. Hutchinson, of Lake City, is the $10,000 libel case between the editor of the Manson Democrat, Jack Dalton and the former editor of the Manson Journal, Tom Long.

Mr. Long some years ago sued Dalton for $10,000 for an alleged libelous article appearing in the Democrat. The case with assigned for many terms of court, but never came to trial. At last Dalton agreed to settle for $100.

In an article announcing the settlement, Dalton maintained that Long "gloated" over the fact that he (Dalton) had settled, and he came back in his next issue with an editorial that reopened the old trouble. Long then began a second suit for $10,000 damages.

CEDAR RAPIDS—Rev. E. J. Lockwood for 16 years pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church here, who has been transferred to Waterloo, has been given a purse of $1,000 by the Methodist congregation here so that he and his wife may take a trip to the Holy Land.

LIFE TERM IS SEQUEL TO ROW OVER BUYING DRINK

Fort Dodge, Ia., Sept. 29.—George McDonald, a "floater" from Chicago, who stabbed George Hird, a plasterer, here on September 13 in a dispute over who bought the last drink, was found guilty of first degree murder by a jury and given life imprisonment. His defense was an attempted alibi, but the blood stains on his shirt sleeve and hands could not be explained. He did not take the stand in his own defense. The jury stood nine to three for hanging until midnight when they agreed.

MISSING DRAFTS ARE FOUND IN BOTTOM OF NEWSPAPER TIE SACK

Supposed Robbery Develops to Be Mere Case of Error in Throwing Mail.

Webster City, Ia., Sept. 30.—One of the most baffling mysteries in the history of the banking business in Webster City was solved when an employe in the mailing room of one of the Des Moines newspapers found a bundle of letters in the bottom of a mail sack that had lain in the corner for nearly a month. Among these letters were drafts for between $15,000 and $20,000 belonging to the First National and Hamilton County State banks of this city.

These drafts represented settlements made with the Webster City banks by correspondent banks in Eagle Grove, Renwick, Luverne and several southern Minnesota banks. All of these were mailed August 25, and when they failed to reach their destination a few days later, the Webster City banks reported the matter to their banking association. The latter sent detectives out for it was thought robbers might have secured the drafts and it was feared they would attempt to cash them at some bank remote from here.

But the detectives could find no clew anywhere and the drafts turned up in a most unexpected manner. An employe in the mailing room of one of the Des Moines newspapers found a bundle of letters in the bottom of an old mail sack. They were turned over to the Des Moines postoffice and the drafts above mentioned were found.

The mystery was solved and instead of having been mystery it turned to have merely been a case of carelessness on the part of a railway clerk, who had thrown the bundle of letters into a newspaper "sack," instead of into a pouch.

FAKE SOLICITORS REAP HARVEST AT WEBSTER CITY

Webster City, Ia., Sept. 30.—Webster City has just been "cleaned" again by a corps of fake magazine solicitors.

For the most part their victims have been women, for the magazines they have claimed to sell have been the various well known women' monthly papers.

The crew made a very thorough house to house canvass of the city. The magazines were offered at ridiculously low prices "to introduce them." The price was so low that they got an order from almost every home.

But the magazines failed to come and inquiry brings the news from the publishers that no solicitors are working this territory.

MAYOR TO INVESTIGATE LIBERAL BOOZE SUPPLIES

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 30.—Mayor Hanna is starting an investigation to ascertain where all the liquor is coming from and why the number of drunks arrested recently is on the increase.

Police court records show that so far this month 341 persons have been arrested for intoxication. Last month there were 215 and in January preceding the close of saloons, 256 persons were arrested.

A special officer has offered to place evidence in the hands of the chief to show that distillers outside the state are shipping whisky to bootleggers at less than cost and that outside liquor interests have sent parties here to push its sale.

The mayor believes a special effort is being made to discredit prohibition.

BELIEVED OTHER BODIES IN WRECKAGE AT ROCKWELL

Mason City, Ia., Sept. 30.—It is believed that at least two more men are in the wreckage of the 13 cars on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad, two miles south of Rockwell. Thomas Fagan, of Springfield, Ill., was found partly buried beneath the wreck, dead. Harry Blood, of Ox Grove, Canada, was pulled from the wreck before the fire had reached him. He was badly injured about the shoulders and is in a critical condition at the Cogswell hospital at Rockwell. William Curran, of Belfast, Ireland, was not so badly injured and is able to get around. He tells that in the car ahead of him there were at least three men, and if they are not still in the wreck they did not wait to be seen by any of the train crew. Twelve men got on at Marshalltown and four more at Hampton, making a total of 16. Only the three mentioned have been accounted for. They were all in cars that were wrecked.

All the wood in the 13 cars was burned. When one of the cars containing gasoline gave way, oil was thrown all over the wreckage. How it caught fire is not known, but it started in the nature of an explosion that could be heard for miles. Those who saw it say that flames leaped 50 feet into the air.

GOVERNOR TO DEDICATE CONSOLIDATED SCHOOLS

Alta, Ia., Sept. 30.—George W. Clarke will dedicate the new consolidated schoolhouses in the Lincoln-Lee and Highview districts the first part of October. The exact date has not yet been fixed. The new school buildings in these districts are modern in construction, being of brick, with four rooms each. They are in the geographical centers of their respective districts, and the territory they will serve is about 25 sections each. County Superintendent Harrison is arranging a program for the day.

A petition is being circulated in this locality for the formation of a consolidated school district at Alta which will include about 35 sections of land, including the town of Alta. The election will be held in October.

SIOUX CITY WOMAN ON STATE W. C. T. U. PROGRAM

Iowa City, Ia., Sept. 28.—The annual convention of the Iowa W. C. T. U. opened here this morning. It is expected that 2,000 women will participate in the sessions. Included on the program are Nellie Burger, president of the W. C. T. U. of Missouri, Flora Dunlap, president of the Iowa Equal Suffrage association, Attorney General George Cosson, Mrs. M. E. Patterson, national W. C. T. U. organizer, and Prof. George Ellingwood Joy, of Omaha.

JUROR IN BOWLING CASE TAKEN SERIOUSLY ILL

Council Bluffs, Ia., Sept. 28.—There was quite a commotion in federal court yesterday when Juror John Johnson, of Pacific Junction, could not be found. The trial of the government against Andrew Bowling, of Denison, charged with mailing threatening letters to Banker George Nave, was called at the reconvening of court, but could not proceed. Advices from Johnson's home showed he was not there, and late in the day it was learned that the missing juryman was sick in an Omaha hotel. By agreement the case proceeded with 11 men.

DENY HAMPERING AMERICAN TRADE

Britain Submits Statistics to Show Re-Exports Have Not Increased Like Those of United States.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 4.—Great Britain's answer to reports circulated in this country that she h been interfering with legitimate trade of the United States with neutral nations, is given in a note handed to Ambassador Page at London by Sir Edward Grey, the foreign minister, and made public here by the state department.

The note, which is in response to the British ambassador's report of a reference at the state department to the unfavorable impression created here by reports of increases in British trade with northern European countries since the war began, suggests that statements concerning Great Britain's policy have been inspired by German agents.

As tending to illustrate that American commerce with neutral nations has not been hampered by the British order in council or the activities of the British navy the following figures are submitted.

British re-exports of cotton to Holland and the Scandinavian countries January to May, 1915, 503,895 centals of 100 pounds each, United States exports to same countries, 3,353,638 centals as compared with 204,177 centals for same perior in 1914.

British re-exports of rubber to Holland and Scandinavian countries January to May, 1914, 17,726 centals; January to May, 1915, 16,693 centals. United States exports of rubber to same countries, January to May, 1914, 1,579 centals; January to May, 1915, 5,040 centals.

British re-exports of lubricating oils to Holland and Scandinavian countries increased 709,370 gallons while United States exports to same countries increased 3,857,593 gallons.

British re-exports of unmanufactued tobacco of the same countries show a gain of 2,837,244 pounds, while United States exports increased 6,081,848 pounds.

British re-exports of cocoa increased 11,500,000 pounds, while United States exports increased 16,000,000 pounds.

British re-exports of coffee were 263,488 hundred weights, while the United States exports were 285,760 hundred weights, an increase from 7,376 hundred weights.

British re-exports of wheat flour to same countries increased 47,046 hundred weights while United States exports increased 2,555,953 hundred weights from January to May, 1915.

Sir Edward Grey's statement adds:

"I could point to many other instances of similar proportionate increases in the exports of the United States to Scandinavia and The Netherlands as compared with exports to the same countries from the United kingdom during the last five months. In respect to the great majority of articles for which figures of United States trade can be given the increase in this trade are greater, and in some cases very considerably greater than the increases in the United kingdom trade.

"In many cases increases in United kingdom re-exports are due to the fact that the products of British Indian and colonial products, which formerly went direct to continental ports, such as Hamburg, Rotterdam or Copenhagen, are now sent to the United kingdom and thence distributed to old customers in Scandinavian countries and The Netherlands. Among such may be mentioned, paper, cinnamon and other spices (largely the product of the British East Indies), Indian tea palm kernels (mainly from British West Africa) and copra (mainly from the Straits settlements and Australia). The direct trade of the British overseas dominions with the port of Hamburg alone is very great in normal times.

PRESIDENT TO VOTE FOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE

Wilson Is Expected to Favor Measure in New Jersey—Holds It State Issue.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 2.—President Wilson is expected shortly to announce his intention of voting for the New Jersey state constitutional amendment granting suffrage to women. A special election on the amendment will be held October 19, and the president will go to Princeton to vote. Secretary Tumulty, whose home is in Jersey City, said today he expected to vote for the woman suffrage amendment. It was reported that Secretary Garrison, who is also from New Jersey, had authorized the statement that he would vote for woman suffrage.

The president on several occasions has refused to support an amendment to the federal constitution to give nation-wide woman suffrage. He has said he believed the question to be a state issue. Recently he said he would make known his position on woman suffrage before the amendment to the New Jer

BULGAR ARMY DEPLOYED TO ALL BORDERS

Troops From Sofia Are Moving Toward Serbian, Greek and Rumanian Frontiers, Dispatches Say.

MARTIAL LAW DECLARED

Men Up to Age of 58 Are Being Mobilized—German Officers Will Aid in Directing Army.

London, Oct. 2.—A telegram from Amsterdam says that Austria is about to send an ultimatum to Rumania demanding the free passage of munitions to Turkey.

This information was received in Amsterdam from Cologne and forwarded by the correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company. The message says Austria's ultimatum will be couched in friendly terms, and that a short interval will be given in which Rumania may reply.

Paris, Oct. 2.—Reports originating in various places that an immense number of German and Austrian troops has been concentrated on the Serbian front appear to have been greatly exaggerated, in the light of advices received here.

These reports gave the size of the Teutonic army as 200,000 to 600,000 men. It is now known that only about 60,000 men are threatening Serbia.

Paris, Oct 4.—It is reported from Athens that Bulgarian troops from Sofia are moving in the direction of the Serbian frontier, and that other forces are being dispatched toward the Greek border

This information was forwarded today by the Athens correspondent of the Havas News agency, who asserts it was obtained from a reliable source. It is believed the principal point of concentration will be along the upper Strouma river, southwest of Sofia, near the Serbian border

Milan Italy, (via Paris), Oct. 4—Bulgaria is mobilizing all men up to the age of 58 years, according to the Corriere Della Sera Bucharest correspondent. No citizen under 45 is permitted to leave the country, and martial law has been proclaimed. Pro-German manifestations are reported in Bulgarian cities along the Danube.

Bulgarian artillery, the correspondent asserts, is being massed along the frontier of Dobrudja, a part of Rumania bounded by the Black sea and the Danube, which was taken from Bulgaria in 1878 and given to Rumania. This section has a cosmopolitan population.

ALLIES URGED TO STRIKE FIRST BLOW IN BALKANS

London, Oct. 4.—The situation on the eastern front is still regarded in London as of the greatest immediate importance, notwithstanding the new offensive in the west To transfer the center of gravity of the war to the western front is the task now before the French and British

The menacing attitude of Bulgaria doubtless is having a marked bearing on the activity of the allies in France and Belgium for increasing pressure on the German lines would exert a decided influence on plans of the Austrians and Germans to concentrate a heavy force on the Serbian frontier, should they commit themselves to a fresh campaign in the Balkans with the assistance of Bulgaria. That nation now occupies, as Foreign Secretary Grey phrased it yesterday, the position Turkey held during those weeks of uncertainty before she cast her lot openly with the central powers.

Some sections of the British press are urging Greece and the allies to strike quickly the instant it is determined that diplomacy is no longer able to avert a crisis.

"To wait until Bulgaria actually moves," says the Manchester Guardian, "is to surrender the strategic initiative to her. Between an Austro-German attack on Serbia and a Bulgarian attack there is no practical difference. For the allies the moment of decision has come. As soon as they are convinced Bulgaria is determined to make war they should dispatch an ultimatum to her and give her the choice of peace or war.

"Should Bulgaria accomplish the Germanic design of linking Berlin with Constantinople," the Guardian continues, "a very grave change will have come over the complexion of the war in this zone, a region where a far reaching result might be achieved by the allies with relative speed and economy. * * * The strategical initative must not be frittered away by faith in meaningless hopes or fear of resolute action."

GERMAN OFFICERS WILL DIRECT BULGARIAN ARMY

London, Oct. 2.—Foreign Secretary Grey announced this afternoon that German and Austriar officers were arriving in Bulgaria to direct the Bulgarian army. The secretary said this was a fact which the allies regard "with the utmost gravity."

STRIKE RIOTS ARE STAGED IN MOSCOW

Unemployed Men Are Causing Trouble — Serious Outbreaks Intimated.

Washington, Oct. 4.—Delayed dispatches to the state department report conditions of unrest in Moscow, foreshadowing the riot mentioned in news dispatches. Unemployed, thrown out of work by strikes, were said to be causing trouble and more serious outbreaks were threatened. Officials believe no Americans were injured.

BIG BUT SANE NAVAL PROGRAM IS PLANNED

Daniels to Ask Congress for Approximately $225,000,000—Large Increase in Personnel His Aim—Believed Congressmen Will Favor Proposed Expenditures.

Washington, Oct 4.—The navy department estimates, as they are now planned by Secretary Daniels and leading navy officials, will provide for a total expenditure of $225,000,000. This is the information which came today from high sources, and is believed to represent the approximate figures on naval expenditures which the administration will recommend to congress.

Not less than four new superdreadnaughts and a number of swift battle cruisers and many smaller craft with ample provision for submarines and aeroplanes will be recommended.

The estimate of $225,000,000 would be, roughly speaking, about $75,000,000 more than the usual outlay on the navy It would mean a large outlay for warship construction. It is calculated by the navy department that if $225,000,000 a year could be had for three years, then the country could settle down to an expenditure of about $200,000,000 a year for the navy as a steady policy, and in doing this keep the fleet up to the standard needed to meet all probable requirements as to preparedness.

It would keep the navy up to a point which would make it the best navy in the world next to that of England. Whatever may be the fate of army expenditures at the coming session, it is believed congress will appropriate liberally to the navy

A large increase of personnel is one of the things for which Secretary Daniels will provide in the estimates and an increased number of cadets at Annapolis.

TIGRIS EXPEDITION HALTED TURKS SAY

Constantinople Advices Declare the British Drive Toward Bagdad Has Been Turned Back.

Constantinople, (via London), Oct. 4.—Announcement was made by the war office today that the British forces in Mesopotamia were repulsed in the recent fighting. The report follows:

"On September 27 the British resumed the offensive. The battle was very violent and lasted until evening, but the attack finally failed, notwithstanding the fact that the British forces were four times stronger than ours.

"On the Irak front our advanced detachments on September 28 surprised a hostile force which landed on the bank of the Tigris, north of Korna, under the protection of gunboats. We inflicted heavy losses on them."

Announcement was made in the house of commons Wednesday that the British, under General Nixon, had defeated the Turks, who were said to be in full retreat toward Bagdad.

In a dispatch, General Nixon reported that one position carried by the British constituted a long line of defenses astride the Tigris river. Seven miles east of Kut, two brigades crossed the river from the right bank and by a forced march reached the left wing of the Turkish position, carrying it by assault. By nightfall the whole position had been carried.

The Turkish losses in dead were described as severe. The Turks clung to their trenches with great tenacity, and these were filled with corpses when the British carried them.

General Nixon gave the British casualties as "under 500."

MILLIONS IN PRIZES FOR BRITISH SEAMEN

London, Oct. 2.—The amount of prize money for officers and men of the navy which has accumulated during the war is said by the Morning Post to be $20,000,000. None of this has been distributed and the Post makes the complaint that purchases by the government of confiscated cargoes deprives the navy of prize money.

STRIKE IS AVERTED.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 2.—Leaders of the workmen at the East Pittsburgh plants of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing company today announced that the men had decided not to strike. More than 5,000 of the 15,000 employes voted on the position and only 2,495 favored the strike.

Pennsylvania Scientist Says Race Would Be Improved By Intermarriage.

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 4.—The marriage of blood relatives, prohibited by law and church since time immemoral, is championed by M. J. Greenman, director of Wistar institute of the University of Pennsylvania, who has been experimenting with rats for the past four and a half years and has found that inbreeding does not lead to decadence and decay, but produces a finer specimen.

"There seems to be no reason why first cousins should not marry, nor even brothers and sisters," declares Director Greenman.

HARD LUCK PURSUES "DOC" COOK, EXPLORER

Arrested as Spy, Movie Outfit Confiscated, and Forbidden to Climb Mountain.

San Francisco, Oct. 2.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook, who left San Francisco in June to climb Mt. Everett in the Himalayas, was arrested in Rangoon, Burma, as a German spy, and his motion picture outfit was confiscated, according to Curtis W. Allen, an American timber buyer, who has returned from an 11-months' trip in the far east. Allen said that Dr. Cook was released later, but permission to climb Mt. Everest was withheld.

The timberman, born in Anacortes, Wash., said he himself was arrested as a spy seven times in 11 months and at Rangoon was in the same pail with the explorer.

IOWA U TO FURNISH WIRELESS PIGSKIN SCORES

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 2.—Scores of the football games of east and west will be sent out from the University of Iowa wireless station each Saturday night.

There are about 50 wireless stations in Iowa, which will be able to receive the university reports. Most of them are operated by amateurs. If they will "listen" through their instruments from 7 o'clock on Saturday evening, they should be able to catch the football news. A full account of contests elsewhere, gathered by telegraph from over the country will be relayed through the wireless instruments.

CLAIM GAINS IN SPITE OF GERMAN FIRE

Kaiser's Forces Subject French Positions in Artois Region to Heavy Bombardment to Check Rush.

BRITISH HOLDING GROUND

Returned Officers Say Recent Offensive Has Shown Teutons Are Now Topped in Guns and Shells.

Berlin, (via London), Oct. 2.—An attempt by the British to retake the ground lost north of Loos was defeated with a heavy loss, the war office announced today

Several French attacks also were repulsed and a number of prisoners were taken.

Paris, Oct 4.—There has been a heavy German bombardment in the Artois district, according to the announcement made by the French war office this afternoon Nevertheless the French forces have made perceptible progress in this district on the heights of La Folie.

With the exception of some ground lost, the British are clinging tenaciously to the positions wrested from the Germans. The series of engagements on the French front in the last few days has not altered conditions appreciably.

Special dispatches from Petrograd all speak of the improvement of the Russian position although there has been no noteworthy change on the eastern front for some days.

The text of the French communication follows:

"In the Artois district the artillery of the enemy yesterday bombarded very violently our positions to the east of Souchez, Nevertheless we made perceptible progress from trench to trench on the heights of La Folie.

Conquer Strategic Point.

"In the Champagne district the Germans bombarded last night our new lines near St. Legrange. To the east of the Navarin farm our troops conquered an important section of the positions of the enemy which constituted a salient of the actual line to the north of Mesnil.

"In Lorraine German reconnoitering parties have attacked two of our posts near Moncel and near Sorneville. They were repulsed and pursued by French troops back to their own lines. The night passed quietly on the remainder of the front.

"Squadrons of French airships have thrown down a very large number of projectiles on the railroad stations and the railroad lines behind the German front, particularly at the junction of Guignicourt-Amifontaine.

"During the past night guns mounted on aeroplanes were successful in bombarding the German lines."

Preponderance of Shells Wins Day

London, Oct 4.—"As in the earlier battles of the war, the victory in the latest of the fighting was mainly a question of which side had the biggest supply of shells—our supply was unlimited, but the Germans had to economize in ammunition, therefore they lost," writes a London artillery officer in a letter giving a detailed account of the past week's battle in northern France.

"There was no element of surprise in our success," says the officer.

"Although the actual advance came on Saturday we knew of the plan on the previous Sunday and began preliminary artillery operations on Tuesday. The Germans must have known what was up, as soon as we began systematic wire cutting operations along the extensive front. They tried to turn the tables on us by firing into our wires, but they did not have half enough guns or ammunition to keep up the pace we set.

"On Tuesday we began the work of wire cutting, and parapet pounding. Eighteen pounders with shrapnel and howitzers with high explosives started at dawn and continued throughout the day, systematically smashing the German defenses. At night the Germans came out to repair the damage, but were swept back by the most prodigal use of machine gun fire.

"Wednesday was a repetition of Tuesday. There was no stinting of ammunition anywhere along our lines, although the number of guns in action was wonderful. It was noticeable that the Germans already were husbanding their ammunition, making only a feeble reply, and their guns were palpably inferior in number and strength to ours. Wednesday night repair work again was attempted with tremendous German losses.

"On Friday we intensified our fire. All along our section of the front the German wire was down and parapets were badly breached. The Germans had brought up more guns and ammunition and increased their artillery fire, attacking our trenches and searching for our batteries and observing stations. But the weight of our inexhaustible supply of shells began to tell. The German front trenches became well nigh uninhabitable from constant pounding and it was evident that the front line was very lightly held.

"Meanwhile, the superiority of our aeroplane equipment also was evident. The number of our machines was so great that we were able to keep observers in the air about the German lines at all times, with plenty of machines in reserve to foil every German attempt to make observations above our positions.

"On Friday night the machine gun fire was like rain, falling constantly on the German positions and preventing repair work on the wire. Then at 4:25 o'clock Saturday morning the real cannonade began. Along our section, of say five miles, there must have been 3,000 shells fired in five minutes. The bombardment was the biggest thing in the history of the war. The flash of guns was so continuous as to give an almost unbroken light in the early dawn.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

CORRECT ANSWER TO MR. LEMMON'S PUZZLE

The first correct answer to the puzzle in last week's TIMES offered by W S. Lemmon was won by Casey Blank who submitted the first correct answer and received the one dollar. The following is the correct solution.

94 Hogs at 50cts per head	$47 00
1 Sheep at	3.00
5 Cows at $10 00 per head	50 00
100 head of stock	$100 00

A large number of answers were sent in and proves conclusively that if you want to give anything away that there is not much danger of it being overlooked and the same will also hold true in the case of others who have bargains to offer or new goods that they wish to bring to the attention of our readers.

Mr. Lemmon has another puzzle in this issue which he says which will not prove to be as simple as the one last week but he has well made it worth your time to figure it out. Mr. Lemmon was in the harness business for a number of years and was very successful. He has stated to us that he is not afraid to give printer's ink due credit for his success while in business and is a staunch believer in advertising. And believes it is far better to make many sales at a small profit than a few sales at a larger profit and that a little hustling and advertising will turn the trick. He is an A. No. 1 workman and a valuable man for his employer, Mr. Gruetzmacher.

Chain Store Buying
Means a Big Saving to the Consumer

We buy direct from the manufacturers, consequently get jobbers prices and give you the benefit of the saving. It is an utter impossibility for a single handed merchant to sell his merchandise at the prices we do. He buys from jobbers and necessarily must have a bibber price for his goods. We are proving to customers every day the economy of buying goods in our line at this store.

For instance, we are showing Men's Sweaters this week at 87c that competition must get $1.25 to $2 for. That is only one item among many.

Other Sweaters, all wool, direct from the manufacturers . $3.50 to $7.50

Bear in mind the fact that Chain Store Buying enables us to buy at much lower prices and we give you the benefit on your purchases.

Men's Suits and Overcoats . . .	$10.00 to $30.00
Boys' Suits and Overcoats . . .	2.95 to 8.50
Men's and Boys' Shoes	1.95 to 5.00
We have the greatest line of Mackinaws for Men and Boys that has ever been shown in Garner. Prices . .	3.95 to 10.00

UNCLE JUD ON HOW TO ADVERTISE

Some folks who mean all right enough
Would open wide their eyes
If you should tell them that
They don't know how to advertise.

They think that with success
Their efforts surely will be crowned
If they employ small boys to Throw their printed handbills round

The handbills litter up the porch;
Are swept into the dust,
And seldom get inside the homes
To be read and discussed.

It's just a waste to throw them out
Broadcast into the street—
For the same amount of money one
Could advertise in the home sheet.

The ad would reach the women folks,
For teey're the ones who buy,
And they're looking out for bargains;
Looking out with eagle eye.

Other merchants waste their money
Painting signs on barns and trees
And disfigusing the landscape
With announcementf such as these:

Go to Murphy'f for your scnool books!
Bradley's drug store leads 'em all!
Patronize the one-price clothier!
Buy your feed of Smith and Hall!

Why not be a bit progressive;
Boost your town and do your part;
And patronize the paper
With your interests at heart?

Thus you not only get results,
And help the paper build
A prosperous community
With happy merchants filled.

SOME LOOT OF WESLEY POST OFFICE ROBBERY RECOVERED

No Clew to The Robbery of September 15th Was Found Until October 11th When a Mail Sack, Government Stamps and Valuable Papers Were Found in Corn Field Mile East of Corwith

The Wesley post office was robbed September 15th, and no clew was found to the robbery until October 11th, when Ira Bunting, who lives a mile east of Corwith, commenced cutting up his corn. In the corn field he found a rural mail carrier's sadk, in which were some government revenue stamps of small denominations, and a lot of private payers that belonged to Wesley postmaster, as it appears he kept these papers in the post office safe. Among the papers was one of his notes calling for $9000, which was made payable at the First National Bank of Wesley. This gave the clew that enabled Mr. Bunting to locate the owner of the paper. He immediately telephoned the bank and in a short time the postmaster and bank cashier appeared to claim the papers, stamps, etc. There must have been four of the burglars, as they had torn bords from the snow fence along the railroad track and laid these down between the rows of corn for beds. The parties had eaten a lunch, as there were paper sacks scattered around and remnants of eatables left on the ground.

A SERMON ON NOAH

My text dis mornin' breddern,
Am took from de Holy Writ,
Wherein we read how Noah
Made de Ark an' fashioned it.

He built de Ark ob gopher wood,
An' used a cubit rule,
While all de knockers sat eroun'
An' cussed him fo' a fool.

De local anvil chorus,
Dey jes' sat eroun' an'
Spat terbaccer juice upon his wood,
An' mocked him jes' lak dat,
An' sez "Whafoah yo' makin'
Dis hyah boat foah on dry lan'?
Yo'-all a-thinkin' maybe,
Dat yo'-all's a sailah man?"

But Noah paid no 'tenshun,
Nor 'lowed he heard dem croaks,
But jes' minded his own business,
Lak all good an' proper folks.

When dey read de weddah fo'cast—
"Mild; continnered warm an' fair,
Ole Noah went right on buildin'
An' allowed he didn't care.

But one day de weddah shifted;
De barometer done fall,
An' de rain came down in torrents—
Rained fo' fo'ty days—dat's all.

An' de knockers an' de croakers
Drowned jes' lak so many rats,
Which was jes' what dey had comin'
Nothin' lef' exeep' dey hats.

An' de moral ob dis story, breddern,
It am writ quite plain,
Dat whenevah knockers tell ye'
Dar ain't gwine ter be no rain,
Jes' go ahead lak Noah,
An' don't let 'em get yo' goat,
An' some day you'll have lak Noah,
De bigges' show afloat.

Maxim Gorky is fighting as a volunteer with the Russian army in Galicia. Revolutionary socialist and always "agin the government," Gorky might have been expected to be the last man to shoulder arms in the cause of the czar. But this war has chanbed many a revolutionary into an ardent patriot, and Gorky is only one of hundreds of men of fame who have sunk all personal views and prejudices for patriotism.

There are 278 libraries in Massachusetts which have been gifts to the communities, and the donor of 33 is Mr. Carnegie. In 48 towns of the state founds are being accumulated to erect library building, and in the free public libraries now in existence there are housed more than 6,000,000 books, or about two books for each inhabitant.

Mme. Caillaux, the French ex-premier's wife, lately acquitted of the charge of murdering M. Calmette, is finding in the war an opportunity of escape from a position which must have been, after all, very trying, even though the jury acquitted her. She is now in command of a nursing corps at the rear of the main French army.

There are still three survivors of the original Mormon band to find its way into the valley of the Great Salt Lake in 1847. One is Lorenao Sobieski Young, who belonged to the third "ten" of the original company, to which Brigham Young also belonged. His first home was a wagon box lifted from its truck and supported by posts.

Probably the longest and most luxuriant beard in the world is that of Zachary T. Wilcox, of Carson City, Nev., a veteran of the civil war. He has not shaved or had it cut for 32 years, and his hirsute adornment is now eight and one-half feet long. Ordinarily it is worn wrapped around a piece of cardboard and thrust under the owner's vest.

The exportation of orchids from the Phipippine islands is increasing. In March, 1914, 10,000 plants were consigned to a San Francisco girm and arrived in excellent condition. During May 5,000 plans were shipped to the same firm. The consignments included four varieties, Sollerians, Amabiles, Studianas and Sanederians.

NO OFFICIAL RECORD OF AGED CONVICT WHO APPLIES FOR PARDON

Was Committed in 1886 for Murder in First Degree—Served in Union Army.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 16.—After being officially lost for 29 years in an Iowa prison, Henry Furry, 70-year-old civil war veteran, who is serving a life sentence for murder committed in Polk county, has been found, due to the filing in Governor Clarke's office of a petition for a pardon for the aged prisoner.

Consideration of the petition is delayed owing to the difficulty of finding certain criminal court records at the Polk county court house. Furry's crime was committed so long ago that the history and court record of it have been lost.

Furry is a remarkable man. He has served longer time than any other prisoner now in an Iowa prison. He has $5,000 to his credit, all of which he procured by means of a pension, since entering the penitentiary. He never asked for a pardon or parole until requested to fill out an official blank which was sent to him a few days ago from the governor's office.

A short time ago Ed Ash of Des Moines, who claims to be a son of Furry, began a movement for the release of the aged prisoner

When Ash filed a petition in the governor's office, asking clemency for his father, he was requested to file a copy of the record. It was then discovered that Furry had been "officially" lost. The governor and the board of parole had never heard of him. There was no record of Furry or his crime in the state files. The history of the case could not be found at the court house. Furry had stepped into prison 29 years ago and had been so quiet and so easily managed that he was forgotten.

Since the Furry trial the new court house has been built. In moving the county offices it is said that the records may have become misplaced. Furry did not appeal to the supreme court from the finding of the district court, hence nothing of the record can be found at the state house.

Furry said he was sentenced July 18, 1886, to life imprisonment for first degree murder. He says he struck a man in the dark, but did not know what he was doing. Others say that the man he struck was a relative and that the instrument used was an ax. The crime was committed near Runnells, in Polk county.

Furry declared that he had no children and that he never had a family. He had been a farm hand previous to being sent to the prison. He served in the civil war, according to records which were filed in congress when he was granted a special pension.

"KID" NOBLE COMPLETES SENTENCE ON DECEMBER 20

Fort Madison, Ia., Oct. 16.—"Kid" Noble, amateur prize fighter who was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder in 1902, will receive his liberty as a Christmas present from the state of Iowa this year. He will be released from the Fort Madison penitentiary on December 20.

Noble's sentence was commuted from life imprisonment to a period of 25 years by Governor Carroll. Under the rules then in force he would have been entitled to his liberty in 13 years and nine months, by the deduction of "good time" earned by good behavior.

The Noble murder case was one of the famous criminal cases of Iowa. Ira Noble was an amateur prize fighter and he gained a wide reputation. He married a woman of the underworld. He took her to Muscatine, where Noble had a job tending bar.

One day a former friend of Noble's wife arrived in Muscatine. He learned of her marriage to the prize fighter. While in a saloon he made an insulting remark about Mrs. Noble and Noble killed him.

PREHISTORIC TOOTH FOUND NEAR CORRECTIONVILLE

Correctionville, Ia., Oct. 16.—The interesting fossil found recently at Walsh Bros.' sand pit has been identified as a molar tooth of a prehistoric elephant. These huge animals, more than twice the size of the largest elephants now in existence, used to be the most prominent members of the animal kingdom several hundred thousand years ago, probably before the last glacial invasion. They were overwhelmed when the then mild, warm climate was change for an age-long winter. Their teeth, and an occasional tusk, several of which have been found in western Iowa sandpits, are all that now remain of them, and are found in a fossilized form, that is the original bone has been replaced by a limestone rock, deposited by water in the exact form of the original bone.

The tooth is seven and one-fourth inches long, and the grinding surface measures two and three-quarters by three inches.

IOWA PATENTS.

The following Iowans were granted patents for the week ending Tuesday, October 14, as reported by the patent office of Milton S. Crandall, Sioux City

Thomas, Corning, steam baker; Elmer Thompson, Des Moines, pump mechanism; Frederick Vetter, Muscatine, button container; David G. Jones, Emerson, stalk cutter; James L. Neel, Cedar Rapids, can making machine; Loren Risk, Waterloo, vehicle wheel; Harry Anders, Red Oak, wire stretcher; Frank Honnald, Luton, fuel and cooling system for vehicle engines; Henry W. Howard, Shenandoah, animal oiler; George W. Comee, Waterloo, corner fastening for bedsteads: William J. Evans, Pilot Mound, motorcycle driving mechanism; Sylvester Hankins, Zearing, husking device.

WINS IN STRAIGHT FALLS.

Mason City, Ia., Oct. 15.—Severs, of Clear Lake, won the wrestling match from Ferguson, of Austin, Minn., held here last night. Severs took two straight falls.

OFFICIALS INVESTIGATING DOLL WHEEL PRIVILEGES

George, Ia., Oct. 15.—It is reported that the office of the attorney general at Des Moines is probing charges that the Rock Rapids city authorities aided and abetted gambling during the last Lyon county fair, by licensing the doll wheels for a sum alleged to have been $100. Governor Clarke was advised that the city authorities had done this and he reported the case to the attorney general.

The doll wheels are similar to the ones that have been operated over the country and were at George

CLAIMS MOTHERINLAW OVERRATED SON; WIFE SEEKING ADJUSTMENT

Unique Case on Trial at Fort Madison, Growing Out of Mail Order Wedding.

Fort Madison, Ia., Oct. 16.—Cases in the petit jury in the district court at this city opened yesterday afternoon, when arguments in the case of Helen Beach vs. Rosa Beach were started by the attorneys representing the opposing sides.

The case is probably one of the most interesting of the session, and embodies features of unusual interest. It has been heard in the supreme court and is now in the district court through a reversal by the higher court of the jury verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The litigation started in 1910, and in June, 1913, was acted upon by the supreme court.

The case is one in which a wife is suing her motherinlaw, alleging that the latter misrepresented her husband to her.

It develops, according to the petition, that Rosa Beach, who resides near Denmark, this county, some years ago advertised in a German newspaper for a wife for her son.

In the advertisement, it is alleged, it was stated that the young man possessed a debtless farm of 80 acres in his own right. The plaintiff answered the advertisement and began to correspond with the young man. As the young man was unable to write, the mother wrote his letters conveying thoughts of love to the future spouse.

It is further stated that the young woman married the man and then found that he did not possess the land, but instead that it was the property of his mother. She now is suing to gain one-third interest in the land, which she states is due her, through misrepresentations.

VICTOR E. BENDER, FORMER IOWAN, DYING IN ILLINOIS

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 16.—Victor E. Bender, formerly publisher of the Council Bluffs Nonpareil, now secretary of the Springfield, Ill., Commercial association, is reported to be in a dying condition at a hospital in Galesburg, Ill. He is suffering from hardening of the arteries and kidney trouble.

After leaving Council Bluffs in 1909, Mr. Bender purchased the Springfield Evening Times and retained that property until last year, when he sold it and retired from business. Several months ago he was elected secretary of the Springfield Commercial association.

Mr. Bender is credited with being the man who brought the Nonpareil "out of the ruts," after it had floundered along for several years. He realized that a newspaper in Council Bluffs, to be a business success, must be put on a par with Omaha newspapers and he expanded the plant and service to carry out that idea. His judgment was fully vindicated.

Mrs. Bender, who was prominent in Iowa club work, died about a year ago.

YOUNG GRINNELL GIRLS IN HANDS OF KIDNAPER

Grinnell, Ia., Oct. 16.—Little Helen Lewis, aged 9, and Mercedes Lewis, aged 7, are missing and are believed to have been kidnaped. They are the daughters of Charley Lewis. Their mother went away on December 28 1911, and since then they have been cared for by their grandmother, although their mother has been back to see them two or three times.

Monday afternoon the two little girls were on their way to school. The little son of John Stacy was with them. When they reached the corner of Fifth avenue and Spring street, the Stacy boy says, a woman came up to them. She was a rather small woman and wore a black and white checked automobile cap and a black suit. She asked the little girls their names and the girls told her. Then she said, "Come with me. Your mother is right over here and wants to see you." The girls went with her and have not been seen since. It is supposed that they were placed in an automobile and spirited away.

TRUSTEE OF DEFUNCT BANK SEEKS TO ANNUL NOTES

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 16.—Attorney D. M. Kelleher, of this city, acting for Charles O. Ryan, trustee of the estate of the Farmers' Savings bank at Radcliff, and Henry and John Himmel, bankrupts, has filed a petition in Des Moines naming as defendants John Cavanaugh. The German Savings bank, of Des Moines, and the Enamel Concrete company also of that city. Ryan avers that Cavanaugh, while acting as agent for the German Savings bank, detected a forgery by John Himmel, one of the owners of the Radcliff bank, now serving a term in the penitentiary for fraudulent banking, and later, in order to prevent exposure, deposited with the bank notes owned by the Radcliff bank in the sum of $10,000 to take up a note owned against him by the Enamel Concrete company. The note was for $8,000, and it is alleged that Himmel ordered the difference to be placed to his private account.

This action, it is alleged, took place when the Farmers' Savings bank was insolvent and a few months before the brothers were declared bankrupts. On these grounds the trustee asks for a return of the $10,000 in notes.

LAUNDRY MEN PLAN TO CAPTURE FAMILY WASHINGS

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 16.—Plans to drive the Iowa washerwoman out of business were laid here when the Iowa State Launderers' association opened its convention with a lengthy discussion on the development of the latest branch in the laundry business—the family wash.

That eventually every laundry in the state will do the family wash at a reasonable price was the statements of several speakers.

The laundrymen disclosed the fact that many college and university students were sending their laundry home to mother because the rates were too high.

Insurance rates, express rates and the pure fabric bills are other matters up for consideration.

The next convention will be held in Des Moines.

A full grown sheep averages 152 pounds in weight.

MUSCATINE MAYOR BALKS ON PUTTING TOWN "BLUE"

Musatine, Ia., Oct. 14.—The enforcement of the blue laws is threatened in Musatine. The Ministeral association is leading a fight against all Sunday theaters and other forms of amusement on the Sabbath. In resolutions lately passed they call upon the mayor and county attorney to enforce the state law and declare an intention of bringing action if the officials are remiss in their duty.

"WETS" PLAY POSSUM ON BATTLE PLANS, IS NEWS IN "DRY" CAMP

Claimed That Large Fight Fund Is Being Raised, in Spite of Peace Murmurs.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 15.—The liquor forces of Iowa are raising funds in the "wet" cities to fight the equal suffrage amendment and to oppose enforcement of prohibition, according to reports sent to A. U. Coats, secretary of the Iowa Prohibitory Amendment association. He placed the data before Attorney General George Cosson yesterday. At Fort Dodge last week the liquor dealers held a convention and announced that they are ready to quit the liquor business and that they will not make a fight next January when the Clarkson law goes into effect.

The temperance forces were suspicious of the announcement of the liquor men, Coates said. He declares that as soon as the liquor men returned to their homes the correspondents of the Prohibitiory Amendment association began to report that the "wets" had started to raise funds for the fight on prohibition.

One letter which Mr. Coates exhibited said that in one "wet" city $4,000 had been subscribed toward the liquor fight and $1,900 to oppose the equal suffrage amendment. This is only a part of the sum which the liquor men expect to raise in that city, the correspondent said.

Another agent reported that the executive committee of the liquor association at a conference held at Sioux City after the adjournment of the Fort Dodge convention, engaged an attorney to prepare for the fight to test the constitutionality of the mulct law repeal. He said that $1,000 had been paid to the attorney as a retainer.

The fight on the repeal, it is reported, will be on the ground that cities where there are valid saloon petitions may retain the grog shops until the consent period expires. Another flaw the attorneys are reported to be preparing to claim is that the date, January 1, 1916, inserted in the law makes it invalid.

According to the plan reported to Mr. Coates, the liquor men will ask for an injunction in every "wet" county, to suspend the repeal law until the case testing the constitutionality of the act can be carried to the supreme court.

OTHER COUNTIES SHIPPING WIDOWS INTO DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 15.—Belief that other counties are shipping widows into Des Moines, so Polk county must bear the widows' pension expenses, was expressed today by Judge McHenry, who says the rapid increase in pensions made him suspicious. Other cities are suffering also, he thinks, from counties which figure that widows in cities may receive pensions without courts finding out the real circumstances.

TEN BANK FORGERS ARE OPERATING IN IOWA TOWNS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 15.—Warning was issued by the Iowa Bankers' association yesterday to members to watch out for 10 forgers working in Iowa. They are Frank F. Forrest, who claimed to represent the Alexander Hamilton institute, of New York city; George Lambrinos, a Greek laborer and interpreter working for railroad companies, H. Sessions, claiming to represent S. R. Johnson & Son, of Racine, Wis.; M. D. Rissman, formerly representing the Northern States Coal & Mining company, of Chicago, Charles Tremer, a horse buyer wanted at Vinton; William Burke, C. Wade (with several aliases), H. L. Whaley, Harry Burns and George Shimada, a Japanese.

COMPLAINT MADE OF RATES ON UPPER MISSISSIPPI

Washington, D. C., Oct. 15.—The Iowa railway commissioners complained today to the Interstate Commerce commission that the Baltimore & Ohio and other railroads charged lower freight rates between cities on the lower Mississippi and points in eastern territory than from Iowa cities on the upper Mississippi, and the same destinations, discriminating against the upper Mississippi cities.

TWO DEAD FROM COLLAPSE OF BUILDING AT DENISON

Denison, Ia., Oct. 15.—Two men dead and two others are in a critical condition from the collapse of the two-story brick building here yesterday.

Mike Maloney, an aged man, died within a few hours. Mr. Kadoch, proprietor of the plumbing establishment, died early this morning. Mr. Lautzenheiser, a traveling man from Sheldon, had his chest and hips crushed, but is still alive Marc Kadoch was uninjured Mrs. Kate Maloney Smith is in a critical condition. Mr. Shawvan, a local attorney, was slightly injured.

The building, which was occupied by Kadoch Bros. as a plumbing shop, collapsed on account of the removal of an adjoining building It was at first thought none of the injuries would prove fatal.

PARTY OF SIX WRECKED WHEN TIRE BLOWS OUT

Marshalltown, Ia. Oct 15.—Six young people from this city had a narrow escape from serious injury when an automobile owned by Arlie Dwight skidded when a tire blew out and turned over twice Miss Vesta Hollingsworth, aged 12, had her right hip broken Miss Blanche Schlicht suffered a fractured left wrist, and the other four were more of less brused. The accident happened three miles southeast of Grandy Center, while on their way here from Waterloo. The car was not damaged badly. The other members of the party were the owner of the car George Patton, the driver, Lloyd Boyle, and Miss Hattie Gregwire.

CHEROKEE—The executive committee of the hospital association has called a meeting of the members of the association for Tuesday afternoon, October 19, at the city hall, to decide on the site for the new hospital. Articles of incorporation for the new organization have been prepared The association will be known as the Sioux Valley Hospital association.

TRIES TO IMITATE SUNDAY FALLS OFF BRIDGE RAILING

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 13.—Charles Johnson, aged 30, while imitating the gymnastic movements of Billy Sunday perched upon the railing of a birdge, lost his balance and fell to the rock bottom of the creek 15 feet below, sustaining injuries which may result in his death. Young Johnson, with two companians, attended the Sunday meeting here and were en route home when Johnson mounted the bridge railing and attempted to emulate Sunday

WARNS IOWA FARMERS AGAINST USING SOFT CORN FOR FATTENING

Secretary of Bankers' Association Says It Is Useful for Young Stock.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 14.—A warning to Iowa farmers against attempting to fatten cattle on soft corn has been issued by Secretary F. W. Hall, of the Iowa Bankers' association. Instead, farmers are advised to buy young or growing stock or thin stock, which Mr. Hall says can be carried through the winter profitably on soft corn.

"About 10 years ago," says Mr. Hall, "much of the corn in Iowa was soft and northwestern Iowa had practically no corn that matured. I was in the banking business in Sheldon at that time, so that what I know about soft corn was learned in the school of experience. A large number of our farmer customers bought heavy cattle, expecting to fatten them on the soft corn and thus get value out of their crop, but while the cattle seemed to do very well for about 30 days, it was found that after that length of time they put on no more fat than they would had they been fed on soup. The result was that the farmers who tried this experiment with heavy cattle lost their time and their corn crop.

"I am suggesting to bankers that they advise their farmer customers not to buy heavy cattle with the thought in view of fattening them on immature corn alone, as after about 30 days' feeding on soft corn, ripe or mature corn must be used to finish the cattle, and I believe that feeders have had the same experience with hogs that they have had with cattle."

CARD MAILED 22 YEARS AGO; JUST DELIVERED

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 14.—Nearly 22 years ago Representative D. F. Miller, sr., of the Iowa house of representatives, mailed a postcard in the Des Moines legislative postoffice to his daughter in Omaha. The card was delivered yesterday to Henry Primeau, of the city clerk's office in Omaha, he being a grandson of the addressee.

The missing card was mailed to Mr. Miller's daughter January 15, 1894, and in some way became stuck to the inside walls of the mail chute. In tearing down the mail boxes in the old Des Moines capitol building the card was discovered and forwarded.

YOUNG WIFE ARRESTED ON INEBRIACY CHARGE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 14.—Catherine Lichtie, young and good looking, liked nothing better than to get good and drunk, pull down the curtains at their home, 1327 Park avenue, and then to mop up the floor with her husband, Fred Lichtie, according to the husband's story to deputy sheriffs.

Yesterday a warrant charging inebriacy was issued against Mrs. Lichtie, and a deputy went out to serve it. He found Mrs. Lichtie with her best clothes on and her suitcase all packed, ready to go to the station to catch a train for Earlham.

He gave her an auto ride down town, and almost before she knew what was happening, got her safely inside the county jail, where she broke down and cried.

Lichtie told deputy sheriffs that Mrs. Lichtie drank a pint of whisky regularly every day. There was a quart of it in her suitcase when she was arrested. She will be tried on the inebriacy charge.

WOMAN MAKING LONG TOUR WITH DOG SLEDS

Shenandoah, Ia., Oct. 14.—Driving five dogs hitched to an Alaskan mail sled, Miss Estelle Mason, of Nome, Alaska, arrived in Shenandoah on a world's tour that began at her Alaska home October 2, 1908. Siberia, Petrograd, Berlin, London and New York are points she has visited with her queer mode of travel.

She was to travel 32,000 miles by May 1. In less than schedule time she arrived at Cincinnati, the end of the 32,000 miles, and won her wager.

Miss Mason is to arrive in San Francisco at her own time and providing she gets there with two of the dogs she started with originally and her old mail sled, she will receive $12,500, it is stated.

ANNUAL HORSE SHOW AT PAULLINA ON OCTOBER 16

Paullina, Ia., Oct. 14.—The fifth annual horse show at Paullina will be held Saturday, October 6. This is the big event of the year in and around Paullina. The first show was held in connection with the farmers' institute during the winter of 1911-12. At that time there were two classes with 24 entries. The 1914 show had 14 classes, with 207 entries, and the catalog for 1915 contains 18 classes.

One of the main reasons for the success of the show is the fact that it is entirely a horse show, no privileges being sold. The show will be judged by W. J. Kennedy. George W. Smith is president, and H. C. Lafe, secretary, with a strong backing of energetic horsemen who are making Paullina a draft horse center.

MASON CITY—Losing his footing on the platform of a big tractor drawn gang plow and falling beneath the blades of the plow, J. P. Hill, former supervisor of Cerro Gordo county, was painfully cut about the head and bruised and crushed about the body. He is now resting quite easily at his home here. The accident occurred on the Walter Pedelty farm northwest of the city. He is expected to recover.

CRESTON—Ray Jackson, 20 years old, son of a prominent farmer living near Prescott, is in a hospital here probably fatally hurt from an automobile accident. Young Jackson was found late Sunday by Chester Woods in front of the Woods farm home, two miles from Prescott, pinned under his car. The steering wheel was resting upon Jackson's head, which was badly crushed. It is not known how the accident occurred.

WEBSTER CITY READY TO TRY CITY MANAGER PLAN

Webster City, Ia., Oct. 15.—In a spirited municipal election here yesterday Webster City elected three men who will administer the "manager" plan of government. The three are Judge J. L. Kamrar, R. G Clark and M. L. McCullough. Webster City will be the first city in the state to operate under the new law. The new councilmen will take their seats October 18, at which time all old elective officers will retire.

BRITISH CABINET FACING SHAKE UP; CARSON RESIGNS

Failure of Balkan Policy, Disasters at Dardanelles, Conscription and Censorship Cause Split.

PRESS RAPS GOVERNMENT

Northcliffe Newspapers Are Stirring Up England—Parliament Demands Facts About Current Events.

London, Oct. 18.—According to the Times and the Daily Mail, tension exists in the British cabinet over the questions of conscription, the Balkan situation and the Dardanelles expedition, while there is gossip over the continued absence of Sir Edward Carson, the attorney general, from the cabinet meetings. He has not been present at any of the meetings here this week.

Notwithstanding the recent denial of Sir Edward Carson, the attorney general, that he has resigned the assertion is made by the parliamentary correspondent of the Daily News, that he has given up his office Announcement to this effct is withheld by the government, the correspondent says, because of its hope that in the interests of unity he may be persuaded to withdraw his resignation, the reason for which, it is said, has not be ascertained.

There is a feeling of dissatisfaction among the members of parliament at the inadequacy of the explanation of the Balkan situation given Thursday by Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign minister. As a result there are demands that the government give the house of commons an opportunity to discuss the matter and also for the government to make a frank statement on it.

BLAME SO WIDESPREAD IT CANNOT BE PLACED

By Francis W. Hirst.

London, Oct. 18.—The chief topic of the moment is the Northcliffe press attack on the foreign office over the alleged failure of our Balkan diplomacy. It commenced on Friday last, and now is developing into a general attack upon the government and upon the press censorship. The only minister so far specially excepted from blame is Mr. Lloyd George. The newspaper press is falling afoul of the censorship.

A letter by Sir John Simon shows the real responsibility to be so much distributed that no particular person can be fairly blamed for all the mistakes that are made.

The present wave of pessimism, though largely artificial, may lead to political developments at home, but most of the London press critics are too violent and too much discredited to shake the government unless it yields to their clamor, for dangerous and unpopular measures. The northern provincial press keeps a clear head, and the financial and economic situation is now coming to be better understood.

POWERS UNITE ON MEXICAN POLICIES

Pan-American Nations Are Unanimous in Granting Recognition to General Carranza.

Washington, Oct. 16.—The Carranza agency here today received a cablegram from Jesus Acuna, Carranza's foreign minister, saying Zapata leaders Argumedo and Almazan, with several thousand men have offered to surrender to General Carranza "if amnesty is granted them."

Washington, D. C., Oct. 18.—Favorable responses were received today from all the governments participating in the Pan-American conference, which decided to recognize General Carranza. Secretary Lansing has called a meeting of the conferees next Monday to arrange the form of recognition.

Argentina, Bolivia, Uruguay and Guatemala replied yesterday. Today favorable word came from Brazil and Chile.

Inasmuch as some of the countries still have diplomatic representatives in Mexico, a renewal of relations in an official manner can be arranged. The United States and several other countries, however, have not had diplomatic representatives for some time in Mexico City and recognition probably will take the form of the presentation of a note to General Carranza through the medium of Eliseo Arredondo, his representative here, who will depart for Mexico to meet General Carranza.

With the presentation of such a note an embargo on arms would go into effect against opposing factions and an ambassador or charge d'affaires would be sent as soon as selection could be made.

SETS WORLD RECORD FOR 440-YARD DASH

San Francisco, Oct. 16.—Frank Sloman, a San Francisco high school boy, broke the world's interscholastic 440-yard record in a sanctioned meet here today on the Panama-Pacific exposition dirt track. His time was 48 1-5 seconds, three-fifths of a second faster than the record held by Ted Meredith.

SUFFS STAGE PARADE.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 16.—More than 5,000 women supporters of the suffrage amendment, which will be voted on in Pennsylvania next month, were expected to participate in a parade here this afternoon. Headed by Mrs. Frank M. Roessing, president of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage party, and Miss Hannah J. Patterson, chairman, the parade will traverse the principal downtown streets.

mer Secretary of State Is n Washington Laying Lines for the Coming Struggle Over Preparedness.

BITIOUS PLANS READY

lf Billion Dollar Additon to lavy, and Army of 140,000, With 1,200,000 Reserve, Are Favored.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 17.—Speculais rife over the action by congress the administrations national defense gram. The fact that William J. yan is in Washington preparing to ge war on it and beat the adminrations' plans if possible has added the interest.

Friends of the administration are fident the program in substance will through. They believe enough reblicans will support it to more than et any defections which Bryan may able to cause.

Presid nt Wilson has given his ofial approval to the army and naval ns for a greater national defense. ngress will be asked for an immedie outlay of $400,000,000 for the com- year.

Details of the administration pream for national defense became own officially today. They include ix-year program, which in that time ll bring the American army with reves up to 1,200,000 trained men and ve a building program to add 16 capl ships: 10 dreadnaughts and six isers, 85 submarines, 50 destroyers d 15 scout cruisers in five years, th proportionate increases in pernnel and officers.

Approved By Wilson.

Estimates of appropriations needed begin the national defense proam are placed at $182,000,000 for the my and $216,000,000 for the navy. esident Wilson has approved the ogram as sumbitted by Secretaries rrison and Daniels.

In the first year's program Secretary niels has recommended the building two dreadnaughts, two battle cruis-, 25 coast submarines, five oceanng submarines, 12 destroyers, three out ships, an increase of 8,000 enlisted en and legislation for the appointent of 250 more midshipmen to the val academy.

For the army $72,000,000 more than st year will be asked and for the vy a $68,000,000 increase, making the tal increase for defense over last year 40,000,000.

The combined estimates of appropriions for national defense will be beeen $398,000,000 and $400,000,000, the tter figure being the estimate that s been kept in mind from the beginng as the limit for expenditures.

1,200.000 in Six Years.

Secretary Garrison's plan to increase e regular army from 87,000 to 140,000 en under a six-year enlistment, reiring two years of service and four ars in reserve, will give about 300,000 serves in six years, according to war partment calculations. The continental army, which is to be created by eans of a six-year enlistment of two onths each year for three years, with e colors, and three years of reserve bject to call at will at the end of x years, gives a total of 800,000 men. his trained citizen army, together th the regulars, will give, with the 5,000 national guardsmen, a mobile my of more than 1,200,000 men in six ars.

The plan is erected on the theory at the nation must depend upon a tizen army, laregly of a volunteer haracter, in time of war. There are any hundreds of thousands of young en, it is said, who have both the me and inclination to devote at least o months a year to rigid and active ilitary training, and the continental rmy would be composed of these, aving the national guard those citiens whose responsibilities prevent eir devoting more than one night a eek or so to military service. With x months' actual field training army fficers are confident that the conental army would be as thoroughly rganized as is possible with any sysm short of compulsory service and regular establishment of 500,000 men.

fficers for the new army would be btained from civil life almost entirely, s the West Point military academy ould be overtaxed even to supply ofcers for the increased regular army. ven at the present not more than alf of the officers of the army are West Point graduates, and an extenion of the work at West Point would e required to care for new regiments o be created.

Would Provide Guns.

For the continental army the plan ontemplates drafting from the naional guard and from additional instiutions where military training is comulsory at least 1,000 officers a year for ach of the first two years. Eventually, t is hoped that all military schools in he country can be standardized as to heir course in engineering and other ilitary sciences.

Adequate arms, field guns and reerve munitions would be provided.

The new army would be organized in onvenient geographical divisions and n the theory that its members could e citizens of the districts in which heir organizations were located.

Regular places of mobilization and or storage of equipment for each comany would be provided and every man f the force would know where to go nd what he was expected to do when call to arms came. The six years enistment would bind him to answer any all to the colors regardless of any peronal affairs with which it might interfere.

While under training the men of the ontinental army would receive the egular army pay.

In the beginning the new army would e organized by companies, and later ould be constituted into regiments, rigades, divisions and army corps as hey developed in the various sections f the country.

WOULD KNOW RESOURCES.

Atlantic City, N. J., Oct. 16.—In losing their annual sessions here today he American Hardware Manufacturers' ssociation requested President Wilson o name a committee of manufacturers o find where, in what time and in hat quantities materials and munions as may be needed by the federal overnment for an adequate defensive orce, can be obtained.

American Defense Plans.

What the Army Wants.

A regular army of 140,000 men; an increase of more than 50,000 men in the present establishment, including 10 reginients of infantry, four regiments of field artillery, 50 regiments of coast defense, 15 companies of engineering corps and two detachments of aviation corps.

A continental army 400,000 strong, enlisted for six years for service within the continental United States. These men would serve two months a year for the first three years, undergoing a period of intensive training. The remaining three years they would be on furlough subject to call in time of need.

State militia 125,000 strong.

The training and drafting of at least 2,000 officers in the next two years.

The standardization of all military schools.

This plan would bring the total standing and reserve army up to 1,2000,000 at the end of six years.

What the Navy Wants.

Total army, peace footing, 665,000 men.

Ten new dreadnaughts, six great battle cruisers, 70 submarines, 50 destroyers 10 fleet scout crisers and a host of auxiliary ships, such as tenders, colliers, mother ships for submarines and sea planes.

Total expenditure of $500,000,000 covering a period of five years in which to complete the navy building program.

This would bring the total naval strength of the United States up to 28 modern dreadnaughts and 22 older battleships, a total of 50 first line craft, first class cruisers, 11; second class cruisers, 4, third class cruisers, 15 gunboats, 31, monitors, 9, destroyers, 118; torpedo boats, 128, submarines and numerous smaller craft, including monitors, scouting craft, etc., making it second only to Great Britain and a close competitor of that country in total tonnage and gun power.

NO GERMAN SHIPS NOW PLOW BALTIC

British Submarines Virtually Have Cleared Scandinavian Waters and Broken Up Trade.

London Oct 18 – British submarines have now cleared the Baltic Sea and the Gulf of Bothnia entirely of German merchant ships, says a dispatch to the Star from Copenhagen Every German ship which was south bound from Sweden when the submarines started their campaign, has either been sunk or run aground it adds

Of 50 German ore carriers 37 are virtually interned in Swedish ports, the correspondent declares.

Having driven the German merchant men from the sea the submarines have sunk one and probably two German torpedo crafts, one reported to be a torpedo boat destroyer and the other a torpedo boat—which with other warships had come out to convoy ore laden steamers. Activity of the British navy also is shown in the North Sea The record shows that 24 German trawlers have been captured and taken into Grimsby during the past month

CRIDERMAN SAYS HE KILLED BOTH WOMEN

Denies Assault Attempt and Declares Action Was Result of Petty Quarrel.

Valentine Neb., Oct 18—William Criderman, a farm hand at the Heelan ranch, 18 years of age, has made complete confession of the murder of Mrs Nell Heelan and Mrs. Anna Layport at the Heelan ranch, near Valentine. Young Criderman now denies that he attempted to assault Mrs. Heelan, his employer's wife, but the authorities do not credit this denial, on account of various circumstances.

In his confession he says that he was at Arabia early in the evening with Mrs. Heelan and Mrs. Layport, Mr. Heelan being in Omaha with their 12-year-old daughter, who Thursday underwent an operation at the Presbyterian hospital.

At Arabia, according to Criderman's confession, he had an altercation with Mrs. Heelan over a horse, and was sent home ahead of them. He says he was in a bitter frame of mind and planned murder He asserts that when the two women arrived at the ranch they refused to give him anything to eat, whereupon he secured a shotgun and went to the barn, where he wrote a note, which was Thursday found there in a conspicuous place, reading

"I won't tell you what the trouble started over, but you will find our bones in the ashes.—W C"

Then, so he says, he sneaked up to one of the windows of the house and shot Mrs. Heelan Entering the house and stepping over the dead body of the ranchman's wife, he shot Mrs. Layport, who was screaming into the telephone trying to secure help. He adds that he shot her twice and that she was not dead when he set fire to the structure.

Going to the pasture he stole one of Heelan's fastest horses, donned one of the women's skirts, mounted and rode toward Wood Lake down the railway tracks.

Although not admitted in the confession, the authorities say that by piecing the admissions and evidence together they are convinced that Cryderman attempted to assault Mrs. Heelan, that she baffled him and that he then told her to prepare for death. He shot her through the head while she was telling her beads, rosary and crucifix in hand, and her friend at the telephone.

From the body of Mrs. Heelan he stole the rosary, crucifix and prayer book, and from Mrs. Layport's body an inexpensive side comb and a gold watch.

When arrested, the murderer was wearing the rosary he had taken from his victim.

CHILD KILLED BY EXPLOSION.

Aberdeen, S. D., Oct. 16.—An explosion of a gasoline stove in a cook car, for a threshing rig, operating on a farm four miles from Timber Lake, S. D., caused the death of a 17-months-old baby and seriously burned the child's mother, Mrs. John Kamperseheroer.

TRAIN FALLS INTO STREAM; 13 DROWN

Union Pacific Motor Cars Plunge Into a Creek, Over Which the Bridge Had Been Washed Away.

Randolph, Kan., Oct. 16.—Union Pacific motor train No. 579, consisting of one passenger coach and a baggage and mail combination car, crashed through an undermined abutment, plunged into Fancy creek, and buried about 15 feet of the forward end of the passenger car in flood waters and mud, one mile south of here, early today

Four of the estimated 75 passengers are known to be dead and nine other bodies are said to be lodged in the buried end of the car

All attempts to reach these bodies have failed and the correct death list probably will not be known until the wrecking crew can reach the scene and lift the car

Fancy creek, ordinarily nearly dry, was swollen into a torrent by three inches of rain, which fell yesterday and last night. The bridge proper withstood the ravages of the flood waters, but the south abutment was cut under so that the charging motor train carried it down.

A majority of the passengers were young women school teachers coming to a teachers' meeting which was to have been held here today. Several of the young women are unaccounted for.

It was said few persons in the wrecked car escaped injuries. A call was sent to Marysville and to Manhattan for medical assistance. The homes of Randolph were thrown open to the sufferers.

The identified dead are:

DR. LEWIS ATWOOD, physician, Topeka.

ALMA K. JELLIN, Garrison, Kan.

Warren Knittle, of Manhattan, conductor of the wrecked train, estimated that 13 passengers, probably lost their lives. He said 37 passengers had been accounted for as alive after the wreck.

The illfated train arrived at the Fancy creek bridge at 7:50. The train was traveling at a rapid rate, when, according to the passengers the forward end of the passenger suddenly pitched down.

GERMANS DETERMINED TO GET DVINSK, CLAIM

On Defensive Elsewhere on the Eastern Front, Petrograd Dispatch States.

Petrograd, (via London), Oct. 16.—With the exception of Dvinsk, on the northern end of the Russian battle front, where fierce artillery battles continue, the Germans appear to be on the defensive along the entire eastern front.

Russian military authorities say they have obtained information that the German armies have been ordered to take Dvinsk at any cost. German attacks at this point have been made with the utmost impetuosity under cover of a terrific artillery fire, but so far they have been unable to break down the Russian defense. The German losses are reported to have been extremely heavy.

COPPER MINERS SEEK AN INCREASE IN PAY

El Paso, Tex., Oct. 16.—Peace commissioners went into conference today with the announced purpose of seeking terms upon which the Arizona copper miners' strike may be settled. Norman Carmichael, J. W. Bennie and Milton McLean, the three mine managers who fled from the Clifton district to El Paso, claiming that they were in danger of personal violence, gathered in a hotel room with G. Hollingsworth, J. S. Hughes, Henry Daly, Rudolfo Palacios and Rufino Garcia, the representatives of the strikers. The miners' committee was escorted to the meeting place by Adjt. Gen. C. W. Harris, of the national guard of Arizona.

With the question of formal recognition of the Western Federation of Miners already waived by the strikers, the conference was expected to center around wages and grievances. The miners took into the conference a new wage scale and demanded its acceptance by the operators.

ENVOYS OF ITALY AND CZAR LEAVING GREECE, IS RUMOR

Rumored Move May Mark Beginning of End of Negotiations Between Greece and Entente Allies.

GERMAN TREATY HINTED

Italy to Send 150,000 Troops Into Balkans—Counter Blow May Be Struck at the City of Sofia.

London, Oct. 16.—A blockade of the Bulgarian coast in the Aegean sea by British warships of the eastern Mediterranean squadron was put into effect today, according to announcement made by the official press bureau.

Paris, Oct. 16.—Austro-German losses in the campaign against Serbia up to Thursday evening, October 14, were estimated at 25,000 officers and men killed and 60,000 wounded, according to a dispatch received today by the Temps from Nish, the Serbian capital. The Serbian army operating in the north, the message adds, also sustained heavy losses.

Paris, Oct. 16.—Unrest in the interior of Bulgaria is reported in special dispatches through Bucharest.

Many officers of pro-Russian sentiments have retired from the army, it is declared.

Amsterdam, (via London), Oct. 18.—According to a dispatch from Athens to the Cologne Gazette, the ministers of Russia and Italy are preparing to leave Greece. The families of the diplomats, the message adds, probably will leave the Grecian capital today on a warship bound for Italy.

Nothing has been heard from any of the entente capitals about a possible rupture with Greece. Yesterday's news reports declared that the rumor was widespread in Berlin that a secret treaty between Germany, Greece and Bulgaria exists. Bulgaria, since declaring war on Serbia repeatedly has assured Greece that she contemplated nothing affecting Greek interests.

The entente allies are plainly disappointed with the conduct of Greece, whose king reversed the policy of his ministry at the last moment after allied troops had landed at Saloniki and the Greek army had been mobilized with funds furnished by England. King Constantine, of Greece, is a brotherin-law of Emperor William, of Germany.

ITALY TO SUPPORT ALLIES IN BALKAN EXPEDITION

Paris, Oct. 18.—Italy will send 150,000 men to the Balkans, according to information received by the Excelsior from what the paper says is a reliable source. The government maintains the strictest secrecy as to where the troops will be landed, says the Excelsior's informant, but Italian intervention will take place at a point where it will have a decisive effect on the whole Balkan campaign.

The military critic of the Budapest Universal, in an article today expresses the belief that the British and French troops landed at Saloniki will not go to the aid of the Serbians at Nish, which is 250 miles from their base, but will make a direct attack on Sofia from the Serbian frontier, thus cutting Bulgaria in two and also stopping the Austro-German advance by one of the principal railroads to Constantinople.

The writer adds, however, that the Anglo-French forces must be strong and that Italy must cooperate with them.

ENGLAND AND BULGARIA HAVE NOW DECLARED WAR

London, Oct. 16.—Reciprocal war declarations between Bulgaria and Great Britain and Serbia together with King Ferdinand's manifesto the Bulgarian people defining Bulgaria's cause and intention have marked another phase in the Balkan situation which is slowly emerging from obscurity. Greece's decision not to join forces with Serbia at present although causing profound disappointment in England and being regarded by many London commentators as equivolcal and as violating the obligations to Serbia has at least, been accounced in the words permitting of no further doubt as to the immediate position of affairs, which, however, circumstances might alter at any moment.

Rumania Neutral.

Rumania remains the only sphynx like figure in the Balkans. She, according to a telegram received in Paris from Bucharest, has decided to maintain strict neutrality, but this is not taken in London to be a definite answer.

Field Marshal Mackensen's campaign against Serbia is developing with a slowness that is very gratifying to the allies of Serbia. He has advanced slightly and made some captures, but his troops according to advices received in the British capital, have so far obtained no important results.

The first Bulgarian army is attacking the Serbian frontier northeast of Nish, the present capital of King Peter, and is occupying the mountain passes. Confident dispatches from Nish say that unless the Austro-Germans bring up further reinforcements, the Serbian troops will be able to hold their defenses.

An unofficial Balkan report says the Serbian army already has retaken Pisana and Boukva, which were captured by the Bulgarians, October 13.

A Nish dispatch says:

"There has been severe fighting along the northern front. Acerding to the latest report received at the Serbian headquarters the Austro-German forces on the Obrenovatz-Belgrade-Semendria-Gradichte front have lost 20,000 killed, and 40,000 wounded. A message from Oreovitza to the German legation at Sofia admits great losses and says that the Serbian resistance exceeded expectation.

SERBIAN CAPITAL IS TRANSFERRED FROM NISH

Milan, (via Paris), Oct. 16.—The seat of the Serbian government has been transferred to Mitrovitza, near the Montenegrin frontier, according to a dispatch to the Secolo from Bucharest.

SUFFS AND ANTIS IN RIVAL MANIFESTATIONS

Staid Old Boston Stirred to Depths by the Fight for Equal Suffrage.

Boston, Oct. 16.—Advocates of the woman suffrage amendment to be voted on in Massachusetts in November were astir early today with preparation for a "victory parade" this afternoon in which it was expected 10,000 marchers would be in line. Thirty bands were engaged, and facing Boston common there had been erected a reviewing standing to be occupied by Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, president of the Massachusetts Suffrage association, and others prominently identified with the cause.

The program preceding a great mass meeting included a review at the state house by Governor Walsh, and the presentation by Miss Helen Keller to the governor of a letter written by Miss Keller commending him for his stand on suffrage.

A counter demonstration was planned by leaders of the antisuffrage movement. Along the line of march scores of houses had been decorated in red, the antisuffrage colors, while red roses worn by crowds in the street were supposed to indicate their opposition to votes for women. It was the antisuffragists plan to stand in silence along the streets through which the parade moved with their red colors flung to the breeze. Strict orders had been issued, however, that the suffragist paraders were not to be annoyed.

SEEKS $50,000,000 FEDERAL MARINE

McAdoo Explains Dual Purpose of Proposed Government Owned Merchant Fleet.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 16.—A vigorous plea for a navy which would make the United States able to face any other world power and a $40,000,000 merchant marine, to be used as a naval auxiliary in case of war, was made by William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury, in an address before the Kansas City Commercial club, which approved his scheme.

"It is not for aggression that we must have an adequate navy, but to be able to say to he world that we are prepared to uphold the honor and majesty of this great republic," said the secretary.

"Fighting equipment alone, though it be of the best that the resources and brains of the country can prepare, will not accomplish this purpose," continued the secretary. "A navy can be no better than its auxiliary, since battle cruisers and submarines are not built to operate long without renewal of supplies and men."

The plan of the administration, Mr. McAdoo said, "is to appropriate $40,000,000, or possibly $50,000,000 to be put into a merchant marine to be used in extending the commerce of the nation in times of peace, but so constructed, equipped and manned as to become immediately the necessary naval auxiliary. Mr. McAdoo continued:

"I believe an adequate merchant marine, headed by a commission composed of the secretary of commerce and the secretary of the navy and three experienced business men could make the United States the dominant financial and industrial power of the world. Also it would disprove that time worn theory that merchant ships cannot be operated under American registry and made to pay profits."

TEUTON FINANCES CAN'T LAST, CLAIM

Francis W. Hirst, Economist, Declares That Austro-German Funds Are Nearing State of Exhaustion.

BY FRANCIS W. HIRST.
Editor of "The Economist."

London, Oct. 18.—German and Austrian war finance cannot last much longer, and our policy should therefore be to limit our obligations by the practice of the severest economy, both in public and in private expenditure.

Economy is difficult for military officers, also for individuals who are making money fast, and for working men earning high wages. The war profits tax will, however, have a salutary effect upon the private expenditures of war contractors whom it obliges to think of future taxes as well as present profits.

Farsighted critics continue to urge further taxation upon luxurious expenditure of all kinds because the floating of new loans before new money has been saved must mean an inflation of prices.

Luckily for the working classes the world's harvest statistics point to cheaper bread.

CROWD OF 2,000 SEES NEGRO SLAYER HANGED

Murphysboro, Ill., Oct. 16.—Joe Deberry, a negro, was hanged at 9:30 o'clock this morning for the murder of Mrs. J. H. Martin. A crowd of outsiders thronged the town and 2,000 persons ere within the stockade to witness the execution. Three thousand more were on the streets unable to gain admittance.

The largest single law office in the country is the attorney general's of New York state, which takes up all the time of Attorney General Woodbury and his 35 assistants. At present the office is handling 8,233 cases, involving more than $150,000,000 in money and property.

VILLA IS KILLED BY OWN MEN, REPORTS TO BORDER STATE

Border Officials Unable to Confirm Various Stories That the Famous Mexican General Is Dead.

RUMOR WIDELY CURRENT

Revolt Said to Have Broken Out Among Rebel Troops at Cases Grandes, Following Murder.

Douglas, Ariz., Oct. 16.—Gen. P. Elias Calles, Carranza commander at Agua Prieta, said today he had been informed that General Villa was enroute from Casas Grandes to Sonora. He believes his information is correct.

El Paso, Tex., Oct. 18.—A report that Gen. Francisco Villa, leader of the northern faction in Mexico, has been killed and was brought to El Paso early today by a Mexican woman who just arrived from Casas Grandes.

Reports current here for 12 hours that Gen. Francisco Villa, chief of the convention forces, had been arrested by his own men at Casas Grandes, convicted, and put to death, could not be authoritatively confirmed here early today. Messages from General Villa, in his private code, were received at Juarez at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The messages related to business with his representatives at Juarez.

Tells of Revolt.

A Mexican passenger from Casas Grandes, arriving Thursday night, was said to have brought the first word of Villa's death, but his story became public only late yesterday, when it received apparent confirmation from an American arrival, who said he had been so informed by a railroad employe.

The Mexican's story was that General Villa had demanded money of a subordinate, who on refusing, was shot by the northern chieftain. A revolt occurred, the story continued, in which 7,000 Mexicans arrayed themselves against 2,000 that sided with Villa. In the fight that ensued Villa was killed, said the Mexican.

Villa's Alleged Slayer Drowns.

One report was that executioner, Gen. Rudolfo Pierro, was dead, was received over the military wires from Casas Grandes. It stated briefly that Fierro had been drowned while fording a river; that his horse slipped and the general was swept down stream.

General Fierro was one of the most picturesque and most audacious leaders produced by the Mexican revolution. Formerly he was a railroad brakeman, finally turning bandit and robbing an express train at Lampasos, Mex., between Laredo and Monterey. For this he never was prosecuted, eluding his pursuers and escaping to the hills.

When the revolution broke out Fierro joined Villa's forces and won the esteem of his commander at the battles of Torreon and Zacatecas. Subsequently he became known as Villa's right hand man, who could be relied upon to carry out particularly atrocious plans.

It was Fierro who took William Benton, an Englishman, in charge when the latter attempted to call Villa to account for the confiscation of Benton's property. The death of Benton was attributed to Fierro. He was with Villa on his recent visit to the ranch of Gen. Tomas Urbina, during which Urbina was killed.

Fierro Ruthless Bully.

Fierro was a large man physically, alert, cunning and apparently insensible of fear. Recently while in a Juarez resort Fierro compelled a party of Americans to drink to Villa's health and forced the women in the party to dance with him. On another occasion he is said to have placed the point of his dagger at the stomach of a proprietor of a Juarez resort and compelled him to laugh at the "tickle" of the razorlike edge.

Tales of ruthless slaughter of prisoners and cruelties permeated the atmosphere about Fierro, until his presence was sufficient to stampede Mexicans or foreigners, yet various tales were told of Mexicans unafraid, who compelled him to "step lively" with shots fired at the heels of his boots which were bearing him to safety.

Washington, Oct. 16. — Messages reaching the state department early today from George C. Carothers, its special agent at Casas Grandes, made no mention of anything happening to General Villa.

PLACES RECRUITING IN CIVILIAN HANDS

Radical Change in Enlistment Methods Inaugurated in Great Britain.

London, Oct. 18.—Recruiting is to be taken entirely out of the hands of the military authorities and entrusted exclusively to civilian organizations. This is the scheme by which the Earl of Derby, director of recruiting for the army, hopes to secure a sufficient number of voluntary enlistments to render recourse to conscription unnecessary. He described the new system at a private conference with the parliamentary recruiting committee and the joint labor recruiting board this afternoon.

"The changes that I propose making," said Lord Derby, "have not been necessitated by any short comings on the part of the recruiting staff, but by the exigences of the present situation which to my mind, require entirely new methods of dealing with the subject. In the past, recruits have been found by the military authorities assisted by civilians. I propose to make civilians responsible for bringing raw material in the shape of recruits to the military authorities for them to enlist, clothe, equip and train.

Many say some men are egotistical for declaring that they do not want to be President. We call that the finest kind of optimism.

Very few of us ever get everything we vote for, and, therefore, few of us give the voters credit for knowing what they vote for.

The man who doesn't advertise probably believes "by their deeds they shall be known." But pretty soon he won't have any deeds to be known by.

After a girl has been wishing for several months that he would pop the question, she can act just as surprised as if such a thing had never entered her head.

There's hardly a no 'count counter warmer and jackknife logician who couldn't tell you how near he came in earlier life to be called to the service of the dear peepul.

Consider ye the bottle fly and the wasp. The bottle fly pounds around and makes five times as much noise as the wasp, but doesn't command one-fifth as much respect.

A woman gets the idea she wants a piece of clothing from seeing a dear friend wear it—and becomes set that she does not want it when she meets a dear enemy wearing one.

It is quite possible to do some things equally as well two different ways. As an example: The farmer and the real estate man both make their living out of the same dirt, but in two entirely different ways.

One Oregon paper tells a harrowing tale of an automobilist who ran over a skunk, and another paper asks: "How did he know it." We suggest that some motion picture corporation offer a substantial prize for the most plausible solution.

RUTH IS HOME AGAIN

"Ruth," said her mother one morning, "can you tell me how many teaspoonfuls of sugar make an ounce?"

"Two, I think," was Ruth's reply, and then she added: "I believe I have a table telling how to measure an ounce of several things. I'll see if I can find it." In a short time she reappeared and handed her mother the following:

An ounce of granulated sugar equals two level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of flour, four level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of butter, two level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of ground coffee, five level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of cornstarch, three level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of thyme, eight level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of chocolate, three level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of pepper, sour level tablespoonfuls.

An ounce of mustard, four level tablespoonfuls.

Clerk of District Court.

PRICES FOR PUFFS

The editor of an eastern paper has grown peevish. He has been pestered so much by people desiring free puffs that he facetiously refers to himself as the "Peerless Prince of Puff Purveyors." He thinks he has done enough for social queens, ministers who are looking for free advertising, people who have legislative fads they wish to push, and organizations which want free publicity. So he has evolved the following scale of prices for puffs:

For telling the public that a man is a successful citizen, when everybody knows he is as lazy as a hired man, $2.70.

Referring to a deceased citizen as one who is mourned by the entire community, when he is only missed by the poker circle, $10.13.

Referring to one as a hero and a man of courage and one who will stand by his honest convictions, when everybody knows that he is a moral coward and would sell out for thirty cents, $6.21.

Referring to some gallivantin' female as an estimable lady whom it is pleasure to meet and know, when every man in town would sooner see Satan coming, $8.10.

Calling an ordinary pulpit orator an eminent divine, 60 cents.

Sending a doughty sinner to heaven, $5.00.

Referring to a deceased merchant who never advertised in his life as a progressive citizen, $4 99.

Lambasting the daylights out of the demon rum at the behe of the local prohibition committee, $6.77.

Ditto for the prohibitionists at the request of the local "wet" committee, $6.77.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three time during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to clearse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

A WONDROUS LAND

The Yellowstone Region as James Bridger Saw It.

AND HE WAS A TRUTHFUL MAN

His Adventure With an Elk at the Famous Obsidian Cliff and the Effect of a Ride Through Alum Creek—Story of the Mountain That Was Cursed.

As a teller of tales Munchausen had a worthy rival in James Bridger, the celebrated hunter, trader and guide whose name and career are part of the pioneer history of the west. Bridger was thoroughly familiar with the region now comprised in the Yellowstone park as far back as 1830.

In his book, "The Yellowstone Park," the author Hiram Martin Chittenden, brigadier general United States army, retired, sets down some of the yarns Bridger told about that land of wonders. Many of the Yellowstone country tales ascribed to Bridger have survived to this day, probably because they have never been capped. The first story General Chittenden tells relates to the celebrated Obsidian cliff, a mass of black volcanic glass with which all the tourists are familiar. Its discovery by Bridger was the result of a hunting trip and it happened in this way:

"Coming one day in sight of a magnificent elk, he took careful aim at the unsuspecting animal and fired. To his amazement the elk not only was not wounded, but seemed not to have heard the noise of the rifle. Bridger drew considerably nearer and gave the elk the benefit of his most deliberate aim, but with the same result as before. A third and fourth effort met with similar fate. Utterly exasperated, he seized his rifle by the barrel, resolved to use it as a club since it had failed as a firearm. Rushing madly toward the elk he suddenly crashed into an immovable vertical wall which proved to be a mountain of perfectly transparent glass, on the farther side of which, still in peaceful security, the elk was quietly grazing.

"Stranger still, the mountain was not only of pure glass, but was a perfect telescope lens, and, whereas the elk seemed but a few yards off, it was in reality twenty five miles away."

Another of Bridger's discoveries was an ice cold spring near the summit of a lofty mountain, the water from which flowed down over a long, smooth slope, where it acquired such velocity that it was boiling hot when it reached the bottom. This, a later investigator of the Firehole river found, was a case in which a hot spring discharged into the river bed.

Alum creek, a tributary of the Yellowstone, received its name from an accidental discovery by Bridger. One day he forded the creek and rode out several miles and back. He noticed that the return journey was only a small fraction of the distance going and that his horse's feet had shrunk to mere points which sank into the solid ground so that the animal could scarcely hobble along. Seeking the cause, he found it to be in the astringent qualities of the water, which was saturated with alum to such an extent that it had power to pucker distance itself.

Bridger also found a fine place to fish. "Somewhere along the shore an immense boiling spring discharges its overflow directly into the lake. The specific gravity of the water is less than that of the lake, owing to the expansive action of heat, and it floats in a stratum of three or four feet thick upon the cold water underneath. When Bridger was in need of fish it was to this place that he went. Through the hot upper stratum he let fall his bait to the subjacent habitable zone and, having hooked his victim, cooked him on the way out!"

The visitor to the region of petrifications in the northeast corner of the park and to various points in the hot springs districts will have no difficulty in discovering the base material out of which Bridger contrived the following picturesque yarn:

"A mountain in the park was once cursed by a great medicine man of the Crow nation. Everything on the mountain at the time of this dire event became instantly petrified and has remained so ever since. All forms of life are standing about in stone where they were suddenly caught by the petrifying influences, even as the inhabitants of ancient Pompeii were surprised by the ashes of Vesuvius. Sagebrush, grass, prairie fowls, antelopes, elks and bears may there be seen as perfect as in actual life. Dashing torrents and the spray mist from them stand forth in arrested motion as if carved from rock by a sculptor's chisel. Even flowers are blooming in colors of crystal, and birds soar with wings spread in motionless flight, while the air floats with music and perfumes siliceous, and the sun and moon shine with pertrified light!" It is denied, though, that Baldger was responsible for the story that even the laws of gravitation were petrified in the region.

Uncontrollable Curiosity.

"I don't see how it is that Mrs. Jorwag has so many friends. She gossips terribly."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "Everybody seems willing to take a chance on being talked about for the sake of hearing what she says about the others."—Washington Star.

There is only one sort of shabbiness that matters—a shabbiness of the soul.

CREDIT SOCIETIES NOT FEASIBLE

Long Term Credit Problem Solved In a Different Way

The solution of the long term credit problem in most sections of the United States at the present time is to be found in the establishment large institutions to buy up morgages and issue investment certificates on them to the public. This is the belief of John Ise, professor of agricultural economics at Iowa State College. Examples of such institutions are the Credit Foncier of France and the Land Bank of Joliet, Illinois.

"It seems doubtful whether most Iowa farmers are ready for co-operative credit societies," says Mr Ise. "They are harder to organize and maintain than almost any other kind of co-operative organization. This does not mean that such ventures are impossible in the state, but at present good judgment must be employed or the entire co-operative movement may receive a set-back."

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

It's pain only; not one case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you say Jack Robinson—out comes the rheumatic pain. "St. Jacob's Oil" is a harmless rheumatism cure which never disappoints and doesn't burn the skin. It takes pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops sciatica, lumbago, backache, neuralgia.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

CREAM FOR CATARRH
OPENS UP NOSTRILS

Tells How To Get Quick Relief from Head-Colds. It's Splendid!

In one minute your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh will be gone.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly.

Why Do the Girls Do It?

"Why do only very pretty girls wear their hair in knots over their ears?" asked Jonkins.

"Because fur earmuffs cost money in these war days," ventured Judkins.

"They wouldn't, probably, if they knew constant covering up the ears tends to deafness, besides being unsanitary," said the doctor. "The ears require air as well as the face."

"Pshaw!" returned Jenkins, "they cover their ears because they don't wish to hear all the pretty things said about them."

"Jenkins, you don't know a thing about human nature, as exemplified in the pretty girl," retorted the doctor.

And they all laughed.

Value of Hardship.

"So you've been camping?"

"Yes," replied the sunburned

"Of course you had a good time

"No. It rained almost incessantly, the insects nearly ate me alive, and I didn't catch any fish Still, I derived a great deal of benefit from the experience."

"I must say you are optimisitic."

"Yes. Before I went away I didn't know how to appreciate a hall bedroom."

Choice of Hostelries.

"What is the best hotel?" the newcomer inquired

"The one down the street," replied the native, reflectively, "has the best dining room for dancing. But the one around the corner has the best roof garden and skating rink. And—oh, yes, I nearly forgot—there's an old fashioned tavern up three or four blocks, where you might get something to eat."—Judge

Painful Contrast.

"Who is that fellow fulminating against American bankers for being willing to lend Great Britain and France approximately $1,000,000,000?"

"That's Jibway. No wonder he's bitter."

"Why so?"

"He's been going around town for two weeks trying to borrow $50."—Exchange.

Gentleness.

"So you think the world is growing better?"

"I do," replied the cheery citizen.

"In spite of all these wars?"

"Yes. If human nature were not very gentle and obedient it would be impossible to send so many men to war without letting them know precisely what they were fighting about."

Of Course.

"I want to git a bed an' a mattress," said Farmer Wayback, entering a Newark furniture store

"Yes, sir," replied the furniture dealer, "a spring bed and spring mattress, I suppose"

"No I want that kind that kin be used all the year round"—Mrs Emma L. P Wilcox, California

Adaptable Art.

"Let us tarry a moment before this cubistic picture"

"What does it represent?"

"War"

I wonder what it would represent if turned upside down"

You never can tell about these cubistic pictures It might represent peace"

Living Up to It.

"You have an excellent motto for the railroad, sir. 'Safety First' inspires confidence in the public"

"Yes, sir And we live up to it. No passenger travels a mile without paying first"

We often feel sorry for the rich. There is Rockefeller, for instance, he once had as much hair as anybody.

ANGLO-AMERICANS LOSE MILLIONS BY NEW BRITISH INCOME TAX

American women who have gone to England with their money are hard hit by the new British income tax of 33 1-3 per cent. Here are estimates of what some of them will have to pay: Mrs. William B. Leeds, $300,000, the Duchess of Roxeburghe, $170,000; Lady Granard, $100,000; the Duchess of Marlborough, $50,000; Mrs. John Astor, $30,000.

WANTS STORIES OF WAR RELATED ON HIS GRAVE

Paris, (by mail)—A French soldier fighting in the Argonne has just inherited an estate valued at $40,000 from an eccentric retired army officer who lived in the soldier's native village. The only condition attached to the legacy is that the soldier must from time to time visit the grave of his benefactor and relate there some of his war experiences The will says

"Being without family I leave the whole of my fortune to Paul Cambon, farmer I desire thus to show my gratitude to him for having for many years listened patiently and with every air of interest to the stories I used to tell of the war of 1870. I trust that he will be spared to return to his village after the present war, and my only request to him is that he come occasionally to my tomb and there relate some of his own war experiences."

Hot Soup Kitchen Wins Husband.

Vancouver, B. C Special. Hot soup and other gastronomic delectables served on the battle front in the European war are seen to go hand in hand with romance in an announcement that Miss Kathleen Dunsmuir, daughter of Hon. James Dunsmuir, former coal baron and lieutenant governor of British Columbia, now with the British forces in France, while escaping bullets on the field of conflict, has been laid low by an arrow from the bow of Dan Cupid

Miss Dunsmuir, according to a formal announcement by her parents, is to wed Maj Seldon Humphrys, deputy assistant quartermaster general with the army service corps at Havre. The distinguished Vancouver society maid, who has many friends here and in the coast cities of the states, especially Seattle, and the gallant major owe their meeting to the war. Both are now at the front.

Soon after war was declared, Miss Dunsmuir, who is about 22 years old and pretty, organized a fund among her friends for a motor kitchen, and before the end of the year was at the front, dishing up the aforementioned soup and other sustenance for the injured just back of the firing line.

Havre was the point at which her motor periodically was outfitted and it was there that Major Humphrys came into the picture.

The date of the ceremony was not announced

Her father is British Columbia's richest citizen, and is credited with being the largest individual stockholder in the Canadian Pacific railway in America.

Figuring a Future for Lansing.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican

In view of the fact that the term of Senator O'Gorman of New York is to expire in March, 1917, the suggestion is made that Robert Lansing, secretary of state, might be considered for the succession next year It is believed that the national administration would not be dissatisfied if events should so turn as to retire Mr. O'Gorman to private life. Of course, just now Secretary Lansing could not be spared, but a year hence the work of the state department may be less pressing So reason those who are talking about the possibility that another secretary of state from New York may retire from that office and stop into th United States Senate, as Elihu Root did

It is recalled that Mr Lansing is not without some knowledge of practical politics, for in 1891 he was the personal manager of Roswell P Flower when he ran for governor. Governor Flower was much pleased with the young man. Since that time Mr Lansing has been chiefly known professionally All this forecasting is, of course, pure speculation, so far as the New York senatorship is concerned, and seems at present unlikely to come about—but all things are possible in politics. Mr. Lansing has come to be of national interest.

China's "Day of National Shame."

From the World's Work.

On May 7, of this year, immense China was forced to accept infant Japan's ultimatum. "Self Conscious Disgrace Societies" were organized. Prominent Chinese undertook to perpetuate May 7 as "The Day of National Shame," and each year the rainbow flag is to be lowered on that day. The Peking Chinese chamber of commerce sent to all the provincial chambers throughout the republic a tirring appeal, entitled, "Never Forget the Nation's Disgrace!"

"MANIFEST DESTINY" NOT ALTOGETHER HONORABLE

By Luke Guardian in Philadelphia Ledger

Mexican bandits have invaded the United States. They have a considerable advantage over General Funston's soldiers in the fact that when they retreat across the Rio Grande they are safe from pursuit. But the American government, something like three-quarters of a century ago, was not nearly so conscientious as it is today in observing the proprieties attaching to international boundary lines. The events of 1846 well illustrate the power of a president to force the country into war, whether the people like it or not.

The means which President Polk adopted were not such as to win the praise of historians or the unanimous approval of contemporaries. Polk saw that the only way to get California and New Mexico was to go to war And so he went to war The excuse was the dispute over the boundary line of Texas, which in 1845 was admitted to the union. Polk's machinations both preceded and followed that event. A very flimsy excuse he had, too The Texans claimed the territory lying between the Nueces river and the Rio Grande The Mexicans claimed that the Nueces was the boundary line. The Texan claim had no foundation in previous history or in the then existing circumstances Yet Polk supported Texas for the sake of the nation's "manifest destiny," though there is no doubt that the boundary question could have been easily settled by diplomacy

He sent General Taylor across the Nueces. Then he sent him to the banks of the Rio Grande Taylor intrenched his army opposite the Mexican town of Matamoras. As Benton wrote, "The armies being thus in presence, with anger in their bosoms and arms in their hands, that took place which everybody saw must take place—collisions and hostilities." The Americans were attacked by a small detachment of Mexican troops. Then Polk piously sent a message to congress—Mexico "has shed American blood on American soil" Congress, to save the face of the nation declared war The preamble of the declaration read "Whereas, by act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists"—etc. The whigs protested that the statement was untrue Lincoln introduced his famous "Spot resolutions," calling upon the president to designate the exact spot where the outrage had been committed. Lowell in the Biglow papers expressed the indignation of many citizens:

I dunno but wut it's pooty,
Trainin' round in bobtail coats—
But it's cur'us Christian dooty,
This 'ere cuttin' folks' throats.

It is a pleasant certainty that at last our manifest geographical destiny has been fulfilled.

Remarkable Remarks.

From the New York Independent.

Julia Marlowe—I am hungry for the real world—I want to live life—not act it.

Ed Howe—People speak of the day of judgment. There are thousands of such days

Thomas A. Edison—Nearly every nation except the United States is more or less predatory.

Sir Gilbert Parker—The almighty heart is stronger in the United States than the almighty dollar

G K Chesterman—I dare not conjecture what will happen when the very worst criminal really meets the best criminologist.

Ex-Gov Eugene N Foss—Business men should accept public offices. We have all the lawyers that the situation seems to demand.

George W Goethals—The best results are secured through the co-operation of men who are contented and who have respect for and confidence in their leaders.

Cora Harris—There's just one person you can fool all the time. You can't fool the public nor God, nor your family, nor the children, but you can fool yourself every day in the week.

World's Harvest Calendar.

From Farm and Fireside.

Somewhere every month in the year harvesting machinery or harvest hands are working. The world's harvest schedule is as follows:

January—New Zealand, Argentina.
February—East India, upper Egypt.
March—Egypt Chili
April—Asia Minor and Mexico.
May—Asia, China, Japan, Texas.
June—Turkey, Spain, southern United States.
July—United States, Austria, southern Russia, England, Germany, Switzerland
August—Canada, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Poland.
September—Scotland, Sweden, Norway, Siberia.
October—Northern Russia, Siberia.
November—South Africa and Peru
December—Uruguay, Australia

Then it all starts over again, beginning with New Zealand and Argentina. The United States exports harvesting machinery to all the countries named, and also many others.

Water in which potatoes have been boiled is said to be an excellent remedy for insects on animals. The first application is generally effectual, but it had better be repeated a few times to destroy the eggs.

FRENCH AIRMEN NOW FLY IN FORMIDABLE SQUADRONS

Budapest, (by mail)—Some details of the mode of operations of the French aviators on the western front are given in a letter from a Hungarian aviator serving with the German armies in France

"The French airmen," he writes, "now fly usually in flocks or squads of considerable strength, both for reconnoitering purposes and for attacking our aviators who are on reconnaissance duty As the French possess a huge number of machines and block our way systematically, we have had to follow their example Some pitched battles btween comparatively large fleets of aeroplanes are thus among the possibilities of the immediate future.

"When the French desire to prevent us from carrying out a reconnaissance, a dozen aeroplanes ascend to a height of 6,000 feet and patrol our line. An equal number rise to 9,000 and fly along our front, taking the opposite direction from the first group. Should one of our machines attempt to pass through the meshes of this net, the two French aviators who happen to be nearest attack it simultaneously, one from above, and the other from below. If that is not sufficient, two or more others fly to their assistance

"The French adopt similar methods when they bombard our aviation centers, railway stations and camps. The French air service is organized into what they call squadrilla, which is thoroughly practiced in maneuvering together like a fleet at sea. In an attack on a German land position, the quadrilla consists of a very powerful machine which leads the way, a few other scouts to see that the right direction is maintained, and then the bomb carrying machines. The squad is handled very skilfully."

Chinese Boy on Foreign Nations.

From the World Outlook.

Japanese customs are nearly the same as our country but they love cleanness and also fond of swimming The German people so love their mustache that every morning they do nothing but comb their mustache The English soldiers play football every day but the well educated are fond of tennis. The Americans are a country of much interest. They are famouse for their baseball and dancing. Turks, Fins and Laplanders all have dirty clothes on and are not so wise as French, etc, that they are hired for waiters and slaves.

The Americans are quite clean like the Japanese and eat clean food so they have little time to catch ill. American take their wives whenever they travel. Most of the Europeans have beards but the Americans shave every day

Women of America bind their waists very tightly so that the short circumference appear There are two very wonderful customs, that is the Chinese women binding their feet and the foreign women binding their waists. Each of these customs is very bad. I hope Chinese and foreign women abandon these customs. Also American men have strange custom to go high under the chin with very hard cloth which is called collars.

Dresses and ornaments are exceedingly nice in America. The English have no means to that but their good eating is much more expensive than the Americans.

STEPS TO SUCCESS.

Paul Ellsworth in October Nautilus.

It is an excellent idea to plan your morning's work as far as possible. It is important for you to be able to get started without delay, for your energy is increasing then rather than diminishng In planning in detail the day's work, it will be advisable for you to use a couple of lists of things to be done; one an "immediate list," whose items must be seen to without delay; the other a "future list" to be taken up later. Look over both lists every evening, check off the things accomplished, and notice those which are becoming pressing

Let me assure you that this habit of taking your business home with you and devoting to it a little attention every night will not give you brain fever or nervous prostration Men do not work themselves to death—Bright's disease and arteriosclerosis and the other organic breakdowns to which the workers of the world are particularly subject result from a combination of emotional causes. They are caused by short circuits in the emotions, from lust and worry and anger, combined usually with wrong eating and muscular stagnation. Scientifically directed work hurts no man, even though it be vigorous and long continued.

HALLIE WAS WORTH A DOZEN SERVANTS

From Scribner's Magazine.

Each time C. Romeo arrived, an immaculate gleam of teeth, shirt bosom, and five-inch expanses of cuffs, she would look him over without a word, her arms akimbo, in perfect silence look him up and then down, from his head, slicked with "Anti-Kink," to his patent leather toes—his boots had pale yellow kid tops with very large black buttons, and you may judge from that how really magnificent was the getup of C. Romeo. Slowly all the bombast wilted out of him under her withering gaze, until he stood before her an abject, knock kneed object grinning like a conciliatory dog. Then she would launch forth:

"Yo' think yo' is terrible gran', yo' Romeo, a-struttin' roun' de streets smokin' cegars"—one always showed above the triangle of pink or lavender handkerchief which hung from the edge of his breast pocket—"while yo' ma wuks her fingers to be done takin' in washin'. Yo' too no 'count eben ter carry home de clo's, end, after she done suppcrt yo', yo' mek her kill herse'f a-doin' up yo' shirt fronts! I ain't gwine hab yo' a-sittin' roun' my kitchen, yo' trashy, no-'count loafer yo'; jes' tak' yo' coat off, end dem collars end cuffs, end go out in de yard end cut de grass; when yo' done finish dat, mebby I gwine speak to yo'."

Romeo would do as he was told, and for the next hour the click of the lawn mower would be the predominant sound, quickened each time it began to grow languid in tone by a remark from the kitchen: "Yo' is de slowest, ez well ez de laziest nigger I eber seen. I 'spec' yo' ain't got no blood inside yo', but is all fill' up wid air lak er balloon, so's yo' can't do nothin' but bounce erlong end strut."

She always put her lovers to work, and sternly refused to allow Mrs. Gray to pay them for the many odd jobs which they performed for her, although it finally reached the point where the grass was kept cut, the flower bed weeded, and the windows washed. The windows were done by a neighboring butler, John Dempsey, and nothing Mrs. Gray or his own mistress said to him could deter him from washing them on his day off.

THE MIND OF WASHINGTON

From the Washington Letter to the New York Sun.

A resident of Washington who is by way of being a writer of good repute on politics and economics once received a request from a magazine editor for an article on "The Mind of Washington." He responded that he could not do the work because "there is no such thing." In the sense that he assumed the editor had in his mind the writer gave a good enough answer; there seems to be no collective mind here, no consensus in even a limited circle resulting from a strong master mind produced by a domination by the minds of a group of highly placed officials.

In this respect, observers say, Washington differs from most European capitals. It was so even when the White House was occupied by a gentleman of very fixed and determined opinions and no reluctance to give them emphatic expression. This may be so because the Washington concerning whose mind the editor was curious is composed of the minds of individuals influenced by groups widely separated by distance, widely divergent in interests.

A community supported by the proceeds of a crop of cotton studies foreign relations from a different angle than that describing the viewpoint of a community of cotton spinners; the wheat farmers are elated over wheat prices which depress the bread winners in large cities; the peoples of seaports look with suspicion on legislation forced by inland folk designed to shackle shipping. Each of these groups and many more as widely separated in interests have their representatives here. They are "minded" as are those from whom they came, whom they represent, in a sense, whatever their offices here may be

Nevertheless, beneath the tangle of surface opinions there is a solid ground wherein may be found the mind of Washington. In the tangle the investigator will trip over as many opinions as there are states regarding the effects of executive acts, of notes, of laws, of anything peculiar to Washington which may affect foreign relations, crop prices, money rates or party prospects. You hear the voice of "Peace at any price" calling in the tangle, demands for embargo, protests against embargo, big army, little army cries, what you will.

But be patient, keep your temper and don't rasp the temper of the man you talk with, whatever section of the country may have set its impress on his opinions, let him declare himself on all the matters less essential, work through the tangle down to the solid ground of the one essential: "How about your people, back home, if war became inevitable?"

Then you do find out that Washington has a mind, a mind reflecting the mind of the country.

The people of these United States know that their president does not want war, will exhaust every resource of diplomacy to keep at peace with all the world up to the point that there is no sacrifice of national honor, dignity or rights. And you learn that that is how the people want the president to stand.

But if one of those sacrifices must be made to preserve peace, the answers are clearly and soberly given: "We are back of the president in his effort to avoid war, if he can not avoid it and preserve our national honor, dignity, rights, we will back him whatever the alternative."

No mistake about it, that is the mind of Washington reflecting the mind of the country.

If, again, the questioner gets away from a single mind, if the question of how the president is to be backed, with what means, is raised, the talk is in the tangle again. There will be inventions, says one, which will prevent an invading force landing anywhere on our soil; we can arm while an enemy is getting its transports, another says, and so on.

But "we'll stand back of the president." That's the mind of Washington, accurately reflecting the mind of the country.

Windmill Signals.

From the Le Cri de Paris.

The English are a practical people who know the consequence of spying. At Lemnos there are a number of mills, five or six in a group. The owners of these mills are not permitted to run them altogether to their liking. The English admiral requires that they shall have his authorization. A proprietor came one day to ask the admiral permission to run four mills for two hours. The officer responded: "No, you may run two mills four hours." The reason for this has been stated that certain millers had an outside acquaintance with the sea where the wings of their mills would carry signals and reveal to the German submarines prowling about the island the movements of the boats of the allies.

Heavy War Losses of Innocent Norway

From the New York World.

How heavily neutrals may suffer in time of war is shown in the figures published covering Norway's losses in ships in the last 13 months. Thirteen Norwegian ships have been destroyed by mines, 34 have been sunk by torpedoes; three have disappeared in the war zone and one was crushed by a German warship. In addition, 76 sailors have perished. Norway is not in any way a party to the war; it has been strictly minding its own business; but its commerce has been preyed on, its ships attacked and sunk by belligerent warships or destroyed by mines planted by warring powers, and only in one or two cases has it received the consolation of a tardy apology.

BRITISH BIRTH RATE DECREASE

London, (by mail)—The returns on the British birth and death rate are characterized as distinctly alarming", by the Lancet.

"The continued fall in the birth rate, which has now reached a figure heretofore recorded, may have explanations, the journal editorially, 'but the fact of the immediate limitation of families, whether provident or selfish motives, can no longer be ignored"

The Lancet says that there never been a time in England when employment has been so easy to obtain, so much money distributed among the poor, through good wages and separation allowances, yet these facts may have contributed to the increased mortality rate since they have given idle mothers more money to spend on drink. Epidemics are another factor in raising the rate, owing to the death of doctors who are now engaged in military hospitals.

As for the deliberate prevention of births, not only the middle and upper classes, but the working classes in recent years, are held to blame. The reports about the great number of babies seem now to have been quite baseless.

THE ISLAND OF IDLENESS

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Bobby, be sure and fix that fence before night," said Mr. Elder.

Bobby went in to his dinner and he started out with nails and hammer to fix the fence. As he passed the woodshed he noticed his fishing pole on the dusty walls, a bit of line and a worm still on the hook.

"Guess there is plenty of time to fix that fence later on in the day," said Bobby, jerking his pole down from the board "I will fish a bit and then fix the fence by sundown."

In 10 minutes he had dug a few worms to fill a small can and started his way to the big creek that ran across the back meadow. There he sat down on a smooth, warm rock that hung over the stream. Making a cushion into a pillow, he lay back on it, with the pole between his knees. Overhead the white clouds seemed to be sailing by with snowy sails pushing across a blue sea. Then shadows would come and dim the light and the sky grow misty.

"My, but it's pretty out here in the spring!" sighed Bobby. "How I wish there were no school or work, but play and have fun!"

Just then Bobby felt a quick jerk on the line and the cork jerked under. He pulled the line, and at the end dangling, not a fish, but a funny thing which looked like a crab. Its head was like that of an old man, wizened and gray

Bobby let the line drop, and the creature flopped down on the bank.

"Gee," exclaimed Bobby, "you are a queer duck!"

"I'll have you understand," replied the strange looking thing, "that I am not any duck at all. I am one of a race that existed many years ago and am one of the few I judge I have been asleep for a hundred thousand years, for none of my friends left in the world from which I came."

Somehow it did not seem odd to Bobby this creature talk. So Bobby replied quickly. "The reason you have opened up is that some men are digging a deep hole here, and that pushed the dirt loose around you."

"Don't know about that," said the funny object, "but I do know that I wish I were back in the water. This makes me creepy I am an Undine and have all kinds of magic power, but the mud at the bottom of the stream is none in the air If you will help me back, I will grant you any wish you make as soon as I strike the water."

"Done," said Bobby, and he threw the Umbak back into the creek. Then out loud. "I wish I were in a place where there was never anything to do but play"

Whisk! Bobby felt himself shot off like an arrow to only a few white clouds floating overhead. Then he was gently dropped. He found himself on a beautiful island, green as an emerald and like a vast flower garden. the lawns were games of all kinds, a ball diamond was marked out, and there were tennis courts, quoit rings and every conceivable thing imaginable, but Bobby noticed that the people of the place sat about in groups under the trees.

"What do you call this place anyway?" he asked of a boy who looked more gloomy than the rest.

"It is called the Island of Idleness," replied the boy, "and no one ever gets here—nothing all day but play and never get anything real done."

I were anywhere but here where there was work—some real, hard work a change."

Bobby grew tired of it, too, of the constant playing of games, the lack of work in which to take an interest wearied him. There was no use in nothing being done. From day to day it was just the same round of sleeping and eating.

"Gee whiz! but I wish I were at home and mending fathers nets," he sighed. Then he felt a splash and a large splash of cold water in his face.

"Well, but I am glad to see you," he exclaimed, as he awoke from his dream," he exclaimed, as he awoke from his dream," he exclaimed, as he awoke from his dream

CHAPTER XX—(CONTINUED)

It was then that Mary proposed that she set out for Mrs. Payson's home at once, with the view of finding Eric. It was still early and he was doubtless there in consultation with Payson, who was not to return to New York until late in the afternoon.

"Go, my dear," said her aunt. "Lose no time. It is most imperative."

As for Eric, we know that he did not go to the Widow Payson's.

With Judge Bright he entered the county court house at 10 o'clock. They had gone to the office of the lawyer in Bank street, only to be told by the clerk that Mr Gates unexpectedly had been called to the sheriff's office a few minutes earlier He did not know the nature of the business, but it was important, as his superior had departed in haste.

As they walked down the corridor they were met by the editor of the Courier, who came up from the other entrance, quite out of breath and visibly excited.

"Hello," he said Being an editor, he was on familiar terms with everyone, great and small A justice of the supreme court possessed no terrors "or him. "Morning, judge Well, well, Eric, let me congratulate you Great piece of news. All in type by this time, too. I—"

"Congratulate?" gasped Eric.

"Type?" ejaculated Judge Bright

"Sure. Your uncle released it by phone 10 minutes ago, and told me to get over here as quickly as I could Corinth will turn over in its grave when it sees the Courier this evening Great guns' Think of a library building bigger than the new paper mill and straw board works combined' Why, it's—"

Eric's bitter laugh stopped him

"I fancy, Cooper, you'll have another bit of news that will surprise you," said Judge Bright.

"Not the wedding announcement'" gasped Cooper, showing how the wind blew.

"That comes later on,' said the judge.

"Well, well, I—I do congratulate you," said the editor, sticking out his hand once more. But Eric's eyes were on the door of the sheriff's office and he did not see the ink-stained fingers.

"In the private office, judge," said the lone deputy in the front office "Waitin' for Eric in there H'are you, Eric? What's up?"

Mr. Cooper was following the pair into the private office when the deputy called out to him

"Private, Joe. Can't go in yet"

"I've been sent for," retorted Cooper, the editor

"Set down. They'll send again, I guess," said the deputy succinctly

There were three men in the private office, all standing Judge Bright closed the door. Mr. Gates, the lawyer, stood beside the table, confronting the sheriff and the state's attorney The latter evidently had been reading aloud the document which he held in his hand. The sheriff, a fat little man with chin whiskers, was looking over the other's shoulder as the newcomers entered. He immediately turned to them, betraying considerable excitement.

"So here you are, Midthorne, he greeted, stepping forward. "Glad to see you. How are you this morning? Morning, judge. Well—" he affected a pleasant grin—"I guess it won't take long to fix it all up. This is the state's attorney, Mr Midthorne Reckon you know Mr Gates. He is to represent you, I believe. Course, I suppose, to be quite regular, I should put you under arrest, Mr. Midthorne But what's the use going over all that? We understand each other, I reckon, so—"

"But I do not understand," cried Eric in astonishment. "How do you happen to know what I am here for? How one knows except—"

"Oh, Mr Blagden's upstairs in the court room now, waiting for us," explained the sheriff "Got the bond all ready to be signed and everything So, don't worry Mr Collins here has got the affidavit drawn—on information and belief, ain't it?—and as long as you're satisfied to give yourself up, it won't be necessary for me to have a warrant. Course, the affidavit will have to be read, and all that, but it won't take long."

"My uncle has been here?" gasped Eric, recovering from his surprise

Mr. Gates came forward. "He has attended to everything, Mr Midthorne. You may leave it all in my hands. I think we will have no difficulty in securing a speedy trial. You—but we will discuss the matter later in my office." He waved his hand in the direction of the state's attorney, smiling blandly. "You see, we can't afford to play into the hands of the enemy."

Completely dazed, Eric followed the men out of the office and up the broad steps to the court room. Mr. Cooper took it upon himself to walk beside the young man.

"What's up?" he whispered eagerly. "What's going on? Put a fellow next, Eric. The—old geezer upstairs isn't thinking of a divorce, is he?"

"Good heaven, no!" exclaimed Eric. He liked Joe Cooper "Wait a few minutes. I can't tell you now."

The court room was quite empty, except for the presence of a long figure seated inside the railing, quite close to the bench, and two bailiffs who conversed lazily at one of the windows overlooking Main street.

Despite its deserted appearance, court was in session. The judge leaned forward to converse in subdued tones with the man below. He looked up as the group came through the swinging doors, and settled back in his chair to compose himself for that typical exposition of judicial indifference that never fails to create in the mind of the layman doubt as to whether the court is asleep or awake, or merely thinking of something entirely foreign to the cause before him. And just when you think he is sleeping the soundest, he starts up and says something so pertinent that you know he has been listening all the time. Only it does make one drowsy to watch the half recumbent court on a warm day late in the April term. You wonder if he, too, isn't thinking of meadow larks.

Eric, a trifle dazed and bewildered, stopped just inside the rail, while the others went forward—that is to say, with the single exception of the sheriff, who, after several leisurely strides, thought himself of his prisoner and halted in some conflict between his duty as a custodian and a certain inborn tendency to avoid anything that might give offense to Mr. Horace Blagden. He managed to console himself with the thought that, figuratively, he had haled his prisoner into court Still, he halted and motioned for Eric to draw nearer and sit down

The prisoner—for he was a prisoner in the strict sense of the word—did not sit down, but stood there staring at the tall, thin figure of his uncle, who had risen and was facing him. The domineering look had come back into the face of Horace Blagden. It was the look of the man who takes things in his own hands and has his own way, no matter what the issue. He had quite overlooked the fact that this was Eric's affair, to be handled as he saw fit, and had taken the initiative without consulting his nephew's wishes—a very characteristic Blagden trait that had not been completely overcome, it would appear.

Suddenly a smile crept into his face, an appealing, wistful smile that was more of an apology than all the words he could have uttered. A moment before he would have commanded Eric to approach, now he hesitatingly motioned with his hand.

Together they stood before the court while Mr Collins read the affidavit. The two bailiffs, aroused from their lethargy, drew near, and the deputy clerk emerged from the inner room in response to a summons from the bench. Mr Blagden had shaken hands with his nephew. d stroked his shoulder kindly

The pu d editor, taking note of this, blinked his eyes dizzily. It was most extraordinary'! A minute later he was drinking in the most stupendous news story that ever had come to him in all his years of experience the solution of the great Blagden mystery.

"Say 'not guilty,'" whispered Mr Blagden in Eric's ear.

"Not guilty," said Eric, taking his eyes from the prosecutor's face to stare blankly at his uncle

He heard the court speaking. He was being bound over in the sum of $10,000 to the next term, unless the case could be moved forward by mutual consent and in the convenience of the court.

"Mr Oakes and Mr Elston will sign the bond, Mr Sheriff," said Horace "I daresay they are waiting in your office now Shall we go down?"

"But I don't know either of these gentlemen," protested Eric. "Besides, I mean to have John Payson attend to the bond for—"

"Nonsense," said Mr Blagden, "it is all attended to. There can't be any hitch I've telephoned to Mr. Oakes and Mr Elston, asking them to come here at once I shall tell them what it is all about when I see them They will be very happy to go on the bond, I am sure Some sort of ridiculous law prohibits my signing the bond, my boy, or at least, so your attorney informs me."

In the corridor, Eric came out of the daze that had held him in a sort of stupor during all of the proceedings. He drew his uncle aside.

"Uncle Horace," he said simply, "I don't know what to say to you I don't know how to express myself Will you give me time to think it all out and let me tell you later how much I—"

"Eric," interrupted the older man, "I am doing all this to please your aunt and myself We are very selfish people We are covetous. We have discovered there is something that we have always wanted and never really had. We want to be loved"

CHAPTER XXI

THE MORNING IN HANDY STREET

In the meantime, Mary Midthorne had found Jack Payson She descended from exclusive Upper Corinth into the prim but humble district known as the Fourth ward, where lived the plain people, here no man was downright poor, yet none was rich, save in honor and contentment. You had but to look at the long rows of cottages to know that peace reigned external if not eternal. There were no outward signs of envy or jealousy, yet how well the woman was despised whose husband prospered so steadily that he was looking at property 'way up town with a view to building a house that was "fit to live in" Even the erection of a summer kitchen or the expansion of the front stoop into a veranda was proof of an affluency that came in for general resentment and all sorts of talk about "pride going before a fall."

But the people of Corinth never fell in just that way Their thrift was their pride. If they fell it was not because pride had anything to do with it, but because it was the height of extravagance to carry fire insurance. You might burn them out, but in no other way could you humble them—especially those who lived in the Fourth ward.

The Widow Payson lived in one of the clean little streets that lay within easy walking distance of every other place in Corinth. If you had a springy, projecting stride, you could easily make the docks in five minutes, or you could circle the court house square and do a block or two extra in six or seven. Besides, it wasn't far to Upper Corinth, and was farther removed from the detested Todville. There was really something in that. By an odd perfection of street nomenclature, it was called Handy street. In commemoration of a citizen who went to war as a private and came out a corporal. A great favorite with Washington, the story goes, and intensely disliked by King George the Third.

At any rate, Mrs. Payson lived in Handy street. Hers was a neat little cottage, with vines growing all over it, and a garden at the back with a white washed fence around it, just as you might have expected. There was a great knocker on the vine surrounded door inside the porch, and a name plate, and a peep hole, with a sliding shutter. As quaint a place as you would see in a day's journey through old New England.

Mary, flushed and suddenly shy, rattled the knocker after a rather timid fashion. The door was opened at once, to her great surprise. She had been watching the closed shutter in the ancient peep hole as if fascinated, confidently expecting to see it slide back to reveal a gruesome, questioning eye.

John Payson himself opened the door A certain, haggard, tired expression left his face as if by magic. If she had been less absorbed in her own feelings, she would have noticed something more than surprise in the eyes of her lover.

"Why, Mary!" he exclaimed, throwing the door wide open. "What has happened? Has anything gone wrong with Eric?"

"Hasn't he been here? You have not seen him?" she inquired anxiously.

He had not asked her to enter, but stood before her, blocking the doorway.

"I have not seen him," he said, a queer nervousness in his manner "What has happened? Tell me. Can I be of any service to him?"

"May I not come in, Jack?" she asked suddenly struck by the odd look in his eyes A swift premonition of disaster came over her ... so palpably ill at ease and confused; he was keping something back from her. "Why do you look at me so queerly? Oh, Jack, he—he—hasn't tried to—" She was terrified. The ugly suspicion could not be put into words.

He made haste to reassure her. "I have not seen him. My mother says he was here last night, when I was away." He hesitated for a moment and then went on, his face ghastly white. "I would ask you to come in, Mary, but something terrible has happened here. You would better go on to Eric and leave me to look after—"

"Not your mother, Jack?" she cried, staring.

His eyes fell. For a moment his lips worked painfully, then became rigid. When he looked up again the utmost desolation lay in his eyes.

"No, Mary. My father," he said levelly.

She peered intently into his eyes. Her brain was absolutely clear

"You—you mean—" Every vestige of color had fled from her face.

He did not permit his gaze to waver, nor his face to change expression. His voice fell to a dull monotone.

"My father did not go down with the Lanigan. He lies there on my bed, stricken, helpless, perhaps dying. That is all, Mary. Why ask me to say more?"

She leaned against the trellis, trembling in every limb.

"It is true, then" she whispered dully.

"He is in there," said he, with dogged acquiescence.

"Adam Car?"

"My father."

They stood there for a long time looking into each other's eyes, the misery deepening in their faces. He turned away at last.

"You'd better go away now, Mary," he said gently. "When you see Eric tell him that he won't have to look me up It is all over He was right. I am not worthy. But good heaven, Mary I did not know—I did not know! I thought I was as good as any man living, and had the right to love as other men love. But, go, for God's sake, go! I cannot bear to have you hear—"

She advanced, her trembling hands pressed to her breast, her eyes dark with pain and understanding.

"Let me come in," she murmured faintly. "There is something that I must say to you. I came here to ask you to help Eric, to be his friend. He is in great trouble. Let me—"

He stood aside, making way for her to pass. The despair in his face gave way to a look of genuine concern and anxiety.

"In trouble? What can I do for him? Let me set about it at once. Perhaps I can serve him before he learns the full truth concerning me. After he knows, it will be too late. He would not accept my friendship. Ask me to die for you—or for Eric, if that will help you—and I will do it gladly. Yes, joyfully."

She walked into the parlor. Through her whirling brain ran the lines of that rare old bit of rhyme: "Will you walk into my parlor, said the spider to the fly." Somehow, she felt that entanglement awaited her in the dim, shadowy room—something she would never be able to escape from. She had never been inside the Widow Payson's home before. Always, in her mind's eye, she had pictured it as plain, poor and stiffly puritanical. Perhaps it had been all this another day, but now there were signs of coziness, even luxury in a small way. Her son had not prospered without the thought of her back of all his gains. There were handsome rugs on the floor; quaint old pieces of furniture, attractive pictures, cheerful wall paper, rich window hangings and portieres. A tall walnut bookcase stood over against the wall, filled with volumes. The girl was dimly conscious of a feeling of relief. If the room had looked like other parlors she had seen in Corinth, the sense of desolation would have been complete; she would have lost heart.

He closed the door gently, even carefully. She turned to look at him. He was peering fixedly at the drawn curtains of the door that opened into the room beyond: the attitude of one listening. The odor of a familiar and potent drug was faintly distinguishable. The girl experienced a queer feeling of dizziness, of nausea.

"Where is your mother?" she asked abruptly.

He drew up a chair for her, but she remained standing.

"In there—with him," he replied, passing his hand over his brow. "The doctor is there, too. But tell me, Mary, what is up with Eric? What is it you want me to do?"

He made no effort to embrace her, not even the attempt to take her hand in his. The omission was significant.

She was staring at him, a swiftly passing expression of doubt and woe in her eyes. "Hasn't Mr. Ad—your—I mean, hasn't Mr. Carr told you anything?" she asked. She fell into his way of speaking in hushed tones. He shook his head, and waited for her to go on. Her gaze involuntarily went to the curtained door. "He can keep a secret," she murmured.

"I am afraid he is beyond the telling of secrets," was his grim conclusion.

Dr. Hillis' Case.

From the Marshalltown (Ia.) Times-Republican.

Dr. Hillis, noted divine and former Iowan whose friends and admirers are legion in the middle west, came before his congregation of Plymouth church Sunday and told them that he was unworthy to unloose the latchets of the shoes of a Christian slum worker. In abject humiliation and self reproach he made confession that he had forgotten the greatness of his high office in a greedy scramble for wealth and put his future with the church in the hands of its membership.

Hillis, it appears had been speculating, seeking a fortune. Little by little he had involved himself and when the obligations accumulated and his inability to meet them became more evident a suit was brought against him. He settled it somehow but failed to face the questions that arose through exposure. In an effort to save his face he explained that he was paying obligations created by his nephew. Then the nephew sued him for libel and the truth came out. That is about the way the story reads. The result was a broken man bowed in confession before those who had trusted and followed him.

Let us not be over eager of condemnation in this case. The speculative ventures that wrecked the career of the minister was a very human mistake and ministers are as human as other men in their desires however much more they may repress them. Hillis came from a little Iowa town and from a quiet career into an environment of vast wealth and speculative activity. He learned to think in millions. Had he remained in Magnolia, Ia., he would have continued to think in hundreds and thousands. His desires might have been limited to a good house in a nice neighborhood, a $1,000 car and an income that would permit him to live safely and happily there in his old age. His view point changed from a modern home in a small town to the mansion on the avenue, from four-cylinder stock cars to Packard limousines, from one hired girl to a corps of servants. Atmosphere and environment and elevation affect men as they affect vegetation. It shows merely that Hillis was very human. Even his attempt to save himself at the expense of another was a human weakness, not to be condoned or overlooked but to be given consideration simply as a common weakness

Experiments by a British expert of reforesting some of the hills of China have led to the establishment of a comprehensive course in forestry in a university there.

MUCH OF AN ABBREVIATION

Youngster's Name Considerably Shortened From the One That Was Originally Given Him.

A northern man who was visiting in Baltimore stopped on the street one day to have his shoes polished. A bright-eyed little black boy stepped forward to give the desired shine. Becoming interested in the little chap, the Northerner asked his name, to which the boy promptly replied:

"Gen, sah!"

After a few moments of silence, the Northerner continued: "I suppose that is an abbreviation for General?"

The word "abbreviation" gave the little fellow pause; however, he was equal to the occasion, and recovered himself. "No, sah," he said, "'tain't 'xactly dat; ma shore-'nough name am 'Genesis 30:33, So shall my righteousness answer for me in time to come' Washington Carter, but dey jest calls me Gen for short."—Youth's Companion.

Improving on Shakespeare.

A member of the business staff of Robert Mantell, the actor, tells of a conversation he overheard "in front" on the occasion of Mr. Mantell's production of "Hamlet" in a Western town.

"Oh, Harry," said the young woman, "I think it's an awful shame to drown Ophelia and kill Hamlet. They ought to have been married."

Whereupon Harry heaved a sigh and looked earnestly at his companion.

"I ain't great on tragedy," said he, "but that's how I should fix it."

Going It Too Hard

We are inclined nowadays to "go it too hard;" to overwork, worry, eat and drink too much, and to neglect our rest and sleep. This fills the blood with uric acid. The kidneys weaken and then it's a siege of backache, dizzy, nervous spells, rheumatic pains and distressing urinary disorders. Don't wait for worse troubles. Strengthen the kidneys. Use Doan's Kidney Pills.

A Nebraska Case

J. P. Adams, Minden, Neb., says: "For years I had sharp, shooting pains through the small of my back, along with lameness and soreness. Sharp stitches often darted through me and I had blinding headaches and dizzy spells. The kidney secretions pained awfully in passage. Doan's Kidney Pills fixed me up all right and when I have used them since, they have done good work."

The windshield on the car was broken, but otherwise the machine was not damaged.—Britt News.

BUFFALO CENTER TO ILLUMINATE CONTRACTS FOR ELECTROLIERS
The contract for electroliers was let Tuesday to the McGraw Co. of Sioux City, they to furnish the material and do all construction work according to plans and specifications for the sum of $1231.47. The system calls for 24 posts, so each post installed will cost a little more than $51. There will be 16 posts on Main street, 4 in the block west of the bank corner and 4 in the block east, which will make the down town district well and beautifully lighted. The contract calls for the job to be completed on or before November 25th.—Buffalo Center Tribune.

Best of Political Parties.
The political parties that I would call great, are those which cling more to principles than to consequences; to general, and not to special cases; to ideas, and not to men.—such parties are usually distinguished by a nobler character, more generous passions, more genuine convictions, and a more bold and open conduct than others.—De Tocqueville.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't stay gray! Here's a simple recipe that anybody can apply with a hair brush.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair has disappeared, and after another application or two, your hair becomes wonderfully dark, glossy and abundant, and has that appearance of youthful beauty which is unmistakable.

COW TESTING ASSOCIATION HOLD ENJOYABLE MEETING

It is the plan of the Klemme Cow Testing Association to hold regular monthly meetings during the winter months. The first meeting was held at the home of C. A. Arnold and wife. The members came and brought their families, and a highly beneficial and enjoyable time was spent together.

Mr. E. S. Estel, of Waterloo, State Dairy Expert, was present and took part on the program. He spoke of the opportunities in dairying and emphasized the value of the cow testing association work, for communities such as the one around Klemme.

"The Cow Testing Association is one of the most effective means of putting dairying on a business basis", says Mr. Estel. Continuing he said, "There is no co-operative organization that will be of more lasting benefit than a well regulated cow testing association."

Howard C. Barker of Ames who is in charge of the cow testing associations in Iowa was also on the program and gave a short talk. He spoke of the progress in other associations in the state and emphasized the importance of testing the cows for more than one year, in order to get a reliable record on which to build up a herd of profitable cows.

The feeding of the dairy cow for maximum production at a minimum cost was also discussed. "Cotton seed meal and oil meal can be used in the winter ration to a distinct advantage," says Mr. Barker. "For in order for a cow to do her very best she must have the feed to produce milk." "All cows should be fed according to the amount of milk they are giving, for many times the profitable cows are receiving entirely too much feed."

After the program, lacto and cake were served and for an hour everyone had a chance to get acquainted and visit with everyone else, and then went home with a spirit for boosting the cow testing association and making this year the most profitable year yet, so far as the cows are concerned.

Secretary of the Interior Lane has announced that the production of radium from Colorado carnotite ores by the federal bureau of mines in connection with the national radium institute has been placed on a successful manufacturing basis and that the price of the metal, in the form of bromide, has been materially reduced as a result of the increased production.

The hardships of war are hardly realized by those who merely do the fighting. Take for instance the case of the Duchess of Roxburghe, whose husband has been wounded, and walks with a crutch. "The duchess has to wear the simplest hats when she walks with him for fear of attracting attention—hard lines when she is so fond of ultra smart ones."

The Scotch kilt dates back to prehistoric times, it is thought. Originally it was merely a plaid blanket, worn about the shoulders with one end gathered about the loins in cold weather. The mountaineers of the Balkans wear the kilt, and students say that the soldiers of the Assyrian kings wore a costume very closely akin to the kilt of Scotland.

It is an ancient superstitious belief that disaster and war are presaged by the appearance of an unusual number of comets. The superstition gains some support by the findings of German astronomers to the effect that these celestial wanderers have been unusually frequent since some time before the present war.

An absent-minded piano tuner registered at a Chicago hotel, forgot the names of both hotel and street, and had to put an ad in the paper, asking where a man by his name had registered. This is better than the bearded quib on the artist who put his umbrella to bed and stood all night in the corner.

The largest piece of gold in the world was taken from the Byer & Haltman's gold mining claim, Hill End, New South Wales, on May 10, 1872. Its weight was 540 pounds, hight four feet nine inches, width three feet two inches, average thickness four inches, and it was worth $148,000.

$1,000 IN GOLD WAS BURIED IN BASEMENT OF SUICIDE'S HOME

Note Found in Dead Man's Pocket Gave Clue That Led to Careful Search.

Mount Pleasant, Ia., Oct. 23.—Jacob Conrad, a farmer of this county, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head with a shotgun. When the county coroner, Ralph Crane, of this city, was making an investigation of the tragedy, which included a search of the effects of the dead man, he found in the coat pocket a note telling the finder to examine carefully the basement of the house.

With the assistance of the brother of the dead man a thorough search of the cellar was made and under some rubbish another note was found with instructions to examine carefully the bricks in the back of the chimney. The bricks were sounded and in a short time a hollow place was found.

Removing the bricks the investigators found a large sum of gold, amounting to nearly $1,000. Another note was found that bore the numbers of the combination of the safe. In the same was another note, a duplicate of the first, telling about the gold in the chimney.

The money was brought to town and placed in a local bank, and will be turned over to the administrators of the estate. Mr. Conrad was a well to do farmer

SAYS ACCIDENT CAUSED BY WOMEN'S LARGE HATS

Waterloo, Ia., Oct. 23.—Mrs. Anna I. Hillman, who drives an electric automobile, is alleged to have been negligent when she drove down Fourth street, the busiest thoroughfare, with two women facing her. It is claimed that the women's hats were so large that they obstructed the driver's view and that she ran into and over Charles Fay, a real estate man, who has filed suit for $5,000 damages for personal injuries.

Fay also alleges negligence on the part of Mrs. Hillman in that, after she had stopped, she backed up and ran over him again. His injuries were about the legs and hips, it is said. At the time, the plainiff states, he was in the act of getting into his car.

NOMINATIONS REPORTED BY REBEKAH ASSEMBLY

Waterloo, Ia., Oct. 23.—Nominations for offices in the Rebekah lodge were made by the state assembly yesterday. The election will take place in the various lodges of the state next June. The list of nominees is as follows:

President—Mrs. Effie Graham, Des Moines.

Vice President—Mrs. Leah T. Washburn, Mason City

Warden—Miss Georgia Quigley, McGregor, Mrs. Prudence Warner, Moulton, Mrs. Alice Blair, Iowa City.

Secretary—Miss Elizabeth Matheney, Keokuk; Mrs Nellie Waddington, Geneva.

Treasurer—Mrs. Margaret Scheeter, Marshalltown, Mrs. Lydia Williams, Perry, Mrs. Nora Keeling, Sioux City, Mrs. Mamie Whitlock, Corning; Mrs. Emma Miller, Cherokee; Mrs. Mary Gray, Spirit Lake, Miss May Pier, Dubuque.

IOWA CAN INTERVENE IN CHICAGO LIQUOR HEARING

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 23.—An order has been issued permitting the state of Iowa to intervene in the case instituted here, in federal court, to compell railroads to accept and forward liquor consignments to private purchasers In the preliminary test, on a mandamus proceeding, the brewery claims were upheld. It is not certain that Iowa will contest the situation, as the officials there have come to the general conclusion that the Iowa law is in minor conflict with the federal regulations. This applies only to the right of a drayman, expressman, or other carrier, to act as agent in receiving liquor shipments The Iowa law attempted to make the consignee receipt in person but there is a disposition now to concede that point, as it does not affect the general validity of the Iowa regulations.

INCREASED FUNDS FOR THREE STATE COLLEGES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 23.—The three state educational institutions will have $2,829,425 for operating expenses and new buildings for the year 1915-1916, an increase of $447,671 over the previous year, according to a report issued yesterday by the state board of education.

Although the institutions will have nearly $500,000 additional revenue for the year 1915-1916, the amount provides only for the expansion of the colleges. The board found it necessary to quash a boom among the teaching force for higher wages in order to make the revenue meet the needs

The legislature allowed increased appropriations for support of the educational institutions, but it cut down the grants for new buildings. The state college support fund was increased from $805,400 to $1,030,000, state university from $594,700 to $766,500; teachers college from $225,150 to $293,300 The total support for the three institutions in 1914-1915 was $1,625,250. It has been increased to $2,089,800 for 1915-1916

MOORLAND YOUTH STAGES REGULAR MOVIE ACCIDENT

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 22—All the requisities for a good movie except the camera man to turn the film were discovered by pedestrians on the Bennett viaduct, which spans the big Des Moines river valley here An auto raced across the bridge, swerved suddenly to one side, tore a hole through the railing, the front of it slumped downward as the wheels left the bridge just above the Minneapolis & St Louis tracks and the man at the wheel was in danger of sudden death. But the descent of the car was checked. The hero of the story climbed cooly out over the radiator, as if to go ahead and crank the machine. About that time men who were watching shouted warnings while women turned away in fear. The young man was hauled back from his perilous position, and after some trouble, the car was pulled back to the viaduct with block and tackle. Will Hopkins, of Moorland, was the young man who drove the car.

DENISON—James Collins, of Sioux City and Miss Agnes Breen, of this city, were married at the St. Rose of Lima Catholic church Wednesday morning, October 20. The groom is employed with the Omaha & St. Paul road and is the son of the county auditor of Crawford county. The bride was educated at the Catholic convent at Hawarden and the Denison Normal.

MONDAMIN—Fred H. Kelley, publisher of the Mondamin Enterprise, and Miss Daisy Wall were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents here Elder Everett Gamet officiating.

MANY IOWA COLLEGES PARTIES TO CONTEST AGAINST COFFIN WILL Only Daughter, Who Is Contestant, Alleges Father Was of Unsound Mind.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Oct. 23.—Assigned for the November term of court here is the L. S. Coffin case, involving an estate valued from $70,000 to $100,000. L. S. Coffin, nationally known as a temperance worker, died about a year ago. In his will he bequeathed the bulk of his property to different colleges in this state and the remainder, if any, to his only surviving daughter, Mrs. Carrie Rutledge, of this city. Mrs. Rutledge filed action to break the will on the claim that her father was suffering from senile dementia when the will was drafted.

Among the educational institutions named in the will are: Buena Vista college, Storm Lake, Simpson college, Des Moines; Tobin college, Fort Dodge; Lennox college, Hopkinson, Minn., Ellsworth college, Iowa Falls; Palmer college, La Grande, Minn. The amounts varied from $10,000 to $1,000. To Senator William S. Kenyon, of whom Coffin was a great admirer, he left $2,000.

The colleges named hold notes for the amount of their promised bequests, given at different occasions. All will be represented at the trial. The case will no doubt be long drawn out, as the deceased alone will produce at least 75 witnesses while the plaintiff will have the testimony of expert alienists to offer.

REV. WALLACE M. HAMILTON ELECTED AS MODERATOR

Cedar Falls, Ia., Oct. 23.—Rev. Wallace M Hamilton, of Sioux City, has been elected moderator of the Presbyterian synod of Iowa. The election of Rev. Mr. Hamilton, of Sioux City, was a surprise to most of the synod, as the rotation method has been in vogue.

Tuesday morning was given over to foreign missions, Dr. Hamilton, chairman of the synod committee, making the report.

Addresses were made by Rev. Howard Johnson, of Ames, and Rev. Stanley White, D. D., secretary of the foreign board of New York city. Dr. White also addressed the synod Wednesday night. Last year was the best, financially, the board has ever had, he said. He highly commended Ambassador Mergenthaus' work in Turkey.

Dr. Charles Scanlon spoke for the temperance committee, declaring that drunkenness had increased threefold in Italy since 1887, that Germany maintained 42 inebriate asylums and has over 300,000 registered drunkards, that France has a drinking place for every 30 people. A tippler cuts off 13 years of his life, a regular drinker 29 years, he said.

REFORM SCHOOL PROPOSED FOR JUVENILE JOYRIDER

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 23 —An irresistible impulse to take charge of other people's horses and buggies and go "joy riding" is finally going to land 8-year-old Johnnie Stoehr, of this city, in the reform school, according to local officers.

Johnnie has been doing this thing for at least three years. At the tender age of 5 he took his first rig, drove it around until he tired of the sport, and then left it where it pleased him. Reprimands and undinary spankings did not appease him appetite for "joy riding," and when he took a horse and buggy belonging to Frank Youngrain, a farmer, Johnnie landed in the sheriff's office. It has been determined that there is no hope for the lad outside of the severe disciplining of a reform school.

COSTS MONEY TO OPERATE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 23 The cost of operating the Thirty-sixth general assembly was approximately $247,900 67, according to a statement prepared for the legislative reference bureau by W. H. Williams, revenue clerk in the auditor of state's office

This was slightly less than the cost of the Thirty-fifth general assembly However, several of the amounts included in the report of the last general assembly expense were estimated, and actual figures, when obtainable, may bring the total up

The Thirty-fifth general assembly expense was $253,023 94

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH IS SELLING ANTI-TOXINS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 23. -The Iowa state board of health is doing quite a business in handling anti-toxins and vaccines. The plan of buying these disease repellants in wholesale quantities and selling them to the physicians through local drug stores, known as distributing stations, is saving the people from 60 to 75 per cent on the cost of these supplies, according to the statement of Dr. Sumner state board of health secretary

The board is now handling typhoid vaccine, diphtheria and tetanus antitoxin. A few years ago the legislature made an annual appropriation of $2,000 to carry on this work, in order that the people might have access to these supplies at a low cost

Now the board is sending out considerable diphtheria anti-toxin Not that diphtheria is especially prevalent, but it is always in evidence, soon after the schools open in the fall, Dr Sumner states.

TO BAR BOOK AGENTS AT STATE TEACHERS' MEETING

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 23 Iowa school teachers who will hold their annual convention in Des Moines beginning November 4, will not be troubled by persistent book agents, if an edict of the executive committee of the Iowa State Teachers' association is carried out. It is proposed to bar the book men from the floor of the convention and from the hotel lobbies where the delegates may be staying

Formerly the agents were about the most conspicuous persons about the convention hall and the hotels. They had banners, tables full of books and pamphlets and other miscellaneous school room supplies all over the place At last year's convention two of the most enterprising agents had phonographs singing favorite school songs to add to the general confusion

MUSCATINE—Mrs. William Kautz a bride of three weeks, was drowned in the Mississippi river Wednesday when the skiff in which she and her husband were rowing upset, in midstream. The husband sought to rescue his wife, but failed He was in a state of collapse when rescued The body has not been recovered

IOWA CITY—N. E. Hessenius, superintendent of the Lone Tree schools, was chosen county superintendent of Johnson county at a special session of school board delegates this morning. He fills the position left vacant by the sudden death of Superintendent George H Mullin.

COSSON DECLINES TO ADOPT ALLEN'S PLAN FOR DRY CONFERENCE

Makes Counter Suggestion That Many Other Issues Should Receive Hearing.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 22.—Attorney General Cosson declined today to adopt Senator Joe Allen's plan of "the survival of the fittest," through submitting their respective claims to strength in the temperance cause to a conference of "drys" to determine which should withdraw from the race of the gubernatorial nomination. To do so, he declares in a formal statement, would be to assume that he and Senator Allen have a corner on the governor's chair and that no other candidate has a right to seek it. He contends, also, that such an elimination contest would assume to say to the rest of the republications of the state that the temperance question alone shall be the controlling issue.

As a counter proposition Attorney General Cosson suggests that the situation be canvassed not only by the temperance forces but by the good roads workers, the labor leaders, advocates of the school question and those interested in working county and city jail prisoners. He asks that after such a canvass they decide which man is the stronger and lend their full support to him. This would eliminate neither as a candidate but would settle settle in a measure the question of support.

Attorney General Cosson indicates in his statement he would like to see the liquor issue minimized or eliminated He suggests that all candidates announce that the action of the last assembly in repealing the mulct law and passing the prohibitory amendment shall not be undone.

EARTH BULGING NOT DUE TO GAS OR OIL PRESSURE

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 22. -There was much excitement in southern Iowa last summer over the bulging up of the earth beneath the tracks of the Burlington railroad. Many and varying causes have been assigned in newspaper articles. One explanation was that the bulging was due to pressure of an oil and gas field in the ground below. Prof. George F Kay, of the University of Iowa, state geologist, tramped over 200 miles of the Burlington right of way during the latter part of the summer investigating the phenomenon. Today he issued a statement explaining that the cause of the bulging is simply the pressure of the higher ground on each side of the track.

"As a matter of fact there is nothing remarkable about such phenomena under conditions such as prevailed in the southern part of Iowa during the past summer," Dr. Kay says in the statement. "The material upon which the track is laid is clay which, during seasons of average rainfall, is fairly resistant to pressure, but, during an abnormally wet season such as the season just past, becomes very plastic and responds readily to pressure The rising ground is confined to where the tracks are laid in railroad cuts, some of which are more than 60 feet deep The material in the slopes of the cuts is chiefly clay, some parts of which are gumbo-like. During the season just past these clays have become extremely wet and soggy, and hence very heavy. The vertical pressure on either side of the track at the base of the cut is very great, and accompanying this is a lateral thrust which causes the clay beneath the tracks to rise."

RETURNED TOURIST TELLS OF COSSACK ATROCITIES

Fort Dodge Ia Oct 22 --Returning home from Baragsas, Hungaria, Mrs. Andrew Sepavitch, who has been in that war torn country since hostilities began, has many frightful tales to tell of the brutality of the Russian Cossacks, who she claims devastated the part of Hungaria in which she was visiting

She says the Cossacks attacked and burned villages, all save the maidens between the ages of 14 and 25 These she declared were brought to the camps

There is plenty of food, she declares as the old men and women are able to carry on farming Only old men are left and the only time a young man is seen is when he comes home wounded or on furlough"

AD CLUBS' ASSOCIATION TO TO MEET IN DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct 22. The state association of ad clubs will hold its annual convention in Des Moines November 8 and 9. This announcement was made at the weekly luncheon of the Des Moines Admen's club at the Chamberlain hotel yesterday noon

Three cities in the state were bidding for the convention It had been virtually granted to Boone, when that city backed out because of conditions which made it impossible for the local organization to entertain the visitors this year Cedar Rapids—the other bidder—withdrew in favor of Des Moines when announcement was made of the tentative program that Des Moines had planned for the convention

ANOTHER CONVICT BOLTS FORT MADISON PRISON

Fort Madison, Ia. Oct 22.—A heavy fog over construction work on the new prison chair factory just outside the prison walls yesterday morning permitted the escape of convict Roy Brafford who was doing 20 years for robbery in Polk county

Guards are searching the surrounding country As yet they have found no trace of him.

DUBUQUE COMPANY GETS LARGE CABINET CONTRACT

Dubuque Ia Oct 22 -Announcement was made yesterday by Harry T. Leming, assistant general manager of the Thomas A. Edison company in this city, that the $1,000,000 contract for phonograph cabinets will be placed shortly with the Brunswick-Balke-Collender plant, manufacturers of billiard tables, bank and bar fixtures and other wood work, located at Dubuque. It means a big increase in the force of men employed

IOWA CITY SALOONS MAY HAVE TO CLOSE DECEMBER 22

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 20.—The "drys" and the "wets" are now engaged in a controversy as to whether Iowa City saloons will close on December 22 or January 1 John B. Hammond, representing the Business Men's Temperance Association of Iowa, asserts that December 22, being the date of the expiration of the saloon consent, the grogshops will have to close on that day. Local liquor dealers protest against this on the ground that the last act of the legislature replaces the provision for closing on December 22

COURT EDICT RETURNS WOMAN ESTATE TAKEN WHEN SHE WAS CHILD

After Years Spent in Poverty She Acquires Title to Farm in Grundy County.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Oct. 21.—Mrs. Conie Arends, of this city, the widow of Henry Arends, the policeman who was killed by an electric shock a year ago in April, received word of the filing of a decree in the district court of Grundy county, Ia., which establishes her title as the owner of a 200-acre farm in that county.

Mrs. Arends' father died when Mrs. Arends was but a year and a half old, leaving as his sole survivors a widow and Mrs. Arends, the only child. The widow had her own father appointed as administrator of the estate of the deceased husband and conspired it was alleged, with the administrator to permit the farm of 280 acres left by her deceased husband to be sold in the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien for about $400, when in reality the farm was then worth $7,000 or $8,000. Just before the year for redemption from this sheriff's sale expired, the widow arranged with an uncle to make an assignment of the certificate of sale and hold it for her benefit. When the year for redemption had expired the sheriff's deed was taken by the uncle and he immediately transferred the entire farm to the widow.

The widow remarried, within a few years and continued to live upon the farm. From the proceeds of this farm and the investments made from the income therefrom, the widow and her second husband have lived in ease and luxury, while Mrs. Arends, the rightful owner of the greater share of the farm, has lived in poverty, being obliged to work at hard labor and keep boarders in order to provide for the support of herself and family of small children.

When Mrs. Arends became of age her mother is alleged to have deceived her as to the property left by the father, and relying on her mother's statements no investigation was made. About a year ago, Mrs. Arends heard the rumor that her mother's second husband had testified in another litigation in which he was interested that the means with which he had made certain investments had been derived from the income from his wife's farm. This was the first intimation that Mrs. Arends had that her mother had a farm. She thereupon employed legal counsel to make an investigation. This investigation resulted in the discovery of the means used by the widow to acquire the farm, and the attorneys promptly filed a suit in equity to quiet the title of two-thirds thereof in Mrs. Arends and for an accounting of the rents and profits.

ALL BRIDGE CONTRACTS TO SHUT DOWN NOVEMBER 1

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 21 —The Iowa highway commission has warned bridge contractors that it will order a complete shut down in bridge and culvert building by November 1. This will leave many structoures in an unfinished condition

It explains that this is necessary in order that no more concrete work be done in freezing weather. The experience last year demonstrated that many contractors did not properly protect newly laid concrete during the cold nights of November, and as the result several hundred thousand dollars' worth of concrete was ruined, the engineers say.

KENYON NOT EXCITED ABOUT PROSPECT OF WAR

Dubuque, Ia., Oct. 21.—Senator W. B. Kenyon, of Fort Dodge, was in this city yesterday enroute to Waukon, where he will deliver an address on Wednesday Speaking of his speech at Davenport on the occasion of the preparedness conference, he declared in favor of enlarged activities at the Rock Island arsenal, though he insisted preparedness, while altogether desirable, was a matter to be gone into carefully.

"We should be ready to defend ourselves," he said, "but should guard against overdoing the matter. No foe is likely to develop at the present time and there is no warrant just now for a large display of force"

VICTOR BENDER DEAD; FORMER IOWA EDITOR

Council Bluffs, Ia., Oct. 21.—Press dispatches yesterday announced the death in a hospital at Galesburg, Ill., of Victor E. Bender, former editor and publisher of the Nonpareil in this city. He died from Bright's disease and hardening of the arteries.

Mr. Bender left Council Bluffs several years ago after selling all of his newspaper and property interests here and went to Springfield, Ill., where he became part owner of the Evening Register and News. A year ago Mrs. Bender died following an operation and the shock of her death had a most depressing effect upon her husband. His health gradually declined, and early during the present autumn the fatal symptoms developed.

141 HORSES ENTERED AT PAULLINA'S ANNUAL SHOW

Paullina, Ia., Oct. 21.—About 1,500 people attended the fifth annual horse show held here yesterday. There were 18 classes and six specials, with a total of 141 animals entered. W. J. Kennedy, of Sioux City, was the judge. Mr. Kennedy pronounced it one of the best balanced shows at which he ever officiated. It contained numerous specimens of the four breeds, Percherons, Belgians, Clydes and Shires. According to Mr Kennedy, this is an unusual feature and one which brings great distinction to the Paullina show.

The officers of the Paullina show are: Geo. W. Smith, president; A. W. McBride, vice president; H. C. Lage, secretary; John Raak, treasurer; J. T. Metcalf, superintendent; C. G. Peek, John Hodgton and Herman Mericle, directors. The horse show has become a regular annual holiday in Paullina, and is being handled with all side features eliminated. No concessions are sold. It is just a horse show with a liberal relish of band music.

PRIEST DROPS DEAD WHILE ATTENDING CONFERENCE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 19—Rev. Father Charles Waldron, aged 70, pastor of the Catholic church at Malloy, dropped dead this morning while at the St. Mary's parish home in this city, where he was attending a conference of priests.

MANY CLERKS OVERCHARGE IN PROBATING OF ESTATES

Muscatine, Ia., Oct. 19.—Probate fees will be reduced by almost one-half throughout the state of Iowa, as the result of an opinion handed down in the district court of Muscatine county by Judge A. J. House, of Maquoketa in the case of the estate of Margaret Dallas, in which opinion the court ordered that almost half of the fee charged be retaxed.

GERMANS SAID SEE PEACE HOPE TERMS DISCUSS

Information Leaking Out in Berlin Leads to Belief Kaiser Would Open Negotiations With Foes.

"FEELERS" ARE PUT

Suspected Something Is on Behind Walls of Secrecy—Teuton Terms Would Be Heavy

Berlin, Oct 23 - The vigor with which the various political groups big industries, commercial and cultural organizations are pursuing discussion of the tabooed topic of "aims of the war," which, although public discussion of it in the press forbidden, is the absorbing topic Germany society indicates, too, the government is giving consideration to the subject of peace

This discussion and the oracular terances of Dr Karl Helfferich, tary of the German imperial treasury Sir Edward Grey British foreign secretary, and other responsible pronouncements on possible and impossible conditions of peace give color to the suspicion that something may be being on behind the curtain.

Allies Being Sounded Out?

Such "sounding out" if undertaken at the instance of persons in authority undoubtedly has been done informally and in such a manner as to permit a disavowal, should circumstances require.

No statement as to Germany's peace conditions can be obtained, nor is it even certain the government has reached any formal conclusion as to the extent of 'guarantees" for the future security of Germany to which the emperor and the chancellor have referred repeatedly in public utterances.

Should it be permitted, however, to hazard a guess, based on personal observation and deductions and reports dropped in official circles, the Associated Press correspondent would say Germany's terms at present in view include neither the absorption of Belgium nor other wholesale annexations of the extent demanded by the "Pan-sky" enthusiasts, who seem bound on adding to Germany practically everything now occupied by German armies.

Large Indemnity Chief Desire

The cardinal point in the desires of official Germany, if these assumptions are correct, is at present a large indemnity. This is demanded not only to compensate Germany for the steadily growing war costs, but to provide for those "guarantees" against future attack referred to The usual reply to arguments that exhausted nations probably would be unable to raise the huge sums in question is that they need only cease paying out the billions spent annually on armaments to materially reduce such payments and finance the required indemnity.

The second cardinal point is the restoration of Germany's colonial empire in undiminished form, with certain additions, presumably at the expense of Belgium. That nation would be permitted to retain its independence and territories, with the exception of the Meuse line of fortresses.

Channel Base Idea Abandoned

The demand for annexation of a strip of territory down to the channel line has been dropped—if, indeed, it ever formed part of the government's program. Even naval experts are no longer agreed on the necessity or advisability of securing the much discussed naval base on the English channel, particularly in view of the development of the submarines and the increase in their radius of action.

An insistent demand is heard in some quarters that in case of withdrawal from Belgium Germany should retain control of the railroad for a number of years, but this, so far as ascertainable, is not an essential condition.

France is looked upon to provide a large part of the expected indemnity. Territorial demands against France apparently are confined to rectification of the frontier for strategic reasons.

Russian Situation Less Clear

In the east the situation is less clear Earlier in the war the government apparently did not contemplate or desire accessions of territory at Russia's expense, beyond a possible advancement of the frontier for strategic reasons to the strong defensive swamp and river line formed by the Bug, Narew, and Warta rivers. It was felt that retention of Russian Poland by Russia would present certain advantages from the viewpoint of German internal politics

The steady chain of victories and insistence of Austria produced a change, however Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg in his August speech indicated clearly a determination to deprive Russia of her Polish territories, but whether these districts would be given some form of national autonomy, be annexed to Austria-Hungary, or administered by Germany and Austria-Hungary jointly, is still uncertain.

Germans Hold Armies Invincible

This statement of German demands is symptomatic of the belief of practically all Germans that the German armies cannot be beaten and that the Balkan situation soon will clear up in their favor, giving them a road to Turkey, whence copper, cotton, foodstuffs and other supplies may be obtained. Then, they say, Germany can wait until her opponents are ready to acknowledge themselves beaten

To all arguments as to the impossibility of keeping the manhood of the nation on the firing line for a prolonged period, as to the steadily growing financial burden of the war, as to the paralysis of German business life, except as devoted to war purposes, and to the general desire for peace, they reply that other nations are suffering equally and that Germany will not be the first to crack.

BELGIAN WOMEN WON'T WORK; TOWN PUNISH

Paris, Oct. 22.- A correspondent of the Havas News agency telegraphs from Hazebrouck, yesterday, said that the town of Haleheke, Belgium, is being punished by the German governor because the women there refuse to do military work. CENSOR TOLD TO CULTIVATE MUSE

British Writers Object to Official Copy Choppers Cutting Out Poetry.

London, Oct. 23. The British censors antipathy to poetry as evidenced recently by deletions of lines of Kipling and Browning, when quoted in dispatches from the front was gravely considered in the house of commons this afternoon when Ronald McNeill, author and unionist member of parliament for St. Augustine's division of Kent asked Sir John A Simon, secretary for home affairs what poets could be quoted with impunity

Sir John explained that the difficulty lay not in military objection to poetry but to the censors failures to recognize the same Censors attention had been called to the matters he added with the suggestion that they cultivate the muse

TALK WITH PARIS BY WIRELESS NOW

Human Voice Transmitted From Arlington to the Eiffel Tower and Is Recognized by Honolulu Operator.

New York, Oct 22.—Arlington, Va., talked by wireless telephone with Paris, France, yesterday Honolulu also heard the operator talking from Arlington

Announcement that the human voice had been successfully projected across the Atlantic was made on behalf of John J Carty, chief engineer of the American Telephone and Telegraph company at the company's offices here

To B. B Webb, a telephone engineer, fell the honor of being the first man to span with his voice the space between the old world and the new Sitting in the wireless plant of the navy at Arlington, Va., Mr Webb, shortly after midnight this morning asked the wireless telegraph operator to signal the Eiffel tower in Paris The wireless snapped out the signal and soon there came back a response Awaiting word from Mr Webb at the Paris end of the wireless radiation were H L. Shreeve and A M Curtis other engineers and a group of French officers, listening with especially designed apparatus

In Honolulu, 4,800 miles from Arlington, Mr Espenchied, another telephone engineer at the Pearl Harbor navy yard, also was waiting

Webb, at Arlington, had a transmitting instrument but no receiving apparatus. He knew, therefore that he would have to wait for the cable to confirm the success or failure of the experiment

"Hello, Shreeve," he shouted into the mouthpiece, 'Hello, Shreeve"

He then began to count "One, two three, four, one, two, three, four, Goodby"

The cable message said that Webb's "hellos' and "goodbys" had been distinctly heard by the engineers and French army officers in Paris, and that portions of his test figures had also been picked up.

At about the same time there came a message from Honolulu, saying that Webb's talk had been understood in full by the receiving engineer there, and that even the voice had been recognized as Webb's.

Mr Carty said over the telephone tonight that much experimental work will have to be done yet, however before telephone communication across the Atlantic becomes an everyday affair of commercial life

RUSSIA CONFISCATES PROPERTY OF GERMANS

Possessions, Worth Hundreds of Millions, to Be Seized to Meet War Losses.

Petrograd Oct 23 — Millions of acres of Russian land formerly colonized by Germans and hundreds of German industrial, mercantile and financial undertakings valued at hundreds of millions of dollars, have, or are being sequestered and placed under control of Russian officials.

The government is taking this action the Novoe Vremya says, as an answer to a manifesto issued several weeks ago by a group of German professors, which said that among other conditions for concluding peace Russia must to cede to Germany territory occupied by German troops The Novoe Vremya says the government has adopted the principles that losses of Russian subjects in territory occupied by German troops will be made up at expense of German subjects in other parts of Russia Hitherto there has been no hint regarding the disposition of sequestered property

STAGE DEMONSTRATION FOR GREATER DEFENSE

Boston, Oct 22 —An all day demonstration in furtherance of its campaign for increased means of national defense was arranged for today by the Massachusetts branch of the National Security league. A demonstration camp on Boston common was the daytime feature.

Governor Walsh was to preside at an evening mass meeting at which the announced speakers include United States Senator John W Weeks and President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard university.

15 IOWA BREWERIES TO SEEK OTHER LINES

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 22.—Fifteen Iowa breweries will go out of business January 1, it was figured at the capitol today. They are, Dubuque, 3, Burlington, 3; Davenport, 2; Sioux City, 2, others scattered. The total capital invested is $4,236,963 and the total products in 1914 were valued at $3,521,585. They paid out annually in wages, $400,108.

EXPECT TO CONDEMN ALL PRIZE CARGOES

English Court Believes Plan Was to Make Copenhagen German Supply Depot.

London, Oct. 23.—Great interest still prevails here in the ultimate disposition of 38 cargoes of goods held by the British prize court. The British board of trade has made arrangements to pay for all seized American cotton at the market price, but numerous other cargoes are awaiting the final action of the court.

Basing the probability of action being taken along the line laid down by Sir Samuel Evans, president of the prize court, in the cases of the four Scandinavian transports, Kim, Fridland, Alfred Nobel and Bjornstern Bjornsen, it is generally expected they will be condemned to the crown as prizes of war.

Sir Samuel maintained that the cargoes of these four ships, were not in reality going to Denmark to go into the common stock of that country, but that they were intended for delivery into Germany The cargoes consisted mainly of meat, rubber consigned as "gum" and skins for manufacturing German sausages.

Though the ships were owned in Scandinavia, they were indirectly chartered by Chicago packers.

Giving judgment Lord Evans said these ships were carrying toward Copenhagen more than 13 times the amount of food usually carried to that port He said the food imports of Sweden in the past six months amounted to 13 times the amount imported in the three years before the war

He upheld the contention of the crown that what had really been attempted during the war had been to turn Copenhagen into a great supply depot for feeding German troops.

FREIGHT TRAFFIC GROWING RAPIDLY

Volume of Business Now Being Done by Roads Entering New York Is Greatest Since 1907.

New York, Oct 23.—A general revival of freight traffic, unequaled since 1907, was reported today by almost every railroad entering New York City, or with terminals on the New Jersey shore across the Hudson river.

At the office of the Erie railroad, it was said that tonnage figures for last month, available today showed that business done in September, 1915, was the greatest ever recorded on the books of the company during the operation of the road

Tonnage on the Baltimore & Ohio, has increased 40 per cent, it was said, within the past 90 days.

The New Haven railroad is moving more freight today, it was said, than it has moved for years before. The New York Central lines report that business is so good that hundreds of extra men have been added to handle the traffic and that deliveries of the 5,000 to 6,000 cars recently ordered are being hurried to care for the traffic.

GERMANS TAKE SHOT AT SWEDISH PLUNGER

Diving Craft Mistaken for British Submarine—Apology Is Made.

Stockholm, Oct. 23 (via London).—Swedish newspapers express indignation at the attack by a German armed trawler on the Swedish submarine Hvalen, off Ystad, yesterday Although it was said the submarine was mistaken by the Germans for a British craft, Swedish newspapers state that the weather was clear and that the vessel's flag was easily distinguishable It is said the submarine was in Swedish waters when attacked Details received today say that the German trawler fired several shots and then hoisted a signal of inquiry as to the indentity of the submarine. On learning of their error the Germans sent officers to make an apology and give assurances that compensation would be made willingly.

WOMAN BESTS THREE MEXICANS IN FIGHT

Her Physical Prowess Saves Husband, Though Wounds May Prove Fatal.

San Marcos, Tex., Oct. 23.—If Alfred Wilke, a Martindale rancher, recovers from an attack last night by three Mexicans he will owe his life to the bravery and physical prowess of his wife.

Mrs. Wilke wrested a knife from one of the Mexicans and threw it to her husband, who killed one of his attackers. Then, though suffering from a knife wound, she got a shotgun and killed one of the others. The third fled. The Mexicans asked Wilke for work, and when he refused, shot him three times in the back. It was then that Mrs. Wilke came to his aid.

Wilke's condition is serious, but he may recover. Mrs. Wilke's recovery is certain.

STEEL MANUFACTURERS HOLDING CONVENTION

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 22.—Between 400 and 500 of the nation's leaders in the steel industry were here today in attendance at the sessions of the fall meeting of the American Iron and Steel institute. The delegates included practically all of the executive heads and operating experts of American Iron and Steel plants. Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel corporation presided.

Royal Romance is Shattered by War Developments in Bulgaria

Grand Duchess Olga.

London, Oct. 23.—The Bulgars' entry in the war on the side of the Teutonic powers has shattered the romance of the Grand Duchess Olga of Russia and Crown Prince Boris of Bulgaria. Princes and princesses have trouble enough in times of peace to find suitable life mates, but with all of Europe convulsed by war the royal matrimonial market has gone all to smash, and these affairs must wait the outcome of the general slaughter. The engagement of the czar's oldest daughter to the Bulgarian crown prince was reported before the war started, and though not officially announced was generally accepted as a fact After the torms of peace are signed the eligible princes and princesses will no doubt play an important part in cementing new ties of friendship between the present warring royal houses.

SEEK TO RECOVER MEXICO BUSINESS

Great Trade Revival With the Border Republic Is Anticipated—Slump in Five Years Totals Millions.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 23.—Efforts to regain the ground lost by American merchants in trade with Mexico during the past five years of internal strife in the southern republic already are under way following the recognition of the Carranza government. The federal bureau of foreign and domestic commerce today started a campaign to facilitate trade with Mexico and negotiations were begun with representatives of the Carranza government here looking to the opening up of the usual channels of commerce closed or restricted during the revolutionary troubles in Mexico

Special efforts are being made to hasten appointment of Mexican consuls in various cities where export trade is handled, so that shipments of goods to Mexican ports may be handled through government authorities. For several years there have been no officially recognized Mexican consuls in the United States.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, the last year of stable government in the southern republic, the United States shipped to Mexico goods to the value of $58,193,704. In the year ended June 30, 1915, the total had fallen off to $34,164,447. During the same period, however, imports to the United States from Mexico showed an increase, the imports in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, amounting to $77,661,691, compared with $58,795,943 in 1910.

The necessity of the early appointment of Mexican consuls in American export cities has been placed before Elizeo Arredondo, who represents the Carranza government here. Carranza has had for some time consular representatives in New York, Philadelphia, Galveston, San Antonio, El Paso and other export cities, and it is planned to give these representatives authority to handle export shipments to Mexico in the name of the new Mexican government until such time as formal appointments of consuls can be made.

VERDICT IN MURDER CASE THOUGHT NEAR

Issue in Porter Charlton Trial Expected to Be Known Next Week.

Como, Italy, Oct. 23, (via Paris).—The trial of Porter Charlton on the charge of having murdered his wife who was a San Francisco woman, was resumed today. Micelli Picardi, Charlton's chief counsel, was present in court, although he has not completely recovered from his illness. Charlton's physical condition has improved and it is expected there will be no further interruption of the trial. A verdict is looked for by next Tuesday or Wednesday. The court gave an opportunity to Signor Picardi to familiarize himself with the case. The lawyer asked many questions concerning the previous sessions.

Twenty witnesses were interrogated. Among them were hotel keepers, boatmen, porters, physicians, a druggist, a milkman and the owner of the house in which the Charlton's were living at the time Mrs. Charlton met her death. The witnesses gave contradictory testimony concerning the mode of life of the Charlton's and their quarrels.

CARRANZA TO BOOST BASEBALL IN MEXICO

Will Discourage Bull Fighting and Gambling, and Substitute American Game.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 23.—Venustiano Carranza, head of the defacto government in Mexico, is going to encourage the American game of baseball in the republic as a substitute for bull fights and other diversions along the border, according to Adolfo Carillo, his consular agent here. Carranza, Mr. Carillo said, will shut down on border iniquities as practiced at Juarez, Mexicali, Tijuana and other border towns and will not recognize race tracks, or Monte Carlos, or concessions therefor.

"Your American game of baseball, will be encouraged instead," said the agent.

Verona, Italy, Oct. 23., (via Paris).—The Italians are continuing their advance in the Trentino as a result of their offensive movement inaugurated at about the time the Austro-German campaign against Serbia was launched. Reports reaching Verona today, state the Italians in one attack penetrated more than seven miles north of the latitude of the city of Trent, passing to the north of Mount Setoli.

PERMIT IS ANNULLED; DRUG HOUSE TO QUIT

Big Wholesale Concern to Move From Des Moines Because of Court Order.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 23.—The Des Moines Drug company, a wholesale house doing $1,000,000 worth of business yearly, was put out of business here today when Judge Utterback cancelled the company's permit to handle alcohol and issued an injunction forbidding the concern to handle or keep intoxicating liquor.

General Manager Sherman announced that a wholesale drug house cannot do business unless it can handle alcohol and that the plant will be removed from Des Moines. It employs 100 people.

Charges were made by the Anti-Saloon league that two wholesale drug houses were not observing the law. The Iowa Drug company won out, but the Des Moines Drug company was found guilty.

FOUR GERMAN MERCHANT SHIPS ARE TORPEDOED

Stockholm, (via London), Oct. 22.—The British submarine campaign against German shipping in the Baltic is being carried on actively. The sinking of four more German steamships is reported: The Hernoesand, 1,182 gross tons; Plauen, 4,210 tons; Rendsburg, 4,639 tons, and Electra, 1,261 tons.

RUSSIAN PORT IN DANGER

Germans Are Slowly Gaining in Drive on Riga—Elsewhere in East Czar's Forces Hold Initiative.

Petrograd, (via London), Oct. 22.—Further Russian successes on the southern part of the front were announced today by the war office. It is stated that several Austro-German positions and more than 7,500 men have been captured.

London, Oct. 22.—A dispatch from Nish today says official announcement has been made there that the losses of the Austro-German army of invasion have reached 60,000 dead, wounded and prisoners. The Serbians are said to have repulsed the invaders.

London, Oct. 22.—British casualties published since October 1, total 2,285 officers, and 50,072 non-commissioned officers and men.

Rome, (via Paris), Oct. 23.—From information available here today it appears that the Greek government is likely to reply to the representations just made by the allies that Greece will abide by her policy of armed neutrality.

London, Oct. 23.—The Times says this morning it understands that Greece has rejected the offer of Great Britain to cede the island of Cyprus in return for participation in the war by Greece on the side of the allies.

London, Oct. 23.—Serbia's military position is critical. Hammered by superior forces on two sides, her armies are threatened with being crushed as no army has been crushed during the war.

Not only are these facts admitted in England, France and Russia, but they are reflected in official Serbian statements. The key to escape from this situation is the speed with which France and England can throw forces north from Saloniki, in the hope of relieving pressure from the Austrians and Germans in the north and the Bulgarians in the east.

King Leads Bulgars.

The Bulgarians are now battling under the eyes of King Ferdinand. Notwithstanding the presumably superior artillery of the Austrians and Germans, it is the flank attack by the Bulgarians which seems the most menacing to the Serbians. At few places are the Teutons as much as 20 miles south of the Danube. In fact, the ground gained averages a depth of only 10 miles. The Bulgarians, for their part, are displaying tremendous energy, indicative of carefully laid plans preceding the declaration of war. With 20 miles of the Nish-Saloniki railway in their hands, they have a strategic advantage which it will be difficult to overcome.

Where Are Allies.

The movements of entente troops from Saloniki are still unknown to the public, but if any considerable force has been detailed for the task of doing for Serbia what England attempted to do for Belgium, it must be heard from soon.

From Sofia and Saloniki come denials that the Bulgarians have lost Strumitza. This means that Bulgarian soil is still free from invasion. It is reported that Turkish cavalry is cooperating with the Bulgarians, and that a great battle is raging at the Macedonian town of Velese, where the Serbs won a victory over the Turks in the Balkan war of 1912.

According to an unofficial report the Bulgarians have taken the town.

Greece still hesitates. England's offer of Cyprus and, according to reports a considerable extension of Greek territory along the Aegean sea, and of colonies in Asia, have brought no outward change in the situation.

Riga Is in Danger.

On most of the long eastern front the Russians seem to be in the ascendancy, but both Petrograd and Berlin emphasize the increasing danger of Riga's position. From the southwest the Germans are nearing the village of Olai, which is only 12 miles from Riga. They are also increasing their hold along the Dvina river to the southeast of the city, being in that quarter within eight miles of their goal. The Russians asregion of Olai, were repulsed, but the Germans are bombarding the Riga-Dvinsk railway beyond the Dvina, interfering with the forwarding of Russian reinforcements.

According to dispatches from Christiania, the Russian port of Archangel already has been closed by ice. If this be true, Russia will be deprived of its means of bringing in supplies unless ice breakers are able to work successfully.

FRENCH REPULSE ATTACK.

Paris, Oct. 22.—German troops yesterday evening made an unsuccessful attack upon certain French positions near Civenchy, according to the announcement made this afternoon by the French war office.

CARRANZA WILL HELP QUELL BORDER BANDITS

Brownsville, Tex., Oct. 22.—An active campaign against bandits on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande by General Eugenio Lopez, Carranza commander in Matamoros was promised today by Jose Z. Garza, Carranza consul here. Mr. Garza said General Lopez has requested more troops in order to handle the Mexican side of the raids.

Garza said investigation is under way of the reported appearance in Reynosa, Mex., of Luis De La Rosa, Texas bandit leader, a few hours before the raid on an American soldiers' camp at Ojo Del Agua, yesterday morning.

Quiet was reported last night at all points along the boundary. Sheriff W. T. Vann announced the release of four Mexican prisoners all named Canta, held in connection with the Monday night train robbery. No evidence was developed to hold them for the robbery.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores, so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

The sage was carrying a big bundle as he stepped into the store for a ten-cut of chewing tobacco.

"It's a fright," he complained, as he detached a large corner of his purchase between his teeth. "It s this here modern extravagance I'm speakin' of. When I was a young feller an' was courtin' my wife, she wuz considered the best dressed gal in the township, an' the highest priced dress she had didn't cost more'n a dollar an' a half. 'Twas made out of checkered gingham an' wuz real purty too. Good enough for en-body. An' now-a-days jest look 'em. Lan' sakes, it's a crime the way they put on a lot of frills and foll de-rolls. Sich stockin's and panneymay hats and fur top shoes and sich. I'm agin' it."

"What's that you have in your bundle, Uncle?" asked the clerk.

"Just been down to th' dry goods store for some stuff my daughter bot yistiday. Said it was a new fall suit, but there must be three or four of 'em 'cause the ticket says thirty-one-seventy-nine. I ain't a carin' though. Ain't goin' to have anybody say 'at my girl aint fixed up as swell as any of the rest ev'em. No-sir."

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

Rub Pain and Stiffness away with a small bottle of old honest St. Jacobs Oil

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right into the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

GREAT LEADER IS NEEDED BY SLAVS

Returned Military Authority Doubts That Czar Is Strong Enough to Meet Emergency—Nation Not Beaten.

Lodz, Russian Poland, Special.—The military authority of one of the allied powers, who has just completed a stay of several months in Russia, with the imperial armies, has furnished the Associated Press with a summary of the situation at the time when the emperor of Russia took personal command of the land and naval forces of the empire.

"It is useless to deny the gravity of the situation in Russia," the officer in question said, "but it would be quite as erroneous to regard Russia's position today as desperate, or even as one of imminent danger. The morals of the Russian forces is absolutely untouched by the long series of retreats. The Russian people are for the war to a man, and every defeat has served only to confirm them in their stubborn determination to drive every German from Russian soil. Were the government to undertake to make a separate peace for Russia now, it would have to face a spontaneous and flaming insurrection in all parts of the country.

"This is only one side the medal, however The charge in the supreme command of the imperial armies has had its drawbacks. The grand duke, Nicholas Nicholaievitch, was never a great tactician, nor did he ever pretend to be one. But he had the confidence of his officers and the absolute faith of his men. The latter the emperor will also have—perhaps even to a greater extent than his great uncle—for the emperor of all the Russias is almost a religious figure to the average Russian. But how much confidence he will inspire in his officers is another matter They know that when Nicholas Nicholaevitch said a thing he meant it. He was like a rock in his decisions, and withal fundamentally just and of open mind. His officers could depend upon him, and they did depend upon him. And it had an excellent effect throughout the army

Fear Czar Is Weak.

"With the emperor the Russians fear it may be different. In the first place, he not only is not a soldier, but he is a very strong advocate of world peace. He has retained confidence in former Minister of War Soukhomlinoff, in whom certainly no one else has any confidence, and who is generally regarded in Russia as an incompetent who, with Rasspoutin, has had a very sinister influence on the emperor

"The emperor himself also recalled to office when, with much difficulty he had finally been got rid of, S. V. Roukhloff, who now occupies the most important civil post in the empire—that of the ministry of communications, and who instead of planning to transport arms and munitions to armies in desperate need of them, is intent upon working out nationalist theories of his own of Russia for the Russians. In place of accepting a very favorable American offer to erect factories in Russia for the reassembling of American war materials by those familiar with the work, Roukhloff insisted on having the work done by Russians totally unfamiliar with it, in factories which the Russians took 10 times as long to construct as the Americans would have required.

"On the financial side the situation is about as bad. The minister, P. L. Bark, is a man of no very signal ability, who knows enough, however, to be guided largely by his French and British colleagues But Chipoff, the head of the state bank, has given rise to no little criticism of his capacity in Russia by his insistence on guarding the gold reserve of the empire intact, whatever happens to Russian exchange

Russia Needs Efficiency.

"It is the emperor's willingness to keep men like these in office under present critical conditions which has filled the intelligent Russian with apprehension at the prospect of his active participation in military affairs at this uncertain juncture No one in Russia is ignorant that the emperor takes his traditional position as the father of his people with almost devout seriousness It is scarcely possible to conceive to what unexpected action his conviction that he is called to be a second St Vladimir may lead him His intentions are admitted to be excellent, but Russia could do with a little less exalted purpose and a little more practical efficiency

"The same may be said of the duma. With the most patriotic intentions in the world of lending the full cooperation of the people of Russia to the defense of the empire, its members refused, at a crisis when nobody has time to consider them, the most complex and embarrassing questions of internal reform To open the discussion of the advisability of a responsible ministry when plainly every thought is necessary to the national defense, seems almost absurd, yet that is precisely what the Russians let the duma do, and by permitting it, succeeded in placing the emperor in a position which threatens to jeopardize his personal popularity, at the moment when it is perhaps the most valuable asset the government possesses

"From a military standpoint there are two great dangers in Russia today. The first lies in a continued and successful German drive on Petrograd, the second is a drive in the opposite direction, with a view to opening a way through Russia to the Black sea, to reestablish the broken communications with the Ottoman empire Both are regarded as most unlikely of success even if attempted, but both must be considered in weighing the present situation in Russia.

Foresees Russian Recovery.

"It is scarcely probable that the Russian armies will begin to receive in sufficient quantities the small arms and munitions they lack much before November. It is not, therefore, very likely that they will be ready to assume any serious offensive before the first of December.

"Meanwhile the defensive retreat must go on. General Rousski, who is looked upon as one of the ablest military commanders of the empire, has the defense of Petrograd in hand. The important defensive works which he has caused to be constructed about Pskov are thought to be as nearly impregnable as any entrenchments have proved in this war. His line, facing almost sought, also serves to threaten the German communications in the event of any further advance into Russia and to render any such further advance dangerous.

"In this respect, therefore, the Russian situation may be regarded as satisfactory, though the danger of the fall of Petrograd should not be belittled. Petrograd is almost essential to the Russians, not on account of any sentimental reason connected with its being the capital, but because three-fourths of the industries directly connected with supplying the troops are located there, and their loss would be a blow from which it would be difficult for the Russian troops to recover.

"On the south the situation is less defined. It is evident that if Constantinople falls and the allies are able to rush arms and munitions in large quantities to the Russian forces, the situation of the Germans will be most serious. Over and over again I have noted that whenever an important shipment of munitions has been made to any sector of the Russian line, the retreat has promptly stopped in that sector, a slow but certain advance has begun, and long train loads of prisoners have begun to come through from that part of the front. It is common opinion in Russia, based on a great deal of experience, that when the Russian is anywhere near equally equipped with the German now doing the fighting on the Russian front, the Russian is not only able to stop the German, but to push him back. I presume that this is on account of the fresh troops which are constantly being sent into the Russian lines, while, to judge from the prisoners the Russians have taken, the opposing German troops are neither young nor very well trained, as a rule.

"As the opening of the Dardanelles means the supplying of sufficient arms and munitions to the whole Russian army, without the long delays now inevitable, it would seem plain that the Germans must do everything in their power to prevent the defeat of the Turks and the fall of Constantinople. Certainly this is Russian opinion. Moreover, it is believed in Russia that the only possible way to accomplish this end is for Germany to reestablish, somehow, her line of communications with the Dardanelles."

A Big City's Abstinence.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

The Chicago liquor interests, angered by the enforced Sunday closing of saloons, have declared a war of reprisal. They now propose to cause the extension of the dry Sunday all over Cook county and, as they put it, to "give Chicago a burning drought." They also threaten to shut off supplies from homes and clubs, and even to attempt to minimize the case and bottle sale of Saturday

"If this obsolete law is to be administered," said an attorney for the liquor interests, "we will ram it down the throats of the people until they're sick of it."

Meanwhile, the first "dry" Sunday Chicago has known in 40 odd years resulted in some significant phenomena. All of the theaters had a marked and unexpected increase in attendance The family playhouses and the "movies" entertained more men and boys than have hitherto patronized the Sunday programs. The cafes and lunch rooms showed considerable gains in business, and the soda water stands and ice cream parlors flourished unwontedly. The biggest and best behaved crowd of the season witnessed the championship baseball game between the Cubs and the White Sox. From an average of 250 Sunday arrests the police had only 15 to handle, and there wasn't a murder or a street fight to account for.

As though to point the value of the drinkless Sunday, the only suicide recorded in Chicago on that day was that of a man who had laid in an excessive supply on Saturday night and literally drank himself to death on Sunday

The reprisals of the liquor dealers are not likely to offset the commendable and wholly gratifying results of Chicago's "dry" Sunday.

Great Men Prove Childish.

From the St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

Many extremely stupid acts have attended the progress of the war in Europe, but none that seems so absurd as the conflict now raging among the men of mark in the nations concerned. The most recent illustration is the expulsion of Eugen d'Albert from the Society of German Composers because he happens to have been born in England. Germany, however, has not been alone in this enterprise of retaliation. The French have ousted most of the German scientists from membership in their various societies, and the British men of letters have spent a good deal of valuable time decrying the achievements of the Germans.

This sort of thing seems to qualify as the ultimate attainment in piffle. Is Sir William Ramsey any less great because he happens to be British? Or Koch and Erlich less famous in medicine because they happen to be German? What has the war between Germany and France to do with the achievements of Schiller, of Goethe, of Balzac, or De Maupassant? The suspicion is growing that Europe has gone stark mad, and this does much to confirm it.

Eulogy on the Cow.

Col F M Woods, of Nebraska, in the Minneapolis Journal.

No other animal works for man both day and night. She has gone with man from Plymouth Rock to the setting sun. It was her sons that drew the prairie schooner for the sturdy pioneer, as inch by inch they fought to prove that "Westward the Star of Empire takes its way." And the old cow grazed along behind and when the day's march was done she came and gave the milk to fill the mother's breast to feed the suckling babe that was perchance to become the future ruler of his country.

Who says that what we are to a great extent we do not owe to man's best friend, the cow? Treat her kindly, gently, for without her—words fail me to describe.

It was the cow that made it possible for man to change the great American desert into a land of happy and prosperous homes. When she came the buffalo disappeared, the Indian tepee gave way to the church, school house and home, and where once the wild wolves howled today children prattle, grass grows, flowers bloom and birds sing.

HOUSEWIVES OF PARIS HALT ADVANCE IN MEATS

Paris, (by mail).—An incipient riot of house wives and street vendors at the Central markets recently has done more than the polemics of the press and menaces of politicians to advance the campaign against high meat prices.

What angered the women was the seizure and destruction by sanitary inspectors of several tons of meat and poultry tht had spoiled in storage while if it had been sold the same day as received as required by the rules, it would have forced prices down to a reasonable figure. The woman insisted upon the re-establishment of the public sales that were suspended at the beginning of the war, charging the commission merchants with selling only as much of the meat consigned to them as could be disposed of without cutting prices. The public sales, or "sales by crier," establish the official central market quotations. Since they have been suspended, the commission merchants have it all in their own hands—eliminating all influences of supply and demand.

A committee has now recommended the re-establishment of the sales by crier. Under this system the commission merchant may fix a minimum price for meat or produce consigned to him. The crier deciares that price and anyone may buy at that figure if no one offers more; sometimes no offer is received and the commission merchant must lower his price.

Another reform proposed is the publication in the Municipal Bulletin each week of a list of the provisions and kinds of meat and poultry that are most abundant and advantageous for the economical housewives. The daily receipts are also to be published in tables alongside the estimated needs of the population.

A Bit Mixed.

From the Kansas City Star.

Mrs. Jones—"Why, Mrs. Brown, I thought you were a widow."

Mrs. Brown—"I was, but I married my husband's brother."

Mrs. Jones—"Oh, I see. You're a widow still."

RULER OF BULGARIA IS MAN OF MYSTERY

London.—Europe's eyes are turned on Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria, the man of mystery. For nearly a year he lived in seclusion in his castle at Vrania, pondering Bulgaria's future course of action. With dramatic swiftness he has now emerged to mobilize his army. His next command may effect the future destines of all Europe.

Reports from European capitals contained vague guesses at the secret that the Bulgarian czar has locked in his breast. Army commanders are hurrying to Sofia, railways are carrying Bulgarian troops and all indications apparently point to war. But those familiar with conditions at Sofia believe the czar alone knows today what Bulgaria's next move will be.

Until a year ago the Bulgarian ruler was a jovial, well met fellow, whose friends were legion He received every one, especially newspaper men. But there was a sudden change. From the soul of open heartedness he became as silent as the sphinx

He returned to the summer castle at Vrania. Orders were given that he would see no one except his prime minister From time to time he sent the Crown Prince Boris to Sofia with messages for those with whom he wished to communicate. He made an exception a few weeks ago when he received the new German ambassador to Constantinople, who brought him an autographed letter from the kaiser.

Czar Ferdinand has never made any secret of his ambition to be the dictator of the Balkans. During the first Balkan war he saw his star all but reach the zenith of its ascendancy. The Bulgarian papers even described the wonderful white horse and the priceless saddle on which he was to ride at the head of his armies into Constantinople. But the second Balkan war stripped him of his glory, and he returned to his capital a disappointed ruler

In the present European war, Czar Ferdinand saw a chance to retrieve his fortunes and those of his nation, by bartering first with the kaiser and then with the allies. But he realized that he must make no mistake and it was for this reason, I was told in Sofia, that he retired from communication with his fellow men to ponder the problem himself. A whole organization of secret agents and couriers forwarded to him, through the prime minister, the reports on which he based his decision.

The czar has both German and French blood in his veins. He is of the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha line; he is an Austrian nobleman and he has vast Hungarian estates. His queen is a German princess. But, on the other hand, he is a descendant of the French house of Orleans. His grandfather was Louis Philippe of France. His first wife was a Bourbon of the Italian line, but of the old French Bourbon stock, and all his children were born of his first marriage. The family puzzle only increases the difficulty of guessing what is going on in the mind of the Bulgarian ruler.

Bernstorff and Armenian Massacres.

From the Philadelphia Ledger

Our state department has been censured a little thoughtlessly, perhaps, for withholding the specific data of the Armenian harryings transmitted by Ambassador Morgenthau. It is now alleged on what appears to be good authority that a report on Armenian atrocities submitted to a former head of the state department was somehow obtained and used by Ambassadar von Bernstorff with calamitous results to him who prepared the report.

The story is that Vahan Cardishian, commissioner for the Turkish government in charge of the exhibit of that nation at San Francisco, gave Mr Bryan on the latter's recent tour a minutely explicit statement substantiating the charges of pillage, eviction and murder among the Armenians. Mr. Cadishian is an Armenian It is said that the report came to Count von Bernstorff on the understanding that it would be used to inform Berlin of the atrocities, and that Von Bernstorff laid the information before Djelal Bey, Turkish consul general in New York, who thereupon crossed the continent and demanded the resignation of the commissioner

The kaiser, if he chose, could lop off the Dead Sea fruit of his friendship with Abdul Hamid by a fulmination to Talbaat Bey at Constantinople A word from him would stop the ravening fury of slaughter by Kurd and Bashi-Bazouk hirelings. Instead, his emissary at Washington apparently under false pretenses visits the sons of the Turco-German alliance upon a humble functionary who has gone no further than to inform our state department of unpalatable truths as to unpardonable transactions in Asia Minor And this truculent agent of the kaiser is the man who sweeps away a cloud of witnesses as to Armenian atrocities with a mere wave of the hand, exclaiming "Pure inventions!"

Tnat Wind Is Best.

Whichever way the wind doth blow,
Some heart is glad to have it so,
Then blow it east or blow it west,
The wind that blows, that wind is best.

My little craft sails not alone,
A thousand fleets from every zone
Are out upon a thousand seas,
And what for me were favoring breeze
Might dash another, with the shock
Of doom, upon some hidden rock.

And so I do not care to pray
For winds to waft me on my way,
But leave it to a Higher Will
To stay or speed me, trusting still
That all is well, and sure that He
Who launched my bark, will sail with me,
Through storm and calm, and will not fail,
Whatever breezes may prevail,
To land me, every peril past,
Within his sheltering heaven at last.

Then whatsoever wind doth blow,

AUTUMN.

Joseph Husband, in the Trimmed Lamp.

There is a quality in the air that comes only with autumn, a sharp coolness with the sunset, a crisp, frosty flavor at sunrise. At night the stars shine more brightly from a sky of luminous purple. There is comfort in blankets, a new quality of soundness in sleep.

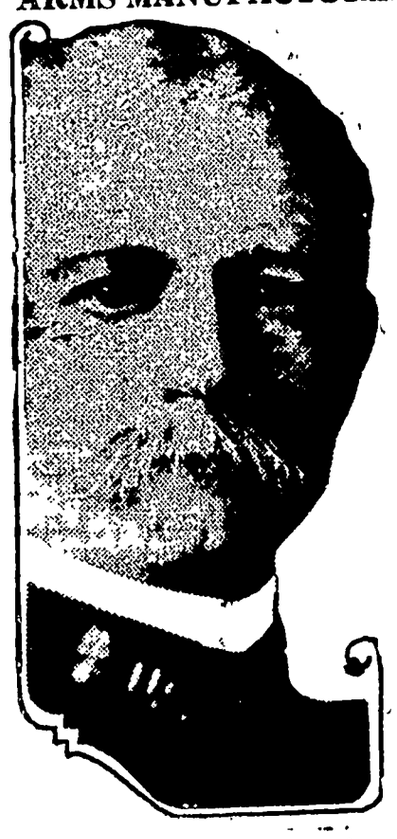
Against the pale blue of the sky the trees are contrasting an increasing variety of color. The green of the leaves is darker and dashed with pale yellow, ruddy gold, crimson and the deep red of the swampy growths. There is a pungent smell of bonfires in the air.

West of the village the flat reaches of the slough are tawny where the reapers have passed, but green still marks the boundaries of field and pasture. A pool of water catches a sudden blue from above; yellow hay stacks rise abruptly from the marsh land, there is a soft haze which dims the horizon.

Fragrant spicy odors of drying grass and leaves and moist earth are on the breeze. There is a noisy chatter of birds gathering for their long flight. In a few weeks I shall hear the wild geese calling through the night as they fly low from the lake.

In a cloudless sky the sun sets abruptly in a flame of gold; the yellow afterglow fades from the deepening blue, a sudden chill rises from the marsh land and the mist creeps out from the darkening trees. With my feet ringing on the hard road I walk home to dinner and a book before an open fire.

FATHERS DATA ON ARMS MANUFACTURE



Brigadier General William Crozier.

Reports received by Brigadier General William Crozier, chief of ordnance, U. S. army, from various private munitions plants throughout the country have convinced that official, as well as the president and his cabinet, that the United States would not lack for munitions in case this country were to be drawn into the war.

WOMEN AFTER THE WAR.

From the Chicago Journal.

Before the war began women outnumbered men in almost all the fighting countries, though exact statistics are available for only a few. In the three principal combatant countries west of Russia the excess population of females was as follows.

United Kingdom	1,297,501
Germany	845,661
France	645,211
Total excess of females in three countries	2,788,373

The war has increased this disparity of the sexes to a frightful extent. Assuming that British figures of casualties refer to home forces alone, the United Kingdom has lost about 400,000 men. Prussia owns to the loss of more than 1,800,000 soldiers, besides those of her naval forces, and there has been a great deal of heavy fighting since her last casualty statement was published On this basis, the whole German empire must have lost close to 3,000,000 men. French losses are not published but they are certainly not less than 1,200,000 and more probably are fully 1,500,000.

On the face of the returns, therefore, these three countries have lost from 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 men There are many duplications in the lists; men slightly wounded in the early months of the war have returned to the front and been wounded again Men killed or mortally wounded seldom form more than one-fourth of the total battle casualties, though the use of high explosives and bayonets tends to increase this proportion. On the other hand, the war probably is not more than half over, and millions of wounded men and prisoners have had their health or earning capacity lowered to the point which unfits them to become husbands and fathers.

It is not a wild guess to estimate that when the struggle is over these three countries will contain 5,000,000 more marriageable women than marriageable men. Not since the 30 years war has any European nation faced such a problem as this. How will that problem be met? Will there be tacit recognition of polygamy? Will the state stand sponser for children born out of wedlock—as on many less serious occasions? Or will there be assisted emigration of women from war-wasted Europe to countries like the United States, Canada and Australia, where there is always a surplus of men?

"The Tariff Bogey."

From the Saturday Evening Post.

In this last fiscal year our purchases of foreign goods were smaller by $200,000,000 than in the year before, and at the end of the period commodity prices in the United States, as reflected by Bradstreet's index number, were the highest ever known But in spite of that the country, our protectionist friends tell us, is being mysteriously ruined by the pauper labor of Europe

The aforesaid labor is getting killed and maimed to an extent that appalls the world The factories in which it was employed are increasingly disorganized by war The capital behind it is being shot away at the rate of tens of millions of dollars a day But those things were mere broken reeds to lean upon, unless we are further fortified against European competition by a very high tariff

You might sink Europe in the sea tomorrow, and your true high protectionist would still go about pale and trembling unless he had in his pocket the rabbit's foot of high duties to fend off the specter of pauper labor A Europe with both arms in a sling and not a leg to stand on would still frighten him into gooseflesh unless he had the tariff horseshoe over his door

So the tariff will no doubt be one of the issues of the next presidential election, and if the republicans win we shall have another revision of it. The loudest champions of high protection do not want an intelligent tariff, they want a political one, with the usual logrolling. This is painful to contemplate, but as neither democrats nor republicans seem at all minded to take the tariff out of politics there is probably no help for it.

RIDICULE AS A MEANS TO REFORM MAN WHO DRINKS

From the Minneapolis Journal.

That any blockhead can get drunk, that intoxication is a proof of stupidity instead of smartness, that dissipation is the most vulgar form of nonintellectual pleasure, that gluttony is unmanly, and that every man is "a bum" while he is drunk—are some of the helpful facts that would go further toward reform than sermons and editorials, if young men would realize them.

If the hard drinking young spendthrift at the bar, or in his club, or with other folly chasers at the roadhouses, could read the mind of the bartender, or the waiter, he would "get a line on himself" that would be more impressive for reform than a ton of tracts or the incessant thunders of preachers. To be a fool is not necessarily criminal, and many self satisfied young wastrels of money, time and character are satisfied to believe that they are at worst, not criminals.

There is reason to believe that as a weapon of reform, ridicule would be, as good as solemn preachment; and that assaults on the vanity of youth would be even more effective than appeals to its moral or religious instincts. There are many "broad minded" young men who refuse to believe that it is a crime to be drunk. But it shouldn't take much to convince them that it is an indication of ill breeding, stupidity and low tendencies to be drunk. Any fool can do that and generally does

JEWS OF POLAND SUFFER BITTERLY

Russian Evacuation of Contested Territory Marked by Promiscuous Executions—Many Instances Cited.

Athens, Special.—A distinguished Jews of Russian Poland, now in the hands of the Austrians and Germans, appear to have suffered, prior to the Russian retirement, more than the normal amount of hardship imposed by war. An investigation by a correspondent of the Associated Press discloses that there was a rather promiscuous execution by the Russians of Jews accused of spionage, that many persons were subjected to physical assaults of greater or less violence, committed with knouts or flats of swords, and that in many places, chiefly out of the way villages and rural districts, there was some plundering of Jewish shops and houses by the Russian soldiery.

The correspondent visited the two chief cities of this district, Lodz and Piotrokow. His proposal to visit other cities—Kielce and Radom, were named particularly—was met by the statement of Jews consulted that nothing much happened in the cities, and that the proposed trip would not be worth while. He questioned some Jews from the districts around Lodz and Piotrokow, but was not able to visit the small villages and the rural districts generally, where, the Jews allege most of the massacres, plunderings, violations, etc., occurred. The outstanding feature, however, of every case investigated was that, in the words of one Jewish scholar, "nothing happened to the Jews without a previous denunciation." In some instances this feature of the case was immediately admitted; in others it was brought to light by further inquiry.

Jew Sacrifices Life.

A typical case of the latter sort was that of a Jew named Kozlowski, a storekeeper at Malinitz, a village near Piotrokow. The story first told to the Associated Press representative was this: When the Russians came to Malinitz in November, they were angry because it had come to their ears that some Jew of the village had boasted that the Germans would make short work of the Russians. The Russians lined up all the male inhabitants of the town and threatened to shoot or hang them unless the man responsible for the words complained of were delivered up. Thereupon Kozlowski stepped forward, assumed responsibility for the words in question, and was hanged.

The correspondent finally succeeded in having a talk with Kozlowski's son and his father, both of whom witnessed the affair. When the Russians first entered the village they asked for Kozlowski. He had been hidden by a friend, but was eventually found. He managed, however, to escape from the soldiers guarding him, and the commander of the Russian regiment thereupon had all male Jews drawn up in a line and announced that all would be killed unless Kozlowski was delivered up. Koslowski informed of the threat, presented himself. He was taken away by a squad of soldiers and shot.

"But how did the Rusians know there was a Kozlowski in town and why did they want him?" asked the correspondent.

"A rival in business had sent word to the Russians that Kozlowski was a spy and that he was storing up goods for the Germans," was the answer.

Accepting as true the story of the manner of the execution, as it was told by the father and son of the victim, it was marked by a specific cruelty which frequently marked executions during the Russian raid into east Prussia last October. The Associated Press correspondent at that time found many instances in which the victims were stood against walls and, instead of being killed by volley fire, as is usual in such executions, were killed by soldiers firing at will. Kozlowski appears to have been executed in the same manner, after having been bound to a tree.

Polish denunciations, according to witnesses, were responsible for the only three cases of atrocity or cruelty found in Lodz itself. Russian soldiers came to the home of Abram Kochan on the Baluter Market in November and took him away. His wife was prevented from following him. This was on a Friday. The man's body was found outside the city on the following Tuesday. He had been shot.

Finds Son Bayoneted.

Israel Blockman, an old man, told how the Russians took his son from the house on a Wednesday, and how the body was found two days later outside the city. He had been shot and bayoneted.

Mellach Eilenberg, a man of about 45, got into trouble with the Lodz authorities in November by making and selling cigarets without a license. An official visited him and Eilenberg paid 52 roubles as hush money. The following day soldiers, who, Eilenberg said, had been informed of the affair, also appeared and wanted money. He refused their demands, was arrested and brought to the Russian military commander in the Grand hotel. The commander, who had not time to hear the case through, told Eilenberg to consider himself under arrest, to return to his home and present himself the next day. Eilenberg started out, but was stopped outside by a soldier, led into a garden back of the hotel, tied to a tree there and kept there for 18 hours. A rabbi, informed of the case, appealed to the commander, who had Eilenberg released.

A few days later the Russian commander, having presumably investigated the case, compelled the return of the 52 roubles taken from Eilenberg and caused the grafter to be sent to jail for six weeks.

There was some plundering of small shops in Lodz by Russian soldiers, but it appears to have been of limited extent. Some shops were pretty well cleaned out and their fixtures thrown into the streets. As a whole, however, the procedure seems to have been as described by the owner of a small tobacco shop.

"The Russians would come into my shop," she said, "point to some cigarets and ask, 'how much?' When I told them, they took a handful, said 'spaseebe' (thank you) and walked out."

Some Jews told of cases where their countrymen had been badly beaten in the streets.

Soldiers Plunder Town.

In a number of instances the Jews appear to have fled before the soldiers reached their villages. In many of these cases their deserted homes are said to have been plundered and set on fire. The Poles, however, also suffered in many such cases, less from plundering than from burning.

"Oh, Jack, I didn't come here to ask you to go bail for him," she cried, a deep flush in her cheek. "We couldn't think of it. You didn't understand me, I am sure."

"You mean that Eric would not accept me as surety?" he asked, his face clouding.

"No, no—not that either," she said, greatly distressed. "Only that you should not be asked to risk your property—"

"Nonsense," he said, and there was no mistaking the relief in his voice. "Now, go home, please, and rest secure. Don't stay here, little girl. I will go to the court house as soon as the doctor comes out to report. Mother won't mind being left alone for a while. Provided, of course, there is no immediate—"

She caught the note of anxiety in his voice. "No, Jack dear, you must not leave her. I will not let you do it. Your place is here. It was horribly selfish of me to even think—"

A door near at hand was closed gently, then came the rustle of heavy curtains, and the tread of footsteps in the parlor. Mary shot an anxious look over her shoulder, arresting her own self-arraignment.

"The doctor," said he quickly. He crossed rapidly and opened the door. Then, with a glance at her, he left the room, closing the door behind him. She was left alone.

Not more than a minute passed before he returned. She could read nothing in his face.

"Pardon me," he said. "Dr. Spooner says there is no change. He may die within the hour or he may live for years. We have have sent to New York for nurses and another doctor. They get here this afternoon. He—he is hopelessly paralyzed. There was an apoplectic stroke as well. So, you see, it is impossible to tell what the outcome will be."

She shuddered. Her lips parted, but in horror, not in the effort to speak.

"I can't leave her just now," he went on painfully. "It wouldn't be right. I can't do it, not even for you, Mary. She wants me to come in there now. Go, please, and try to forget that I ever—" He could not complete the sentence, but turned away to hide his twitching lips and moist eyes.

She waited for a long time before speaking. Her heart was aching as it had never ached before.

"Listen, John," she said at last, "let me ask this question when were you told the truth about yourself, and by whom?"

He faced her reluctantly. "Last night. She told me. We were sitting in this room. He—oh, why should we go into all this? I can't talk about it. Good-bye, Mary. Don't stay a minute longer. You must go."

"Yes, John," she said gently. "I will go now. I won't ask you to tell me anything more. I don't want to hear it. But, listen to me, dear. Nothing, nothing in all this world, can alter my love for you, nothing can come between us. It is you I love. Do you understand?" She went up to him and laid her hands on his shoulders. There was a wonderful sweetness in her voice.

"My little Mary," he murmured, shaken by a mighty storm of emotion. He put his hands to her cool white cheeks and kissed her on the brow, not the kiss of passion, but of boundless adoration.

She smiled, her eyes looking full into his, a smile so steadfast and grave that he was never to forget it.

"Let me know, John, if there is anything I can do for—you," she said simply. "I will come if you need me."

She passed from the room and out of the house. He followed her to the door. She did not look back. When she was out of sight beyond the row of houses, he turned back, a great sigh escaping his lips. His feet dragged, his shoulders drooped as he crossed the parlor and drew aside the curtains.

The bedroom beyond was darkened. Closed shutters and drawn shades kept out the cheerful morning sun. The habit of darkening a sickroom still obtained in Corinth. In the corner beyond the window was the bed, white against the shadowy walls. Heavy, stertorous breathing came from the lungs of the motionless figure that stretched its length limply under the coverlet. There was no other sound to be heard about the house. Only this ghastly breathing. Payson stopped in the doorway, his heart sick with sudden, overwhelming pity for the once strong, virile man he had known all his life as a friend, steadfast and true. Whatever else, he was a friend worth having.

The Widow Payson sat near the foot of the bed. Either she did not hear the man at the door or she was indifferent to his presence in the room. At any rate, she did not look up, but kept her chin lowered and her eyes closed. She rocked gently, mechanically, in the low old fashioned chair.

He watched her in silence for a few minutes. A great sob swelled up in his throat, his eyes smarted with the rush of tears. Going to her side, he dropped to his knees and began kissing the worn, bony hand of the woman who sat sentinel over the man who was his father.

She opened her tired, dry eyes, and after a moment smiled.

"Don't cry, laddie," she said, laying her hand caressingly on his head. "I am sorry I told you. He may never speak again. I could have gone to my grave with the secret safe, and you would never have been the wiser. It would have been better. He meant you never should know, and he was right. I betrayed him. Sometimes I think he knows that I have told you. It's a queer feeling I have, with him lying there senseless and unknowing. Yet I have the feeling that he heard me talking last night, that he is listening now. If he does know, he must be hating me with all his soul. He must be despising—"

"Sh! Don't say that, mother. Hate you? Why, how could he hate you—you who have done so much for him and for me? Think of all the years of mothering me."

"All the years," she sighed. "Thirty odd. And now they're behind me, with only blank ones ahead. Ah, my little laddie, it is I who have suffered the cruelest blow, after all, and all through my own folly. Why couldn't I have held my stupid tongue? But I thought he was dying. I thought the end had come. I was terrified. To think of him dying like that—strong, healthy man that he was. And you not knowing he was your own father. Why, I—I just couldn't keep it back. Alack! It has cost him nothing, nor has he gained more than he had before, but I have lost my laddie—I have lost my little sonnie."

She buried her face in her hands and rocked back and forth in the chair, moaning as old women moan when stricken deep. Old women! The years have spared them the strength to moan; the shrill outcry is no longer their tribute to pain or grief. And yet what shriek of despair is more potent than the humble groan of an old woman?

He put his arm about her thin shoulders and drew her head close to his breast.

"Don't say that, mother dear," he said, with infinite gentleness. "You will always be mother to me. There never will come a time when I will think of you as anything else. You are my dear little mother. Why, how can I think of you as being anything but mother? It is not possible. Do you think that a single day can wipe out the thing I have believed ever since I can remember? Haven't you always been mother to me? Can you expect me to forget that you are mother and then look upon that strange man over there as father? It isn't possible. It never can be possible. He is not 'father' to me, nor can you ever be anything but 'mother.'"

"Ah, John, you do not understand," she argued patiently. "The truth is out. Nothing can overcome that—not your reasoning, nor your love, nor your loyalty. I am not your mother. You may say what you like, but down deep in your heart I am not what I was to you yesterday, and all the years before yesterday. You have lost a mother. You cannot put me back where I was yesterday. I did not bring you into the world. You never saw your mother, but you never can put away from you the fact that she once lived and bore you. You cannot think of me as you must think of her—"

"Listen, mother," he interrupted, "listen to me. Haven't I always thought of Henry Payson as my father? In spite of that man there, in spite of what I know to be true, I shall always think of Henry Payson as 'father.' I cannot help it. It's in here somewhere in my brain, in my heart. Just as you are in here. What was the other woman to me? Not even a memory. I never saw Henry Payson, yet you know what he has always been to me. My father."

"Hush, John," she cautioned, with a quick glance at the pallid face of Adam Carr. "He may be able to hear. He may understand."

"Understand? What if he does? He has always understood. It would be nothing new to him. He has expected nothing of me—he has asked for nothing except my friendship. Ah, I begin to understand some things myself. I know now why I have always liked, always admired Adam Carr. I know why I have always depended on him, and been guided by him. He had the right to govern, he had the right to claim what nature had given him."

"Poor man," sighed the widow Payson. "He was a better father to you than most fathers are to the boys who know them as such. All his life he has been thinking of you, doing for you, saving for you. I have seen his will. In it there is no mention of the relationship that exists, but everything he possesses goes to 'John Payson, son of my old friend Henry Payson, deceased.' Even after his death, you were not to know. He has told me 1,000 times that it would wreck your life if you ever came to know. It was his will and I obeyed. Nothing could change him, nothing could break him. I never knew a man so set in his ways. But you could tell that by his face. And you, John, are like him in a good many ways. You never flinch, you never give in. Ah, how many times have I said to myself 'like father, like son.'"

"Like him in every way," said he bitterly. "Midthorne noticed it. He threw it in my face—he threw Adam Carr's face in mine. I shall never forget that. Nor shall I ever forget that I resented it more on Adam Carr's account than my own, strange as it may seem. You see, mother, I've known my real father all my life and I've loved him always."

"You must ask God to forgive you for the harsh, cruel things you said to him last night, before the stroke came," she said.

"God understands everything," said he. "My heart was full of misery. For the first time in his life, Adam Carr taunted me. He laughed at me when I commanded him to dispel the doubts my mind had fixed on."

"He was beside himself," she explained. "You were driving him too hard. I could see the sweat on his brow."

"He shuddered. "What a horrible thing it was! What a dreadful night!"

"It came upon him, even as he laughed. I—I wonder if God struck him for that." There was awe in the old woman's face.

"I wonder," he repeated after her.

The events of the preceding night may be chronicled in a few words.

Says Lovers Are Patronizing.

From Woman's Home Companion.

"We are all pretty well agreed, I think, that whatever days of happiness may come to us in later life, the most shining days of our girlhood are those in which love comes to us. No others quite compare with them, and no other experience of youth compares with this experience.

"We are under a kind of spell. We know that others have loved before, yet we think it unlikely any have ever loved quite as we love! We have heard much about love all our lives, have speculated about it since our early teens, have been eavesdropping at love scenes since we were allowed to read novels or see love plays, yet when the experience comes to ourselves it comes with a shock of surprise. It is so much more wonderful than anyone has told us, so much more beautiful than anyone has led us to believe. So we begin to imagine that no one has ever loved quite as we love. It is a world new-created in which we find ourselves, and a unique paradise, amazing and beautiful and ours alone. So, even though we try to hide it, we go about patronizing the world at large, and, even though we never speak of it, we bestow a kind of pity on all who are less fortunate in their love.

"Yet, however unique you or I may believe our particular experience to be, one fact stands out notable—love is old as the world is old; not this form of it nor that, not one particular experience of it or another, but love itself. And of love itself we know too little, oh, far too little, even those of us who believe that we love so exceedingly well!"

A minimum weekly wage of $8.50 for women over 18 years of age employed in department and other retail stores, is provided for in the report of the special board to the Minimum Wage Commission of Massachusetts.

Miss Grace Keller, of Lititz, Pa., has been a telephone operator for 30 years and is one of the oldest telephone operators in length of service in that state.

The first English newspaper is said to have appeared in 1620, when Dutch printers and booksellers began printing in Amsterdam news sheets in English for circulation in England.

NERVOUS COLLAPSE DUE TO WALL STREET BOOM

New York—The little devils of nervous prostration, camp followers of a great speculative army, have trooped into Wall street and are sniping the brokers and brokers' clerks. Hundreds of market operators and their aides are facing mental and physical collapse. They are making money faster than they can count it, but they are drawing sight drafts on health and are paying heavy interest.

Literally, Wall street has scarcely had time in the last week to sleep at home or change its service or to eat a leisurely meal. In a hurly burly of buying and selling, in a bedlam of excitement over the industrial stocks so aptly named "war brides," when nearly 7,500,000 shares of stock have driven through the market in the last five days, conditions have arisen which raise the question whether the rusty machinery of the market will stand the strain.

Already it is beginning to creak and groan. Men have collapsed, clerks have made mistakes costing thousands of dollars to their employers. Many firms are obliged to work their office forces night and day in two or three shifts. Some firms are a day behind in checking up trades.

Undoubtedly, the machinery of trading is superior to the machinery of 15 years ago, when there occurred the last speculative drive which can be compared to the present furious rush for sudden wealth. But for the last few years business was so poor in Wall street that nearly 5-11 of the firms cut down office forces, let many out by the wholesale, crimped and economized and took in sail. The rush finds them embarrassed for lack of ample forces of experienced clerks.

Men who lost their Wall street jobs in the dismal, lean days took root elsewhere, changed their habits, sobered down, perhaps, and are not willing, many of them, to venture back into the maelstrom.

The Horrors in Armenia.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Intrinsically almost incredible but on the whole so well attested as to leave scant room for unbelief are the stories coming in regarding the treatment of the Armenians by the Turks. Authenticated reports aver that nearly every day between June 24 and July 23 Turkish sailing vessels loaded to the gunwales with Christian Armenians left the port at Trebisond, in Asia Minor, and "when they had gone a few miles from the shore dumped their living freight in the sea." Out of a total population of not more than 1,500,000 it is estimated that at least 450,000 have already been put to death.

Said Pasha, a grand vizier, is declared to have remarked, "To get rid of the Armenian question it is necessary to get rid of the Armenians." This cynical philosophy seems to be the inspiration of the present debauch of savagery. The crime with which this Armenian population is charged and the crime to which it pleads guilty is Christian belief. For this crime blood is being shed on a scale which would have staggered Nero. The intention of the Turkish government is said to be summed up in the obliteration of the entire Armenian population.

It's Easy to Be a Back Number.

From the Columbus Dispatch.

One of the easiest things these swift moving days is to become a back number. A lawyer may school himself thoroughly in the knowledge of his profession, but if he is to win, he must continue his study there will be something for him to learn every day, and then he will wish for longer days in which to learn more. So with a physician, especially with a specialist. Every day is sure to add something to his particular science, and he must know it if he is to lead. What is true of these two professions of law and medicine is true of every profession and skilled employment. The knowledge, which is all the time accumulating, one must have as certainly as the carpenter must have his tools.

That is why it is so easy to become a back number. Keeping abreast of the knowledge peculiar to one's occupation is hard work and constant work but the reward is abundant for the man who thus exerts himself. Years may come to silver his hair, but he is still the master of his task and he will not be distanced by the newcomers in his field of endeavor. Moreover, his keen interest will keep him young, his continued success will conserve his health and he will serve better and live longer. Don't by any sort of a letdown run the risk of becoming a back number.

Spareribs.

From the Ohio State Journal.

In the domestic department of a newspaper we find a recipe for stuffed spareribs. We didn't read it. Anybody who thinks he can improve spareribs by stuffing them is mentally deranged. Spareribs are perfect in their own right. The idea of putting anything in them to improve their taste is on a level with painting a lily. In every really great food there is a far-away, indefinite taste, as dreamful and divine as the nectar of heaven that the soul sips at. The spareribs has it, and the man or woman who monkeys with that ineffable savor should be sentenced to a diet of hash. A spareribs is in a class by itself, and is endowed by nature with a delight of its own. It cannot be improved. It was created perfect. It is sacrilege to doubt its excellence or to question its pre-eminence.

The total land area of the nine provinces of Canada is placed at 1,401,316,413 acres. The area of farm land occupied in 1911 is 109,777,085 acres. It is estimated that within the boundaries of the nine provinces, as at present constituted, there is a total cultivable area of 440,951,000 acres.

A diminutive Detroit husband whose wife had haled him into court laughed long and loudly once he was safe in the prisoner's box. "My wife is outside the railing and I figure I can laugh at her now and be safe," he said when the magistrate asked the cause of his mirth. He also kicked his wife's toy dog, so there!

HOW THEY LOST THEIR HOME

From the Irish World.

Through the gambling instinct.
They let their insurance run out.
They bought things they did not need because they were cheap.
They did not use good judgment or right proportion in their expenditures.
They subscribed for everything they could pay for on the installment plan.
They did not realize how easy it is to get into debt and how hard it is to get out.
They tried to do what others expected of them rather than what they could afford.
They could not say "No" and could not tell their friends, "I cannot afford it."
They drew their money out of the savings bank to put it into some "wildcat" schemes and lost it.
They did not do business in a business way because they were dealing with relatives or friends.
They signed important papers without reading them or knowing their contents, just because they were asked to do so.
The extravagance of children who had not been trained to economize or to take care of their pennies swamped the home.
The mania to make an appearance beyond their means caused them to mortgage their property and ended in bankruptcy.
When the shoe began to pinch, they "really did not see where they could retrench." Habit had made luxuries seem necessaries.
They entertained too expensively and a great deal more than they could afford, because they wanted people to think they were in good circumstances.
Their efforts to force their daughters into society of those above them, in the hope that they might make "brilliant matches" involved them hopelessly in debt.

PUT ONE OVER ON BURGLARS

Industrious Safe Blowers Found Only Irritating Note Instead of Riches They Expected.

Burglars have been so busy cracking safes on the upper East side with dynamite, nitroglycerin and lyddite, that it is impossible for flat dwellers in that vicinity to keep pictures straight on the walls. The storekeepers have been touched so often that they are beginning to get wise. Instead of leaving the day's cash in their strongboxes, they are filling them up with coal and other uncommon things. A clerk in a hat store in that section of town, after removing the money from the safe at closing time, left a note inside of it. A pair of burglars spent a busy set of hours in the hat store, using sectional jimmies, "can openers" and every known device for successfully approaching the interior of the safe. When they had reduced the strongbox to a shredded iron biscuit they looked into its riddled heart and found this note: "Well, what's the idea?" That was all there was in the safe. It is assumed that the subsequent conversation was enough to explode the surplus nitroglycerin, but one of the annoyed felons took his indelible pencil in hand and wrote as follows: "You — — —, you can — — — and furthermore, — — — — —." Which, considering what their feelings were, was putting it mildly.—New York Times.

May Be New Industry for India.

New industries may be started in India as a result of the war. Hitherto India has exported large quantities of cotton waste to Germany. Since the outbreak of the war the expert has ceased and some of the captains of the mill industry are thinking how best to utilize the cotton waste. The waste was used in Germany to turn into coarse counts, which were used for manufacturing blankets, carpets and other such articles. Some of the mill agents are contemplating the importation of waste cotton plants so as to utilize the waste for the purpose of manufacturing blankets, carpets, etc., in India.

Its Offspring.

Luke, venturing into town for the first time, essayed to cross the street and was bowled over by an automobile. He lay in the roadway while the bystanders shouted at him to run. Presently a speeding motorcycle also hit Luke. Then he reached the curb.

"Why ain't you run when Ah tole you?" demanded a bystander.

"Go long, man," responded Luke indignantly. "Huccume you reckon Ah know dat contraption had er colt?"

Misunderstood.

"I hear they have an excellent curriculum at this school," said Uncle John, who was visiting his nephew at college.

"You bet your life we have," replied the nephew enthusiastically. "It's built of steel and concrete, and seats 20,000 people. Come over and I'll show it to you."

Different.

"Why don't you get married, old man? You know two can live cheaper than one."

"Not when the lady refuses to keep house and insists on living at hotels."

Temporarily Conspicuous.

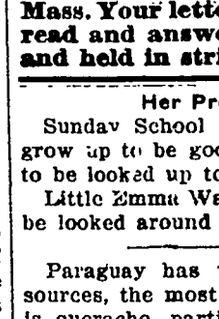
"What are war stocks?" inquired the lamb.

"War stocks," replied Mr. Dustin Stax, "are the securities which just now are taking the blame for the reckless speculation that people are always eager to indulge in."

One kind of a pessimist is a man who wonders whether another man's wife knows her husband half as well as he does.

MRS. THOMSON TELLS WOMEN

How She Was Helped During Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Philadelphia, Pa.—"I am just 52 years of age and during Change of Life I suffered for six years terribly. I tried several doctors but none seemed to give me any relief. Every month the pains were intense in both sides, and made me so weak that I had to go to bed. At last a friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I tried it at once and found much relief. After that I had no pains at all and could do my housework and shopping the same as always. For years I have praised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me, and shall always recommend it as a woman's friend. You are at liberty to use my letter in any way."—Mrs. THOMSON, 649 W. Russell St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to carry women so successfully through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

A MESSAGE TO ALL

Wesleyite Writes Letter For His Many Klemme Friends

It is impossible for us to write to all of our friends, so we are taking this method of getting a message to you. In the first place, Wesley has a people three large elevators, a five-room public school, three churches, three general stores, two hardware stores, two banks, two millinery shops, one furniture store, one jewelry shop, drug store, cafe, hotel and restaurant, garage, livery and garage combined, printing office, lumber yard, cream station, two implement houses, blacksmith and barber shops.

We are about settled in our new home. Have a fine eight-room parsonage and a nice large church on the same block. We are well satisfied with the outlook and feel that there is much to be done for the master here. The church was well filled at all of the services so far and have fine Epworth League and good Sunday school. Had twenty-five at the mid-week prayer meeting and this was below the average attendance. We have another church at Sexton. There are 100 people in the town, with a beautiful little church. The main auto pike runs from Wesley to Sexton. The country is not be much different to that around Klemme, while it seems a little flatter it is better tiled than the land there. The corn looks as good if not better than there

We have been lonesome and homesick for our dear, good friends at Klemme, but are getting acquainted now and feel quite at home Some of the young people will be glad to know that Frank Ward was at the services last Sunday evening He is only eight miles away.

We remain, Yours in the service of our Lord and Master,

ASH DAVIS, CARTOONIST

Mr. Davis' entertainment is one hour and a half long. He uses two easels, special paper 42 by 60 and draws with colors, making thirty to thirty-five pictures. Pictures are the universal language, and Ash Davis is the master of that language. His pictures talk, and their influence will be felt long after the day is forgotten. The fact that Mr. Davis was early thrown on his own resources gives him such a keen understanding of the boy problem that his entertainment is especially helpful to the young, making a strong appeal for the betterment of young manhood There is a meaning and a moral in his pictures, his humor is spontaneous, and the talk he gives with each picture blends so nicely that it leaves a good impression. His transformations are executed with lightning rapidity, so that the audience is not left wondering, and there is no suspense waiting to see a picture finished. The landscapes in colors are veritable works of art and would grace any parlor. While the creations of carpet rags are a distinct novelty and an entirely original idea with this artist, they give the effect of a beautiful painting in oil Mr. Davis says some people like ragtime music, but he prefers ragtime pictures, as he chooses to call them Public men as well as current events are often depicted on his canvas, and an evening spent with him is not only profitable and very instructive, but is entertaining as well.

ASH DAVIS

Ash Davis comes here as the second number of the Lecture Course next Friday evening, November 12th.

PICKS MAXWELL FROM BIG FIELD

Big Detroit Company Chosen for New Alliance by Klemme Auto & Light Co.

NEW CARS HANDSOME

Local Organization Enthusiastic Over Prospects for Big Business.

Formal ratification has reached this city of a contract whereby the Maxwell car is to be handled here by Klemme Auto & Light Co. This ratification was the conclusion of negotiations which had been informally closed some time ago.

By the terms of this arrangement, bringing as it does an active and ample organization to the Maxwell army, adequate representation for this popular-priced car is assured here. While the present contract runs for one year only, the solid permanence of the parties interested gives ground for the belief that relations will be of indefinite length of time. Such is, in fact, a characteristic feature of Maxwell agencies all over the country.

The entire organization of the new local Maxwell store is enthusiastic over the possibilities of the alliance.

"We took our time and looked over the whole field," said Mr. H. K. Stille, of the Klemme Auto & Light Co.

"We were out to pick, without the use of anything but cold common sense, the car that would make us the most money during the season of 1916, and indefinitely into the future. We believe we have gotten the best one in the Maxwell. While the dealer's margin of profit on a $655 car is small, the market is immense and the volume of sales assured, in case the car stands up and gives satisfaction. We know that the Maxwell will do this. The Maxwell cars of last year and the season before gained the reputation for [illegible] in the light car field. This year's car is handsomer, larger and more efficient than ever before, as we thoroughly convinced ourselves before signing our contract. Best of all, it fulfills in a gratifying way its legitimate heritage of sturdiness—a quality for which Maxwells have been famous for many years of motoring history.

"We have made ample arrangements for a service department, designed to keep every Maxwell car in our territory at its top efficiency all the time. In this detail we have been greatly helped by the factory organization which has developed a plan of supply to dealers that has shown itself adequate and prompt."

Maxwell demonstrating cars have already arrived at the local salesroom and a considerable shipment will be made soon from Detroit to take care of orders already booked.

HAS A PAYING DAIRY HERD

Loses Money in Beef Business; Now Making Money Out of Dairy

In 1893 Emmet Moore, of Emmet county, started in the beef business. In 1908 he found that he was no better off financially than he was when he started. By this time he had come to the conclusion that beef-raising was a gambler's game; that one year he would win and the next he would lose. Mr. Moore has fed as much as forty-five thousand bushels of corn to beef cattle in one year, so he was no small stock feeder.

After fifteen years of reverses in the beef business he decided that this part of the country was more suitable to dairying. Having reached the above conclusion, seven years ago, he started dairying with thirty head, composed of about 26 head of head of grade Holstein cows. Today he probably has the largest dairy herd in the state, numbering 190 pure-bred Holsteins and 164 head of grade Holsteins.

He has paid particular attention to the breeding of his cattle, and has recently purchased a young sire from J. B. Irwin, of Minneapolis. This bull's sire is King Korndyke Colatha Ormsby. His granddam is Colantha 4th Johanna. The average production of his six nearest dams is 24.63 pounds of butter in seven days. Two of these dams were world's record cows. 125 head of his cows are descendants of the famous Holstein bull, Paul Beets Dekol.

Mr. Moore has the foundation for the development of one of the best dairy herds in the country. That dairying is proving profitable to him is shown by the fact that he is constantly enlarging and building up his dairy herd. His income from cream alone will average $5,000 a year, cash. His cream checks from the Wallingford creamery run from $350 to $746 per month..

His equipment consists of 2 large barns that will stanchion 180 head of cows. He has three silos, of a total capacity of 710 tons.

Mr. Moore raises from 300 to 40 head of hogs each year, and the skim milk from the dairy herd is a big economic factor in the production of this pork. He has 24 acres of alfalfa, four acres of which is two-year-old planting, from which he cut this year 25 tons and 645 pounds in four cuttings. Mr. Moore is a firm believer in alfalfa as a profitable crop and as a feed for dairy cattle. He is constantly adding to his alfalfa acreage.

Mr. Moore believes that dairy farming increases the productivity of the soil 40 per cent. This is amply proved by the crops that are grown on Mr. Moore's farm. Mr. Moore is a great dairy enthusiast. He is president of the Wallingford creamery, and was instrumental in the building of a new $8,500 creamery there last fall.

The above information was given us by W. M. Kelly, of the De Laval Separator Company. He visited this great dairy farm recently, and was much impressed with its success.—Welch's Dairy Column in Algona Advance.

DEATH THE PENALTY FOR TWO SINNERS

Forest City Man Loved the Wrong Woman—Then She Murders Him.

Jim Coward was formerly a marshal and well respected citizen of Forest City. Some months ago he deserted his family, decamped and went to Canada. There it is said he lived with another woman who looked better to him than the one he had wedded. Time went on and one night he was murdered out in the shack he lived in with his paramour, far out on the prairie of British Columbia. Suspicion pointed strongly to the woman he was living with as the murderer. It was cold blooded murder, undoubtedly committed to get what money he had and then desert him. However the woman was sought far and near by the Canadian authorities. The offices of the Northwest Mounted police were brought into play and they traced the pair from Forest City up there. The trial of the woman took place last week. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty of murder. The woman was brought before the judge the next morning and sentenced to be hanged by the neck until she is dead, on Dec. 23. The woman swooned and fell to the floor. Canadian justice—or Canadian law—is sure and swift certainty. She is as good as a hanged woman. She tried to fix the crime on an Indian, but got mixed up in her testimony and her evidence fell flat. The way of these two transgressors has been hard.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

To feel your best day in and day out to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head, no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your druggist, it is inexpensive and almost tasteless except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel—like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water set on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

A system of long distance typewriting has been developed, and for more than a year a big telegraph company has been testing it. The sending operator uses a keyboard similar to that of an ordinary typewriter, and at the receiving end the message is typed out on a telegraph blank, thus obviating loss of time in transcribing it. The multiplex system is used and eight messages can be sent simultaneously over a single wire.

A surgeon who has been at work among wounded Cossacks in the present war reports that ashes, preferably obtained by burning wool or cotton cloth, are excellent for healing wounds. When bound over the injury with the bandage which every soldier is supposed to carry the ashes relieve pain and favor prompt healing. This treatment is said to be particularly effective in wounds inflicted by sabers and bayonets.

The most characteristic feature of the Swiss agricultural industry since the outbreak of the war, is the inclination in all parts of the country to a more diversified cultivation of the land, and the raising of more grains and vegetables instead of the one sided systems obtaining heretofore of hay, live stock, dairying and cheese making or of grapes and other fruits.

FORMER SIOUX CITYAN IS HELD FOR KILLING HIGH SCHOOL STUDENT

Fred Powers, Grocery Clerk at Cherokee, Fires Fatal Shot While Intoxicated.

Cherokee, Ia., Oct. 30.—Mural Conley, a high school student 17 years of age, who plays end position on the football team, was shot and killed last night, as the result of an altercation.

Fred Powers, formerly of Sioux City, recently employed in the Mains grocery here, is alleged by local officials to have fired the shot that killed Conley. It is claimed that Powers was intoxicated and got into an altercation with young Conley and some other students.

After the shooting Powers barricaded himself in a house, armed with two revolvers, and announced his intention to resist arrest. The situation loomed grave for a time and pointed to the possibility of further tragedies.

Powers finally was induced to surrender without a gun battle.

There is no evidence of any old grudge in this case, or of any special revenge motive, and the authorities think the shooting came about merely as the result of Powers losing all sense of reason through excessive anger and over indulgence in liquor.

EASTERN STAR GOES TO CEDAR RAPIDS IN 1916

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 30.—The Eastern Star grand lodge voted today to go to Cedar Rapids for the next session. Iowa City has extended an invitation for the convention in 1917.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Mrs. Maud Keyser, Cedar Rapids, grand worthy matron; Mrs. Fannie B. Hammill, Britt, grand associate matron; J. A. Henderson, Jefferson, grand worthy patron; Mrs. Care E. Hughes, Grinnell, grand secretary; Mrs. Ida A. Webster, Waucoma, grand treasurer.

The grand lodge is balloting this afternoon on associate grand conductress, which leads to the position of worthy matron. There are several candidates.

DES MOINES MAY SECURE NEXT BAPTIST CONVENTION

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Oct. 30.—In all probability Des Moines will be selected as the next meeting place of the Iowa Baptist association now in session here.

That there is a considerable class in the church whose ruling passion is the acquirement of wealth, was the declaration of the Rev. B. F. Fellman, of Des Moines, in the annual sermon today. Dr Fellman took the position that humility was the chief asset of the Christian man, and faith in the Supreme Being was absolutely necessary.

BUYS BACK OLD FARM AT INCREASE IN PRICE

Sioux Rapids, Ia., Oct. 30.—George Crick, residing one and one-half miles east of Sioux Rapids, has sold his 20-acre tract to C. H. Tyrrell, of this place, for $7,000. The improvements on the place are good, although eight acres of the farm is timber land, lying along the river. This place was the property of Tyrrell several years ago, and he is now buying it back at a big advance in price.

ASKS $15,000 DAMAGES FOR BED ROOM TRESPASS

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 30.—Claiming that the willful trespass of James Tucker into the bedroom of the plaintiff's wife shortly before the birth of her child was the immediate cause of her death and the subsequent death of the baby. Russell Green, a local barber, this afternoon filed suit against Tucker for $15,000 damages.

BUSINESS MEN SIFTING CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 30.—"There are 49 charitable organizations soliciting aid in Des Moines. Many of these do not turn over more than a small percentage of their collection to charity. Many of the people aided by the others are securing aid from four or five different sources at the same time."

Such was the declaration made yesterday by a prominent member of a committee of the chamber of commerce appointed to investigate the charitable organizations working in Des Moines and to approve a list of the worthy ones.

The committee met yesterday and after an afternoon's work had approved 17 of the 49 agencies in the city that make a practice of seeking donations from business men for charitable purposes. It was asserted yesterday that out of the 49 there would probably not be more than 20 approved.

IOWA PATENTS.

The following Iowans were granted patents Tuesday, October 26, as reported by the patent office of Milton S Crandall, Sioux City

Joseph Dain, Ottumwa, hay loader. Claus H. Light, Des Moines, Ia., electric signal. Robt. E. Lock, Lone Rock, seed corn case; John T. McKittrick, Fort Madison, penholder. Manning Meek, Cedar Rapids, hose coupling; Jas. W. Mott, Cresco, headlight turner for vehicle.

CRESTON—James E. Crisco, aged 50, a retired farmer, ended his life by hanging himself in his barn on his home place in Creston. Mrs. Crisco found the lifeless body when she went to call him to breakfast. Crisco had wound a rope several times about his neck after tying one end to a rafter and had then stepped from a box. His affairs were understod to be in excellent condition. There are no children.

MAPLETON—Eugene V Fuller died at his home on Mapleton Wednesday, after an illness of several months. He was 64 years old and had been a resident of Mapleton for nearly 30 years. Most of the time he was engaged in the grocery business. The Masonic order har charge of the funeral services here Thursday afternoon. The body was taken to Moravia, Ia., his old home, for interment.

AVOCA—Mrs. J. W. King, the farmer's wife who was shot Wednesday, is in a precarious condition. She made several ineffectual attempts to write a description of what occurred in her home when she was assaulted. Harry Roden, the young farm hand who admits shooting Mrs. King, is in jail in Council Bluffs.

CEDAR RAPIDS—Lyman Carpenter, aged 70, a civil war veteran and for several years an inmate of the soldiers' home at Marshalltown, cut his throat with a razor yesterday at the home of his sister at Walker. He died shortly after. Ill health is supposed to have made his discouraged.

CHEROKEE—Three would-be joy riders stole the Charles Banister delivery auto last evening and started south towards Holstein, running without lights. They ran the car off a bridge south of town, a drop of 10 feet. One had his back injured, others escaped with slight injuries.

RESOLUTIONS CLAIM LAWS ENDANGERED BY PROFESSIONALS

Recent Activities in Des Moines Arouse Commercial Club to Vigorous Protest.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 30.—That there is danger of the statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor being used for private gain by professional law enforcers at the expense of legitimate business is the opinion of the directors of the chamber of commerce, who yesterday passed resolutions severely condemning the methods employed in prosecutions recently begun against a large number of Des Moines druggists, for alleged violation of law in the sale of certain socalled soft drinks.

Members of the board of directors take the position that one or two suits would have served to test the question involved, and that there is nothing to be gained in the way of better law enforcement by the making of wholesale attacks, which pile up court costs and make possible the collection of a large number of fees instead of one.

It is urged in behalf of impartial law enforcement and community betterment that all liquor prosecutions be brought on their merits; that no compromises effected out of court be permitted and that cases brought on mere technalities be not countenanced.

Vigorous resolutions, covering these points, were adopted unanimously.

SLIGHT REDUCTION SHOWN IN IOWA BUTTER PRODUCTION

Des Moines Ia., Oct. 30.—Deputy Dairy Commissioner Ben C. Iliff has just completed totaling the returns from all of the creameries for the amount of butter made in the year from July 1, 1914, to July 1, 1915, and the total number of pounds is 89,584,796. The total amount of cheese was 704,463 pounds. This is a falling off in the total amount of butter of the preceding 12 months of 3,281,125 for in the 12 months ending July 1, 1914, the total amount of butter made by the creameries of Iowa was reported as 92,865,921.

This falling off is due, says Mr. Iliff, to the fact that the fall of 1914 was exceedingly dry and the lack of pasturage reduced the milk flow. The luxuriant pasturage of this summer season and fall will show on the report of next year as the dairy office computes its year from July 1 to July 1.

NEW CONSOLIATED SCHOOLS ARE FORMALLY DEDICATED

Alta, Ga., Oct. 30—Dedicatory exercises for the new schoolhouses in Highview and the Lincoln-Lee consolidated school districts were held yesterday. The Highview schoolhouse is located 11 miles northeast of Alta, and the Lincoln-Lee schoolhouse about six miles southeast of Rembrandt. Both buildings are of brick, handsomely appointed and conveniently arranged The speakers at the exercises were Gov. George W. Clarke, Assistant Superintendent of Public Instruction J A. Woodruff, County Superintendent Moeller, of Black Hawk county, and County Superintendent Harrison, of Buena Vista county, as well as Jens Miller, president of the Highview board and William Douglas, of the Lincoln-Lee board. Large crowds of people attended the exercises and partook of the banquet spread at each place. There are now four purely rural consolidated districts and four consolidated town districts in Buena Vista county, with two additional districts planned and soon to be voted upon

FIERCE STRUGGLE BEFORE FARMERS' WIFE WAS SHOT

Avoca, Ia., Oct. 30.—No reasonable explanation has been secured from Harry Roden for shooting Mrs. J W. King, his employer's wife. Roden, who is only 19 years of age, admits the shooting and claims that it followed a dispute with Mrs. King over two weeks' wages due him. The authorities doubt this explanation.

Mrs. King was shot in the back of the head, but managed to reach the home of Sam Bell, a neighbor. She regained partial consciousness last night but not sufficiently to give an account of the attack. It is not believed that she can recover.

After the shooting Roden fled from the place and was caught on the railroad track, headed for Walnut.

The overturned furniture in the King home, and other marks, indicate that a desparate struggle ensued before the woman was shot. Officers assume that King tried to assault her, during her husband's temporary absence. Meeting with resistance, they think, he shot her in the back of the head with the thought of covering his crime and then fled.

BARNEY SHIFTS BEATS OF PURE FOOD INSPECTORS

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 30.—W B. Barney, state dairy and food commissioner has announced a shakeup in the force of inspectors employed by the department. On or about November 15 the men will be shifted from their fixed districts to new territory where they will remain for a period of six or eight weeks.

The department believes that change of territory will disclose whether any of the inspectors have been overlooking certain establishments in the enforcement of the pure food laws. The inspectors are becoming known in their territory, the commissioner says. This is somewhat of a handicap to them in securing evidence against violators, in the commissioner's opinion.

CONSOLIDATED DISTRICT ESTABLISHED AT GALVA

Galva, Ia., Oct. 30.—At the special election of the proposed consolidated school district, composed of 31 sections in Ida and Sac counties, the voters polled 162 for and 32 against the proposition.

Two ballot boxes were used, the farmers voting as to whether they wished to consolidate with the town school, and the town voted as to whether they would permit the consolidation. The farmers' vote was 67 for, 24 against and 4 spoiled votes. The town vote was 95 for, 8 against and 2 spoiled; making in all 162 votes favoring the proposition, 32 opposing it, and 6 spoiled

EXPENSES OF $90,000 TO PAY $25,000 IN LOSSES

Denison, Ia., Oct. 28.—Policyholders in this county of the Federal Insurance company, Des Moines, met and decided to resist payment of the recent assessment. At the meeting the courtroom was crowded. Senator Caswell, of this district, took active interest in the proceeding and was made secretary of the meeting. The chief cause for the remontrances comes from the showing of $90,000 in expense for doing business. The losses are only one-fourth that amount.

BOONE COURT RULING AFFECTS FEES DRAWN BY COUNTY ATTORNEY

Refund Ordered of 10 Per Cent Commission Taken on Fines in Liquor Cases.

Boone, Ia., Oct. 29.—In a test case which was tried before Judge Wright here, in which the board of supervisors of this county were the plaintiffs, and Fred E. Hansen, county attorney, was defendant, the court made a ruling which if upheld by the supreme court, will make a considerable difference in the fees received by county attorneys for prosecutions in liquor cases. In his ruling Judge Wright held, that the county attorney is not entitled to a 10 per cent commission of the fine collected in liquor cases and orders Mr. Hansen to refund to the county treasurer the sum of $81 which the court holds was not due him as his commission. The matter is one over which there has been considerable misunderstanding, and after Joseph E. Wall, chief clerk of the department which examines county accounts, made the examinaion in this county, the matter was brought up as a test case.

The court held that in contempt and equity cases the county attorney is entitled to 10 per cent, but convictions in criminal action entitle him only to 1¢ per cent of the first $200, 5 per cent of he next $300, and 3 per cent of the next $500 and 1 per cent of all over $1,000. Mr. Wall also discovered that the commissions had been paid from the fines. The constitution provides that all fines of this character shall go to the school fund and for that reason the commission to the county attorney must be paid out of the general fund.

LITTLE CORN HUSKING IN VICINITY OF ESTHERVILLE

Esthervlile, Ia., Oct. 29.—Before the first killing frost that occurred here the Emmet country crop correspondent for the state as well as for the federal report placed the corn crop in his territory at a 50 per cent yield. Because of damage done by the recent freeze his next report will show a much lower figure, probably not more than one-third of a normal crop. Talking about the corn in this county he said he knew of only two fields of good corn. Hundreds of acres in this section have already been consumed by the system of "hogging down." The animals eat cob and all and some farmers declare that it is necessary for a hog to work about 10 hours a day at steady eating to keep its appetite satisfied Certain it is that there will be no corn husking season in this part of the country not a real husking season. Many farmers do not purpose putting an ear into their cribs. There are many silos in this section, however, and a good sized herd of shoats on nearly every farm. One farmer whose corn is much better than the average expects to hire two men to husk his crop and throw it into the driveway in his crib. While this is being done he will sort it by hand, throwing the best in the crib on one side and the remainder on the other

CITY REPUDIATES AGREEMENT MADE BY COMMERCIAL CLUB

Des Moines, Ia Oct. 29 —Five attorneys are battling in oral arguments before the Iowa supreme court today in the case of the city of Fort Dodge, appellant vs. Fort Dodge Telephone company. The question to be determined is whether the telephone company can discard a franchise fixing the maximum rates.

The telephone company contends that it is not legally bound by the franchise because the Commercial club of the city consented to waiving it so that rates for service could be increased With this understanding the company invested $65,000 in improvements.

The officials of Fort Dodge say that the city is not bound by the act of the Commercial club, and that the people of the city did not consent to annulling the franchise

The second big case scheduled to be argued orally today is that of James Sultzbach vs. Frank Smith, appellant. The case was appealed from the Webster county district court. In this action the question to be determined is whether a parent who owns an automobile is responsible for the damage done by a minor child who goes joy riding in the family car, without permission

COMMITTEEMAN SELECTED AT PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 29.—The national committeeman for Iowa will be elected by the voters for the first time at the presidential primary on April 10. The republican national committeeman at present is John T. Adams of Dubuque. He has held the position for the last four years. Whether he will become a candidate is not definitely known. Unless the republicans are restored to national power the position is not important.

FORMER IOWA CHIEF JUSTICE DIES AT LONG BEACH, CAL.

Long Beach, Cal., Oct. 27.—Charles T Granger, former chief justice of the Iowa supreme court, died here yesterday, aged 80. He retired in 1900, after having served on the Iowa circuit, district and supreme benches since 1872. He was a former resident of Waukon, Allamakee county, Iowa.

A Missoula (Mont.) woman leaped from a high bridge into a river, only to be carried downstream to a place where the water was only knee deep, where she was rescued.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

AUTO DRIVER CRAZED AS RESULT OF FATAL WRECK

Algona, Ia., Oct. 28.—Miss Irma Phillips was killed and Chris Gelhans seriously injured when the car in which they, with three other young people, were riding turned over about a mile and a half northwest of Ledyard, Ia. The nut cap struck Miss Phillips' head, crushing her squll and killing her instantly.

Young Gelhans' left arm was broken in two places and his right arm so badly wrenched as to be rendered useless. The shock and fright that followed temporarily bereft him of his reason. When he pulled himself free from the wreckage he fled to his father's home a half mile away and from there dragged himself, after becoming so weak he could not walk, into a corn field for another half mile.

Three other girls besides Miss Phillips were in the car, but none of them was hurt. They were Misses Alma and Tillie Brand and their cousin, Miss Clara Brand. They were thrown clear of the car and with the aid of persons from a nearby farm house lifted the overturned auto from Miss Phillips' body.

The occupants of the car were all children of farmers living near Ledyard, a small town in the north part of Kossuth county.

Mason City, Ia., Oct. 26.—Several auto accidents in which a number of people had very narrow escapes and two persons were injured, occurred in this city and near here.

Wilbur Durant, a cripple, traveling in a wheeled chair, was hit by an auto driven by Miss Rose Dale, a Clear Lake girl, and badly bruised.

Bert Cookman, a forman at the National Clay works, had a foot broken when struck by the auto of George Penson, of this city.

The car of M. J. Lyons, a local laundry owner, with three passengers, turned over on the Clear Lake paved road. No one was injured.

A touring car carrying 10 persons overturned on the Rockwell road, but no one was hurt.

Carroll, Iafl., Oct. 26.—Chicago & Northwestern train No. 6 yesterday afternoon bore down on Dr. B. C. Kelley's automobile at the Main street crossing while the doctor was on his way to the hospital with a patient. The confusion of signals caused the doctor to stop directly on the crossing. The occupants escaped without injury. The auto was damaged considerably.

ALDERMAN'S WIFE KILLS LITTLE GIRL WITH AUTO

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—Helen Davidson, a bright little girl, 5 years of age, was struck and killed yesterday afternoon by an automobile driven by Mrs. Fred German, wife of a Des Moines councilman. Mrs. German was motoring with her own little girl when the accident occurred. The little Davidson girl, who had just finished an afternoon nap, was running across the street to join a playmate. She emerged from behind a wagon loaded with tile when she was struck by the German car, going at a moderate speed.

COURT DIRECTS VERDICT IN MANSLAUGHTER CASE

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 28.—Criminal Judge Dudley late yesterday directed a verdict for the defendant in the case of the state against 19-year-old Ira Miller, charged with manslaughter. The court's action came after Attorneys Miller and Wallingford had argued four hours. The contention of the defense was that the state's evidence did not show conclusive whether Mrs. Guy O. Daggy was killed near Ankeny a year ago by Miller's automobile or by the one driven by his cousin, Roy Wagner.

The case has attracted wide attention throughout the country. It was begun in the May term of court this year but continued after a "jury scandal" had been started by persons who claimed to know about a $2,000 slush fund. The matter was dropped later after a grand jury investigation failed to produce any material results.

Mrs. Daggy was killed in an auto accident on August 29, 1914. She was in a buggy with her husband when the Miller machine crashed into the vehicle. A second later the Wagner car swept by and is alleged to have struck the woman.

FIRE DESTROYS CHURCH ON EVE OF STATE CONVENTION

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Oct. 28.—On the eve of the state Baptist association convention, which opens meetings here Wednesday, the First Baptist church, where the sessions were to have been held, was completely destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. Fanned by a strong wind from the north, firemen were unable to subdue the flames, although all seven companies fought the blaze for over an hour. The church was built in 1892, and cost, with furnishings, about $60,000. Only $25,000 of insurance was carried.

FIRE DAMAGES PLANT OF DES MOINES DAILY NEWS

Des Moines Ia., Oct. 28.—The plant of the Des Moines Daily News was damaged to the extent of $35,000 and the G. R. Kinney shoe store sustained $10,000 loss in a fire that started in the Daily News stock room at 6:15 o'clock last night. The Daily News loss is covered by insurance and the paper will be able to issue today, according to E. S. Fentress, business manager.

SUICIDE EPIDEMIC AMONG FARMERS IN UNION COUNTY

Creston, Ia., Oct. 28.—The third suicide by well known farmers of this section within less than a week occurred Monday when John Veach, aged 38, a prominent farmer residing on the Fouchech farm north of Spaulding, killed himself by swallowing poison.

Veach's act is inexplicable to his family and neighbors, all of whom held him in the highest esteem. He was married about 18 months ago and the family, now including a four months' old daughter, was regarded as one of the happiest in the community.

PERRY—The Rev. E. M. Jones, a retired pastor of the United Brethren church, who formerly held pastorates at Glidden, Van Meter, Scranton and Gray, died at his home in this city Friday night. He was 78 years of age and had been living a retired life here for many years.

GERMANY CONSERVING HER SUPPLY OF MEAT

Extreme Measures Taken—No Restrictions on Use in Private Homes.

London, Nov. 1. German newspapers publish the schedule prepared by the German federal council in pursuance of the decision to restrict consumption of meat. The schedule as forwarded by Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent is as follows:

Monday and Thursday Restaurants shall not serve fish, fowl or dishes cooked in lard, bacon or drippings.

Tuesday and Fridays Butchers shall sell no fresh or cooked meats.

Saturdays Pork shall not be sold.

Thus far the federal council has placed no restrictions on cooking of meats in homes.

FRANCE ABANDONS ALL PARTY LINES

Every Political Element Is Represented in the New Coalition Cabinet Headed by Briand.

Paris, Nov. 1. A new French cabinet, headed by Aristide Briand as premier and minister of foreign affairs came into existence today. This is the first time in the history of the French republic that there has been a coalition ministry of all the opposing parties and factions. It follows hotly on the recent innovation of forming a British coalition cabinet of conservatives and liberals.

The action taken today in forming the cabinet will be the culmination of a deep popular sentiment that at the supreme crisis of the war party division should give way to united action by all the parties in common support of the government. As the result of the cabinet of Rene Viviani, being a representative of only a few groups, the ministers presented their collective resignations and President Poincare immediately charged M. Briand with the formation of a new organization combining all elements.

The resulting coalition is remarkable in personnel including such venerable figures as Charles de Freycinet, who was one of Gambetta's aides in the upheaval of 1870, Jules Meline, former premier who instituted the protective system of France, and Leon Bourgeois, who is known as the grand old man of the radical party which has the largest membership in parliament.

The modern element is represented by conspicuous leaders of all the political groups of the country. Thus the new coalition brings together France's elder and younger statesmen and in personnel represents all the history of modern France since the fall of Napoleon III. The new cabinet also is notable in having the popular military leader, General Gallieni, as the head of the war office and Rear Admiral la Caze head of the ministry of marine, both of them replacing civilians.

Striking Changes.

The extent of the coalition is shown by the following representation:

The radical party is represented by M. Bourgeois, a former premier, M. Combes, a former premier, and Rene Renoult, one of the foremost parliamentary leaders of the party.

The republican socialists have as members M. Briand, M. Viviani and Professor Painleve.

The socialist group is represented by Jules Guesde, who has been the socialist head since the death of Jean Leon Juares and by Marcell Sembat and Albert Thomas, prominent socialist leaders.

The democratic left has as members Gabriel Guisthau and Joseph Thierry, while the radicals left has Etienne Clementel as its representative.

The royalist and clerical element is represented by Denis Cochin.

This embraces all the parties and groups in parliament which for years has been arrayed against each other.

Freycinet, Melin and Alexandre Ribot belong to the old school of moderate tendencies and are not identified with any of the parliamentary groups.

The designation of Jules Cambon, former ambassador at Washington, Madrid and Berlin, as secretary general to the minister of foreign affairs, is another innovation in the new cabinet, as it places an ambassador of wide experience for the first time in responsible direction of foreign questions.

BRITISH KING SAID TO BE MUCH BETTER

His Majesty Is Thought to Be Progressing Satisfactorily—Hurts Not Serious.

London, Nov. 1. King George, who was injured on Thursday by being thrown from his horse while reviewing troops in the field continues to improve. An official statement issued today, says:

"The king's condition shows further improvement. There has been some sleep and the pain is diminishing. Temperature and pulse are normal."

J. P. MORGAN UNDER KNIFE FOR APPENDICITIS

New York, Oct. 29.—J. P. Morgan underwent an operation for appendicitis at his country home at Glencove, Long Island, today. The operation was reported successful and Mr. Morgan is resting comfortably.

Mr. Morgan was at his office Wednesday, but was indisposed yesterday and remained at his Glen Cove home. His physicians discovered he was suffering from a mild attack of appendicitis. In order to guard against a recurrence, the physicians decided to remove the financier's appendix.

So far as could be learned, today's operation is in no way the result of the shooting of Mr. Morgan by Frank Holt at Glen Cove on July 3 last.

LINER HESPERIAN SUNK BY TORPEDO

Washington, Nov. 1.—Secretary Lansing announced today that the navy department had definitely established the fact that the fragment of the engine of war which sank the Allan liner, Hesperian, was a part of a torpedo.

The German government has persistently denied that the Hesperian was torpedoed. In the opinion of United States naval experts, the fragment could not have been a part of a marine mine.

Secretary Lansing said the result of the navy department's investigation would be immediately communicated either to the German government directly or to Ambassador Bernstorff.

Plans Not Known.

The secretary volunteered no information regarding what form the communication to the German government might take. Germany has made to the United States disclaimor of responsibility for the sinking of the Hesperian. In a note to Ambassador Gerard on September 14, the foreign office said that on the face of the evidence then at hand Germany was satisfied that the Hesperian was not sunk by a German submarine.

The fragment of metal examined by the navy department experts was said to have been picked from the deck of the Hesperian after the explosion. The Hesperian sank early in September off the Irish coast while making her way to port after having been disabled by the explosion. The fragment was sent to the state department by the American embassy at London.

The state department heretofore had been in doubt regarding the direct cause of the sinking of the Hesperian. A number of affidavits from passengers and officers of the ship have been received by the state department. The signers swore that the ship had been torpedoed.

DISAGREEMENT PROBABLE IN FARRAR MURDER CASE

Aberdeen, S. D., Oct. 30.—The jury in the trial of James Schmidt, charged with the murder of Ross Farrar, had not reported a verdict at noon today. It is claimed the jury stands eight for acquittal, two for conviction of murder in the first degree and two for manslaughter. A disagreement is deemed probable.

WILSON AND FIANCE TO INSPECT SUMMER HOME

Washington, Oct. 30.—President Wilson and Mrs. Norman Galt, fiance, plan to visit the new summer White House, Shadow Lawn, near Long Beach, N. J., next week. The president will go to New York to speak before the Manhattan club, Thursday night. Mrs. Galt will not accompany him, but will join him in New York, Friday morning, and go to inspect the residence which has been selected for their summer home. They will return to Washington that evening.

$100,000 FIRE LOSS IN CHEMICAL FACTORY

Sofia, (via London), Oct. 30.—Lewis Einstein, the first American minister credited solely to Bulgaria, presented his credentials today.

GENERAL WAR STAFF SOUGHT BY BRITAIN

Newspapers Say England Is Relying Too Much Upon Earl Kitchener.

London, Nov. 1.—Simultaneously with the newspaper demands for a smaller cabinet which apparently resulted in Permier Asquith's adopting as a compromise the constitution in definite form of an inner war council, there has arisen in various influential quarters an advocacy of creation of a general staff on the German plan.

The Weekly Nation, in an article on this subject says it believes the lack of such a body has been responsible for all the graver errors of the war. It points out that the German general staff is placed even above the greater commands in the fighting armies and is in a word the brains of the German army.

The Nation adds that such a staff was suggested by Lord Haldane, former minister of war, after conferences with the ablest heads in the army, but that "unfortunately on the outbreak of the war, Earl Kitchener dissipated and destroyed it and from that moment the government relied on the single initiative of Kitchener."

The Nation concludes by stating that it is high time to reconstitute the general staff "not as a makeshift, but as an established center of the great thought that the army and navy can command."

URGE REMOVAL OF BRAND WHITLOCK

German Newspaper Challenges Government to Ask That American Minister Be Recalled.

London, Nov. 1.—The Vossische Zeitung, says a dispatch to the Exchange Telegram company, from Amsterdam, challenges the German government to ask Washington to recall the American minister at Brussels, Brand Whitlock.

"The recent Cavell case," says the Vossische Zeitung, "must be utilized as occasion to put an end to Mr. Whitlock's activities, he being a minister accredited to Havre (the present seat of the Belgian government), and not to Brussels. If America desires a representative in Brussels, she must send someone agreeable to the German government."

UNCLE SAM HAD CHANCE TO BACK JAPAN'S PLAN

Peking, Oct. 30.—The Japanese government on October 16 communicated to the entente powers and the United States a request that they act with it in attempting to bring about postponement of a change in the form of the Chinese government. The United States and France abstained from participation in the steps taken at Peking by Japan, Great Britain and Russia. The situation is causing much speculation among Chinese officials, some of whom express the belief that France and the United States are not willing to follow Japanese leadership in oriental politics.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 30.—Secretary Lansing declined to discuss the nature of Japan's request that the United States support a general representation to China advising against any change in her form of government.

VILLA-CARRANZA ARMIES IN CLASH

Skirmishing Has Begun Along the Border—Great Decisive Battle Imminent.

Douglas, Ariz., Oct. 30.—Villa's main army was reported today by General Calles to have been located at Corral De Pablos, on the San Bernardino river, about 25 miles southeast of here. General Calles said he did not expect an attack until tomorrow or Monday. Villa authorities sent word today to United States officials here that 15 Americans held by Villa troops at El Tigre and Cananea, Sonora, were safe and would not be harmed. The message said that the Americans probably would reach the border tomorrow, traveling in wagons.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1.—Skirmishing between Villa and Carranza forces near Agua Prieta were reported today by Major General Funston.

Three hundred Villa troops were attacked at Cabrillona by a garrison patrol and forced to retreat to Anavaeachi pass west of Agua Prieta.

The main Villa army camped last night on the banks of the San Bernardino, 15 miles from Slaughter's ranch. Information in the possession of General Funston led him to believe that the army today would march to a point 12 miles east of Agua Prieta. The attack, he said, probably will be from the east.

The position of main Villa force was satisfactory to officials of the war department for the reason that, barring accidents, the entire force of Carranza troops now being transported through American territory, will have crossed the border to Agua Prieta before night.

Conditions at Cananea were reported improved. General Urbalejo, the Villa commander, it was said, had promised to protect railroad and copper company property here, upon the condition that work be resumed at the earliest possible moment.

SUPPRESS MEXICAN HERALD; PROSECUTE MADERO SLAYERS

Galveston, Tex., Oct. 30.—According to advices received by the Carranza representative here, the Mexican Herald, of Mexico City, a consistent antagonist to the revolution and warm supporter of Huerta, was suppressed last night by constitutionalist authorities.

Through the same channel comes information that prosecution of persons implicated in the assassination of Francisco Madero and Pino Sourarez is being continued.

State department advices today announced the arrival of General Carranza at Piedras Negras yesterday, and said that it is reported the Villa authorities have been confiscating cattle in small numbers in the vicinity of Nogales.

"It is stated," the department announced, "that there is one port 70 miles from Nogales, through which cattle could be exported to the United States and that General Calles, who is in control of the forces of the de facto government, has been approached by cattlemen for permission to export. This, however, has been refused by General Calles on the ground that no permits can be given until the entire region is under the control of the de facto government.

"Conditions are reported quiet at Torreon.

"Official advices state conditions at Cananea are not so serious as have been reported. The officials of the Cananea Copper company at Douglas, Ariz., have received information that quiet and order prevail at Cananea and that the report of looting there was false. Reports state that impression prevails that there will be no trouble at that point if the sale of alcoholic liquors is controlled."

In some parts of Switzerland granite is so plentiful that it is used for telegraph poles.

RUMANIA IS SAID TO BE ON EVE OF JOINING ENTENTE

Germans, Austrians and Bulgarians Are Closing In, Endeavoring to Cut Off Lines of Retreat.

RUSSIAN TROOPS ON WAY

Transports, Convoyed by Fleet, Sail From Odessa and Sebastopol to Attack Bulgar Coast.

Athens, Nov. 1.—(via London.)—The favorable attitude which Rumania is reported to have adopted toward the entente allies is engagstaff. A definite outcome of the Greek government and general staff. A definite outcome of the negotiations of the entente powers at Bucharest is awaited anxiously.

London, Nov. 1.—The position of Serbia is becoming more desperate daily. Nish is threatened by the Bulgarians, while the Austrians and Germans are gradually opening the way toward the great Serbian arsenal at Kraguyevatz. Rome reports that the Serbian capital has been removed to a "certain point."

According to the latest official reports from Sofia, the Serbians are in retreat in a westerly direction all along the Bulgarian front. Unofficial dispatches state that a Bulgarian officer commanding an advance patrol has dined with the Austro-German staff. The Bulgarians assert that they are in possession of Negotin, Braza Palanka, Zajecar, Knjajevats and several villages in the Timok valley, which gives them a strategical position of primary importance.

The complete capture of Pirot is now claimed by the war office at Sofia, which says the Bulgarians, after storming the southern fortifications penetrated the town where night put an end to the fighting.

Plan To Cut Off Retreat.

The Germans are advancing from the north, the Bulgarians from the east, and the Austrians from the west, apparently with the object of cutting off the retreat of the main Serbian army in the north. The Serbians are expected to make a deadly resistence to the very last then attempt to retire in the mountains along the Montenegrin frontier and in that country.

The Austrians hope to forestall this retreat by attacking the Montenegrins who, under the leadership of their valiant veteran king, are making a stubborn resistence. So far they have beat off all attempts to force their line and are still holding some positions in Austrian territory.

French Hold Strumitza.

With the exception of the unoffical report that the French are now firmly in possession of Strumitza, no news has been received concerning the military movements of the entente allies of the Balkans.

From Bulgarian sources admissions have been received that the seaports recently bombarded suffered severely. A Bucharest dispatch says that Russian troops have set sail from Odessa and Sebastapol for the Bulgarian coast.

Large contingents of Russian troops have set sail from the Black sea ports of Odessa and Sebastopol for the Bulgarian coast, the Berlin Tageblatt says.

Russians on the Way.

The dispatch telegraphed to the Tageblatt from Bucharest says that the transports are convoyed by a strong squadron. The recent attack by Russian warships on the Bulgarian port of Varna, according to this account, was made in preparation for an attempt to land troops.

Rumania May Join.

The Hestia, of Athens, says it has learned from a diplomatic source that there are indications Rumania will accept the proposals of the entente allies for joining with them. It is highly probable, the newspaper says, that Russian forces concentrated on the Rumanian frontier will pass through Rumania to go to the assistance of Serbia.

The entente powers, it is said, intend to satisfy Rumania's ambitions, including her desire for territory in Russian Bessarabia.

Along the other fronts severe fighting is reported without decisive results. An important struggle is in progress on the Austro-Italian line. Vienna reports Italian attacks were repulsed after a sanguinary struggle.

by a Bulgarian infantry attack of the most desperate character. The Bulgarians were often obliged to climb on all fours up steep slopes to Serbian positions. The attacking parties shortly before noon carried all the Serbian defense.

The Bulgarian artillery did most effective work. Its fire was said to have been the worst they ever suffered and compelled the remaining Serbians to surrender.

Reaching the summit the infantry did such effective work with the bayonet that the Serbians, who were still inclined to fight held up their hands quickly. It is asserted that the Bulgarians losses were slight, in view of the magnitude of the action.

GERMANS DESPERATELY TRY TO RETAKE LAST TRENCHES

Paris, Oct. 30.—French progress last night at Bois En Hache and the repulse of a German attack this morning near Souchez are set forth in the official announcement given out by the French war office this afternoon.

The text of the communication follows:

"In the Artois district last night we made progress at Bois En Hache and occupied a section of the enemy's trenches.

"To the southeast of Souchez the Germans this morning undertook an attack in the vicinity of hill No. 140. They were repulsed by a curtain of fire from the French machine guns.

"In the Champagne district the fighting still is going on in the vicinity of the position known as 'La Courtine,' with the greatest ferociety. On four different occasions the enemy has deavored to recapture from us the trenches we took possession of yesterday. These four counter attacks all failed completely before the energetic resistance of our troops, who were successful everywhere in retaining the advances made.

"There has been no other important action on the remainder of the front."

Why Pay the Peddler or Canvasser Twice These Prices?

You can save a good deal of money by buying your stock tonic at this store, instead of paying the peddler big, fancy prices for goods of unknown quality. Look at these prices for that old reliable and guaranteed stock conditioner and worm expeller——

Dr. Hess Stock Tonic
25-lb. pail costs $1.60
100-lb. sack costs $5.00

Why pay the peddler twice these prices? Dr. Hess Stock Tonic is highly concentrated and will go as far as any preparation, no matter what price you pay. Dr. Hess & Clark, of Ashland, Ohio, manufacturers of the famous Dr. Hess line, do not have to pay for expense of horse, wagon and peddler; that's the reason they can sell their products to you through this store at rock-bottom prices. You can get your money back right here if any Dr. Hess preparations doesn't do what is claimed for it.——

Elbert Bede Says:

A married man whose pocket is picked by a woman seldom has her arrested.

There are always a lot of fellows who would like to see the man at the top fall off.

It is better to die unknown in this world than to be known because of your mistakes.

There can be no such word as fail for the man who refuses to sell his honor for success.

There is one time in a woman's life when she likes to hear the right man talk business.

Sometimes a man will behave better if a wife keeps a nice baseball bat around the house.

They call it fiction because, according to it, all married couples live happily ever afterward.

Yes, dear, that bib around the baseball catcher's neck is to keep the fowls from scratching him.

Greatness is the simplest thing in the world—simple and natural or else it would not be greatness.

The man who dies on the field of action escapes a lingering death from idleness and hot biscuit.

No, dear, a taxidermist is not a man who collects the taxes. He is the man who taxes the collectors.

Some people are never so happy as when they are advising their friends to take some kind of medicine.

The fleeting scent of perfume is sweeter and more pleasing than the aromatic continuance of it

It is better to have loved and lost than to have loved and won just enough to break into the divorce court

Happy is the man who has a decent business, who pursues it decently and who lives honestly off the profits it brings

When a man has reached the age of sixty-five and can eat mince pie with immunity from pain his life has been a success.

All that a lover needs to make Heaven complete after the wedding ceremony is over to discover that his wife has warm feet.

When a man has so lived that the residents of his town are glad of him every time one poisons a dog, it is safe to assume that he has lived in vain.

As for me, I don't care whether a man's grandfather was on the bench as a judge or a cobbler, so long as the man himself is right

Few young men who ask for kisses ever get them. The bee does not ask the flower for its honey. He simply sips from the petals before the flower can dodge.

At twenty-one a man starts in to reform the world. At thirty he has his doubts about it. At forty he decides the world can't be reformed. At fifty he is busy hanging on by his eyebrows and letting the world reform him.

RUTH CAME ALONG

"These thermos bottles are a great thing," said Ruth's friend, while they were preparing lunch for a nutting party, "but there is one trouble; after the cork has been used for a time, I can't keep it sweet enough to keep it from tainting the milk. I have boiled it and done everything I can think of to prevent this, but it still gives me trouble."

"I think I know how that may be prevented," suggested Ruth, "I have heard that if the cork is wrapped in waxed or paraffin paper it will solve the difficulty. The waxed paper can be removed and replaced whenever necessary, and the cork will at no time come in contact with the fluid in the bottle. It is a great deal easier than buying a lot of corks and trying to change them all the time, for you never can keep track of the corks that have been used."

"I'll try that at once," gleefully replied her friend. "I might have known that you would come to my rescue."

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court of Hancock County, Iowa,
December Term, A. D. 1915

ELYN B. ANDREW, Plaintiff

vs.

Unknown Claimants of and to the North-West Quarter and the West Half of the North-East Quarter of Section 8, in Township 97 N., R 25 West of the 5th P. M., Hancock County, Iowa, and Andrew Wilson Jr., Mrs. Andrew Wilson Jr., wife of Andrew Wilson Jr., Andrew Wilson and Eliza J. Wilson, Defendants.

To the above named Unknown Claimants and Defendants:—

You are hereby notified that on or before the 25th day of November, A. D. 1915, the petition of the above named plaintiff, Elyn B. Andrew, will be on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock County, Iowa, claiming that he is the absolute owner in fee simple of the North-West Quarter and the West Half of the North-East Quarter of Section Eight, in Township Ninety-Seven North, Range Twenty-Five West of the 5th P. M., in Hancock County, Iowa, and that he and his grantors have been in the continuous, notorious, open, peaceable and adverse possession of the said premises for more than twenty years last past with claim of right and color of title, that Andrew Wilson Jr is same as Andrew Wilson, and that when the said Wilson made conveyance of said land he conveyed the said premises rather than land in Hancock County, Ohio, and asking that the defendants and all persons claiming by, through or under them be barred from having any right or title to said premises adverse to the plaintiff and that title thereto be quieted in plaintiff.

You are further notified that unless you appear thereto and defend on or before noon of the second day of the next Term of the District Court to be commenced and held at Garner, Hancock County, Iowa on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1915, default will be entered against you and decree rendered thereon as prayed

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and in very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While obliging enough and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trou-

THE STREET CORNER SAGE

"I've played a lot of checkers in my time," remarked the Sage the other afternoon as he sat watching two men moving the wooden disks across the red and black board.

"I uster be counted the best they wuz in this part of the country, an' I wuz jest thinkin' as I seen yew fellers making a lot of mistakes in that 'are game that I reckon I'd be purty nigh able to hold my own yet.

"I recollect one feller that come tuh town one time 'at claimed to be a champeen checker player of the state. Nothin 'd do the boys 'sept fer me to play 'im. I beat him seventeen straight games an' it made him so alfired mad he quit. Wus'nt but one game he even got a king."

A well dressed stranger who was watching the game with considerable interest glanced patronizingly at the speaker

"I use to be somewhat of a checker player myself," he said, "and I've heard a lot about you old timers. I'd like to play you a few games, Uncle, just for the sake of getting a few pointers, and I'll guarantee you I won't get angry if you beat me."

The Sage looked at his watch with a nervous expression

"I gotta go home now an' carry in the coal," he explained, as he hurried toward the door.

TRAMP DOWN THE SILAGE

Silage should be tramped down every day for two or three weeks after being ensiled, says the dairy husbandry department of Iowa State college. This closes the air spaces that allow the growth of poisonous moulds After the first few weeks the tramping should be continued two or three times a week for several months. If the corn has been cut late and placed in the silo when very dry, it is advisable to water the silage on top to aid in packing.

ADVISE FARMERS TO SORT CORN

Big Difference in Price Between High Grade and Low Grade Corn Warrants Sorting of the Crop.

"It will pay big to sort all corn that does not contain over one-fourth soft ears," says P. C. Taff of the extension department of Iowa State college. "Under the present system of market grading, 4 damaged ears in a bushel will make otherwise No. 2 corn grade No. 3, while 10 ears or 10 per cent bad corn will make it No. 5 corn"

Mr. Taff gives this advice after a thorough study of the corn situation throughout the state. He says there will be a big difference in price between high grade and low grade corn because of the scarcity of the former, hence the advisability of sorting.

Sorting can best be done by building a platform several feet wide on the side of the crib, on which a load or more of corn can be shoveled by the huskers. The owner can then shovel this corn into the crib between loads and sort it as he does so. This does away with depending upon hired help for this important work. If an unloading elevator is being used, one or more men can catch the soft ears as they go up.

Plenty of ventilators placed in the cribs are also suggested to help dry the corn.

ARE YOU EDUCATED

A professor of the University of Chicago has evolved a series of test questions for the educated which, he avows, are the best evidences of a real education. If you can answer "yes" to all the questions you are truly educated, the professor says Here are the questions.

Has education given you sympathy with all the good causes and made you espouse them?

Has it made you public spirited?

Has it made you a brother to the weak?

Have you learned how to make friends and keep them?

Do you know what it is to be a friend yourself?

Can you look an honest man or pure woman in the eye?

Do you see anything to love in a little child?

Will a lonely dog follow you in the street?

Can you be high-minded and happy in the meanest drudgeries of life?

Do you think that washing dishes and hoeing corn is just as compatible with high thinking as piano playing or golf?

Are you good for anything yourself?

Can you be happy alone?

Can you look out on the world and see anything but dollars and cents?

Can you look into a mud-puddle by the wayside and see a clear sky?

Can you see anything in the puddle but mud?

DON'TS

Don't attempt to punish all your enemies at once. You can't do a large business with a small capital. Don't say "I told you so." Two to one you never said a word about it. Don't worry about another man's business. A little selfishness is sometimes commendable. Don't imagine that you can correct all the evils in the world. A grain of sand is not prominent in a desert. Don't mourn over fancied grievances. Bide your time and real sorrow will come. Don't throw dust in your teacher's eyes. It will only injure the pupil. Don't worry about the ice crop. Keep cool and you will have enough. Don't borrow a coach to please your wife. Better make her a little sulky. Don't imagine that every thing is weakening. Butter is strong in this market. Don't publish your acts of charity The Lord will keep the amount straight. Don't color meerschaums for a living. It is simply dyeing by inches.—Mark Twain.

Vilna's Napoleonic Veteran.

At Vilna which is temporarily in the possession of Germany, lives Peter Laptieff, one of Europe's "old men," for he was born in the year 1789, says the London Chronicle. When Napoleon invaded Russia, and got as far as Dvinsk, he was in need of a guide But the inhabitants had fled, Laptieff's family hiding in the recesses of a forest But curiosity drew him and he hid in a tree to watch the invaders He was seen, captured and taken before the emperor, who ordered him to act as guide to the vanguard of the army This he did for 36 hours and then escaped He fought against both of his country's present allies against the French at Borodino, and against the English in the Crimea Tired of making history he took to making bricks, but now lives in retirement with his son and grandson

MOTHER'S "NOTIONS"
Good for Young People to Follow.

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy and Postum has been the principal factor

I was induced to give him the Postum because of my own experience with it

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years Have tried all sorts of medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came.

"I used to read the Postum advertisements in our paper At first I gave but little attention to them, but finally something in one of the advertisements made me conclude to try Postum

"I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and used good, rich cream. It was very nice indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better One of them laughed and said, 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet.

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off coffee and taking Postum, and now after three years' use I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

WAR EXPLODES MANY ELECTRICAL DREAMS

Impossible to Fight Enemy With Lighting Like Flashes, Expert Says.

Paris, (by mail.)—Provoking explosions at a distance by the transmission of electric sparks is an impossibility, according to Dr. Edouard Branly who, in 1890, discovered means of closing and reopening an electric current at a distance without the use of a transmitting wire, which is the principle of wireless telegraphy.

"The human species," Dr Branly says, in talking to a representative of the Associated Press, "is paying a sufficiently large tribute to science in this war, it is scarcely worth while to discuss the visionary powers that are attributed to it. It has increased the flow of blood and the enormity of ruins making international conflicts more horrifying but there are things it cannot accomplish, unfortunately.

"Science sends the Lusitania to the bottom of the Atlantic with more than 1,000 human souls, but it is powerless, contrary to some pretentions, to cause the destruction at a distance by electric current of the engine which by the will of man caused a disaster hitherto reserved to the wrath of the elements. Neither can it reach by radiating waves the destructive engines of the air

"The false notion of those who pretend to transmit destructive power through space arises from the fact that wireless telegraphy is accomplished through the production of a minuscle spark at the receiving station That spark being sufficient to produce an effect upon extremely sensitive instruments at great distance, they concluded that at a limited distance, of a mile for instance, a much stronger spark could be produced, as that spark is supposed to go through all sorts of obstacles they inferred that it could also pierce the steel shell of engines of war

"In the first place no available power could produce a spark of sufficient intensity, there isn't the slighest caloric power in the wireless spark at the receiving end In the second place it would be necessary for it to strike with absolute precision a joint or fissure in the plates in order to get into contact with the explosive.

"Different accidents erroneousl, attributed to the wireless current may have put some of these visionaries on this false track It was discussed whether the Voluturno was not fired at sea and if the explosion of the French battleship Iana at Toulon was not provoked by wireless sparks. The Eiffel tower wireless transmitting station produces most formidable sparks, yet not the slightest accident has ever been caused in the vicinity.

"To produce explosions at a distance something different from wireless electric currents must be found. Most of the inventions for this purpose that have come to my notice when thoroughly investigated were found to be connected with concealed clock work and in no case when powder was brought in by disinterested parties were they able to provoke an explosion.

"There are a great many 'chevaliers d'industrie,' or what you might call confidence men, in England, who have not hesitated to make profit out of the tension of the public mind by exploiting pretended inventions of this kind but no scientist worthy of the name makes such pretensions. If there were means of blowing up the Eiffel Tower from Berlin everyone would know it, yet people are frequently swindled by supposed appliances for transmitting energy—even available for industrial enterprises, without a conductor They all want a great deal of money, one asked for the modest sum of 28,000,000 francs One man who made the mistake of consulting me afterward instead of before, paid 200,000 francs for an interest in an invention of this kind. On my advice he had the ground thoroughly examined after a demonstration and hidden wires were discovered The earth does not transmit energy there, is nothing to be done in this line excepting by wire.

"The chaining of lightning to be hurled by some ingenious device into the face of the enemy is another dream that must be forgotten. There is no possibility of the generation and wireless transmission of electric flashes, even from trench to trench, with any destructive power; the wire is needed for this as well as for any other artificial electric transmission, excepting simple wireless telegraphy."

Dr Branly, though in his 70th year, is almost as active as Edison. He continues the regular practice of medicine and between patients' calls pursues his researches into electric radiation with a view to perfecting receiving appliances.

"There is a mysterious something that manifests itself between a wire and a piece of metal in contact that it is important to know more about," he says, "and I think I have found it."

Adversity and Housekeeping.

What is true economy for one family may be an extravagance in another. Not long ago I was talking with a woman over the difference in cost of meat and fish, she claiming that, for her family of two, fish was more expensive than meat. I could not see how this could be in a place where fresh water fish was easily obtained, and really cheap. After some questions I found my friends were not fond of fish, so were in the habit of using only such expensive varieties, brought from a distance, as shad, fresh salmon and bluefish.

We use the local supply of whitefish, perch, bass and so forth, when in season, and other times purchase cod, haddock, even salmon, but select solid fish with little waste and much meat to the pound. We buy enough for two meals, for when reheated and used with potato, it means a definite saving

Dollar Exchange In Chile.

The plan of the Braden and Chile copper companies to establish financial agencies in Valparaiso is expected to help greatly in the work of giving American dollar exchange a strong foundation in Chile. In the last two months, thanks to Leopold Frederick, who is director in the Braden and treasurer of the Chile company, an excellent market has been created in Valparaiso for dollar bills. To an important degree they have supplanted sterling. To keep a firm footing for dollar exchange in Chile, so that after the war there will not be a reversion to sterling, many American houses doing business in that country are making their contracts payable in American dollars. German bank and commercial houses, which are important in Chile, have recently established numerous accounts in the United States and the large banks and trust companies in this country have been receiving for discount considerable amounts of 90-day sight bills drawn in dollars.

District 8, Geary county, Kansas, is boasting of its prize school house, the finest of its kind in the state. It is made of native white limestone, costing $5,000, and has only one school room with a play room in the basement. The average attendance is 18.

ADMIRAL JELLICOE IS ENGLAND'S IDOL

Supreme Commander of British Fleet Has Been Tried and Proved, People Think.

London, (by mail).—Of all the great leaders of the war, Sir John Jellicoe, commanding the British grand fleet, is least known to the world, and his is the portrait which receives the most cheers when it is thrown onto a screen at a London theater. But the British public knows nothing of him except that he is the fighting commander of the "invisible" power of the British navy.

When war was threatening it is related that a meeting of admiralty lords and others who would have the say was held to decide who, in case of hostilities, should command the British fleet. The opinions ran something like this, it is said:

"Jellicoe! He has the brains."

"Jellicoe! He is young. He has the health to endure the strain. He has the nerve."

"Jellicoe! He has been tried in every branch of the service."

"Jellicoe! His fellow officers believe in him."

He Has Made Good.

It was that sort of recommendation that helped When the great war came he was given supreme command and the rest left to him.

"From the time he was a midshipman, Jellicoe has been a marked man in the service," said one of his admirals. "He is one of those men who seems to be born with tireless energy No matter what difficulties arise, he is always smiling Both he and Beatty were in the first attempt to relieve the Peking legations at the time of the Boxer rebellion. Captain Jellicoe was then Admiral Seymour's chief of staff When he was wounded and the little band of seamen were surrounded by Boxers and it looked as if every minute might be their last, he was smiling as cheerily as if he had been on the quarter deck Nothing ever seems to ruffle his equanimity His personal charm would win him his way anywhere, but when you have served with him, then you realize what a master of his profession he is."

Only the commander-in chief's flag which she flies distinguishes the flagship, which is in the center of the fleet, from the rest of the gray fighters in their precise lines at anchor in harbor. Sir John takes his exercise and his holidays pacing the quarter deck. He never leaves the fleet even for a few hours. The commander-in-chief is the one man who must take no risk of being absent if the German fleet should come out.

No Sign of Detail.

Descend a ladder under the shadow of two great 13.5-inch guns and the visitor is in a large cabin extending from side to side of the ship, which in a house would be called a dining room Here when he was in port in time of peace the commander-in-chief would give his official dinners. In time of war the cabin is partly screened off, as there is more room than Sir John and his staff need for meals. Aft of this is what would be called in a house the sitting room. The furnishings are of the simplest Everything inflammable could be removed promptly in case of action The few names in the visitors book on a table were suggestive of the fleet's isolation from intercourse with the rest of the world One name was the king's and another the Prince of Wales, and a few high officials.

The visitor looked about in vain for signs of the immense amount of official detail which would seem necessary for the focal point of a vast campaign Some staff officers and a few records were all. The flagship is kept cleared for action in this as in all other respects. The actual direction of the 3,000 ships and auxiliaries of the British navy is carried on in a space occupied in a New York office by a lawyer and two or three clerks. An orderly went and came with messages from the wireless room, which, aside from the installations, had space enough for the wireless operators to stand and no more.

Officers said that it was difficult to contemplate how such a naval campaign as the British in this war could have ever been conducted without the wireless. Sir John could talk with the admiralty in London or with any ship whether off Heligoland or Iceland He knew what each man was doing Let a German cruiser show her nose in the North Sea and he had the news in a minute or two after she was sighted

"He makes it all seem simple and easy," said one of the admirals. "That is his gift—it is the essential gift for one who has such a great responsibility"

Beatty, who sank the Blucher, is the youngest of Sir John's young admirals, 44 years of age, bovish and quick Sturdee, victor of the Falkland islands' battle, smooth shaven, as smiling as Sir John is quick spoken and rather studious in appearance, he is an expert in naval strategy

Must Work Way Up.

In the British navy promotion is by selection up to the grade of captain. A man with a single flaw in his record as lieutenant must wait on others before he can become lieutenant commander Those with perfect records in each grade are canvassed by boards and those who have shown industry and initiative are chosen to go over the heads of less active men. The aim is to apply the system of civil life where ability rises and mediocrity must be content with the lower rungs of the ladder.

Jellicoe, Sturdee and Beatty entered the navy as boys of 14. None had any particular influence: they made their way by industry. Sir John has served in every branch. He is regarded as possibly the ablest ordnance expert in the navy, which means that he knows the guns which he will fire in action.

Notwithstanding his amiability, all agree that he has only one criterion—success. If an officer fails he is superseded. Most of these young admirals sleep on the bridge even in harbor For the last 10 years the average British naval officer has worked harder than men of any profession in civil life. They have kept up the grinding drill, which continues since the war began

"We can take no risks," one of them said. "Our responsibility to the nation requires that we neglect nothing that devotion to duty will accomplish Most of these crews you see have been at their posts, whether gun pointing or passing ammunition, for five or six years. We want each man to be letter perfect in his part."

In all actions thus far the firing has begun at extreme range—18,000 yards. At that distance a dreadnaught painted the color of the sea is a vague speck. But one fortunate hit may be vital, and either side wants to get that fortunate hit first. The accuracy of fire both at the Falkland Islands and in the battle of the Dogger Bank had been as good as at battle practice.

Seen among his admirals, Sir John Jellicoe seems the head of a family. In frequent consultation, they know one another in the fellowship of their confined existence. If he had anything to say to any one of them or they to him, the definiteness of their remarks and the promptness of his replies were impressive. Decision seemed automatic with him.

He showed the visitors over the flagship himself, calling attention to things which he thought would interest them, as he led the way along the cramped passages behind the armor or pointed the way to enter one of the turrets where the gun crews were going on with their drill, which they went through like so many human machines. Most of them were in the early 30s, mature, experienced and confident.

"All they ask is that the Germans will come out," said an officer. "They could not work any harder than they did before the war. But the war has given them renewed eagerness."

TWO MEMORY JOGGING DEVICES THAT WON'T EVER FAIL YOU

The old method of tieing a string about a finger to recall to mind some task to be done at a certain time has been done away with.

The new way is to transfer a ring from one finger to another On the accustomed finger the ring feels natural, and does not cause annoyance, but on any other finger it slightly irritates. This irritation constantly will aid in recalling the task to be done. Just try it once

Another and more novel way is to carry a colored ribbon in the coat pocket

Suppose, now you are in your office Your wife phones you to be sure and bring home a certain thing. Go to your coat hanging on the office rack, take out the ribbon and tie it tightly around a sleeve

At night when you start to go home your fist will jam itself against the tied sleeve "Oh, yes," you will say to yourself 'there's that cought syrup Molly told me to be sure and bring home tonight," and off you will go at once to make the purchase

A man who is notoriously known to "never forget to perform a mission requested by his wife," won his reputation by use of the above two methods. Simply by transferring his finger ring he has been known never to forget to mail her letters on the day they were given to him.

IOWA GOVERNORSHIP.

Spencer News If Mr. Cosson suggested that the state should look up the limestone quarries, and take steps for the purchase of the same with a view to being prepared for providing cement paved roads, it would prove to us that he has the instincts of a statesmanlike economist, for the material will surely be in demand for Iowa roads before a decade is past, and it is wise to be in a position beforehand to do the paving economically That is certainly ahead of appealing to the conservative prejudice against what will be the dominant idea in a few years. Of course the rank and file must think it out and help to form the procession

Creston Plain Dealer Next year Iowa will again swing a prohibition law into the governing of the state There are those now who would have us believe that since Iowa is to be dry 'there is no longer need of strife on the 'wet' and 'dry' issue; we have the law and whoever is elected takes his oath to enforce all laws" The success of prohibition in Iowa as in other states, depends greatly upon the strict enforcement of the law and it s going to take people a long time to prove to the satisfaction of some of us that it matters not insofar as enforcement of the prohibition measure is concerned whether Eugene Chafin or a half brother of John Barleycorn himself is elected to the governorsh p of Iowa

Fort Dodge Chronicle The Denison candidate for governor has thus far avoided that copious flow of language in which some of his rivals have indulged but what he has said has been interesting and to the point and to the effect that he believes in the law and its enforcement and the policy of making haste slowly seems to measure his sentiments on the highway question It is highly probable that Mr Kuehnle will be taken more seriously as the campaign advances

This Farmer Got Out of a Rut.

"A K Mack of Blair, Okla., found cotton growing a failure as a business. He changed to sweet potatoes On 25 acres of sandy land he grew 2,468 bushels of sweets, which he saved in an improved potato house He regards getting out of his rut as a success."

NATIONAL DEFENSE MATTER CONGRESSIONAL HONESTY

From the Milwaukee Journal

There has been sufficient discussion of the reasons why this nation must enlarge its preparations for defense We have been disgracefully unprepared and in ways that the average man does not dream of It is hard to quicken a democracy's interest in even the needful degree of safety in a time when no war seems to threaten It is no new condition, it has obtained for years We are not so badly off as in 1898, but against the present war footing of any one of five or six nations we have too little to offer It is settled that congress will do something

We know, of course, that we are Americans that, given time, we could raise, train and equip an army equal to the army of any nation, that we could perfect arrangements for subsisting it, that we could again as in 1866 float the most powerful navy in the world But only a fool thinks this could be done overnight, or in six months or a year

Will congress do the thing it will say it is doing? We have now an army, a certain schedule of munitions, equipment, wagons and so on for that exceedingly small army. But we have not the guns, we have not the munitions, nor the tents, nor the wagons, nor the horses that even this pitifully small army is supposed to be equipped with For decades the American public has been deliberately deceived We are told that we have a wonderfully good army of diminutive size. There is no discounting the men, but the other things that "the plan contemplates" are not there. Congress has said they shall be—and has gone about its pork barrel filling without providing the means.

Now this is not patriotism, it smacks of something that is the reverse Of its real meaning we had a little taste in the disgraceful events of 1898.

That is why the question before congress is not what number of ships and men it will authorize, but, "Will you do the thing you say you are doing?" Will there be colliers to coal the vessels? Will there be ammunition for your big guns? Will there be tents for your soldiers? And wagons for their supplies?

This is the heart of our problem. It touches the honesty of our public servants. Their records for defense now smell of pork. Will there be a real change?
